I regret, in discussing this bill, that I shall take views directly opposed to so devoted and zealous friends of the Navy as the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee, and the honorable gentleman from Virginia, also a member of the Naval Committee, [Mr. BOGGS], who have advocated the amended bill as presented by the honorable chairman; but, sir, I find some gratification in advocating the principle contained in the bill offered by the honorable gentleman from Virginia representing the Norfolk district, [Mr. MILLSON], which is essentially a naval district, and he ought to be well posted up on naval matters. I believe, however, that he and myself do understand and represent the voice of the Navy and the country, in advocating the principle of summary courts-martial, instead of giving supreme, absolute, and undivided authority to the captain to punish, which is the difference between the bill of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON]. Difference of opinion in regard to this principle is not confined to the members of the House, for the officers of all grades of the Navy are very much divided in opinion upon this subject. Indeed, I believe if it were referred to Jack, he would settle it by preferring the old system of flogging. There is no doubt that the Navy has lost some of its best men by the law abolishing flogging; for I am told that it is not an unusual occurrence for the old Navy seamen to enter the recruiting rendezvous, and ask the officers if flogging is restored; and upon receiving a negative reply, they refuse to ship or enlist. I am well satisfied that the discipline of our Navy has diminished since the passage of that law, and that there is a want of alacrity, quickness, respect, and prompt obedience of orders that was before known and observed in our Navy, and which constituted the pride of a man-of-war's company, and sustained and compensated the officer for the labor of exercising the crew in working ship, and drilling his division at the battery; for without the observance of military etiquette, and all the internal regulations of a ship, inefficiency and discord prevail; whereas, on the other hand, efficiency and harmony go together.

On a well-ordered, well-disciplined ship, you will find great contentment and pride of ship; every person on board feels that he contributes to it, and whilst the men are proud and satisfied with the officers, the officer in return feels a corresponding feeling for the men, which creates a confidence and belief in their ability to cope successfully with an enemy. Such boasting is the surest evidence of a high state of discipline. But, sir, I am not sure that the old discipline and tone of the service would not, in time, be as high as it ever was. Under the present law, all the power to punish now exists that ever did exist, with the exception of flogging; and I am not sure but that, in a short time, some mode of maintaining discipline may be found more humane, more civilized than flogging, which was, I must admit, a most wholesome and salutary restraint, and did preserve most exact and precise discipline, whilst it was inflicted with discretion and humanity; but when abused by a tyrannical, passionate, or intemperate officer, it destroyed discipline and harmony. Many expedients are now resorted to, and with great success, I am informed; but still the punishments are cruel. But the low moral state of the crews demand it; nor can they be ameliorated or lessened, until the moral character of the men of the Navy is improved; and to do this, we want the entire naval system revised, and an entire new naval code. In this view, every gentleman who has spoken upon this subject agrees; and I have no doubt it is the prevailing sentiment of this House. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs informs this House, that he contends for an entire revision of the code by which the Navy is governed; that he presented a report and bill to the last Congress, for that object, upon which no action could be had; and that he is now again instructed by the committee to report a bill, with the same object; and the honorable gentleman admits that the measure now before the House is only a partial one, designed to meet a present exigency; but he fears, from the little interest manifested by the mass of the members, that it will again be allowed to sleep.

But, sir, I think if the honorable chairman had an entire new code and system to present, it would command prompt and immediate action. I am opposed to partial legislation. I want, also, to see the entire naval system revised; there is a crying necessity for it. I think it would be better to wait until such a system is devised, than to pass this bill in any shape. I do not believe there is such a pressing exigency for this law. I do not see what new power or principle it confers of punishment, that makes its passage so necessary; for, as I said before, all the power to punish ever conferred upon the commander, he now has, with the exception of flogging—and they are a long list of punishment, known under the usages and practices of the sea service. Indeed, I do not see that the bill, as reported by the honorable chairman, confers any new authority upon the commander of a ship, unless it is the single punishment of the loss of three months' pay, provided by the bill before us. Still, in cases of theft or waste of public property, I have known the captain to order the amount charged against the offender, and credited accordingly, that restitution might be made. So that, in truth, there is no new authority to be conferred by this bill, and the records of the Department do not show that the discipline of the Navy has been so seriously interfered with. Certain it is, they do not show any serious acts of insubordination, mutiny, or revolts. No men have been shot down or hung; and, I believe, there have been fewer offenses, and fewer courts-martial. And as to the effect of the discontinuance of flogging in the mercantile marine, the records of our United States district and admiralty courts will show fewer cases of revolt and mutinous conduct tried before those courts since the passage of that law, than for the same period of time before. I can state this as a fact, as regards the southern district of New York, which has jurisdiction over the large commerce of the great commercial emporium, as I am assured by an officer of that court, who gave me as a reason for this, that most of the complaints formerly grew out of cruel flogging by the captain, and the generous impulses of the crew, who would attempt to resist the authority of the captain, by preventing flogging. Entertaining these views, I should much prefer that this bill should not be acted upon, but that we should await the presentation of an entire revision of our naval system. And I will here remark, that I should feel the greater confidence in such a code if it emanated from the Naval Committee, in preference to the manner proposed last Congress, and to be renewed at this, as we are informed by the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee, viz: "That it shall be the duty of the President to cause to be prepared a suitable code of laws for the Navy, and submit the same to Congress, as soon as practicable, for such further action as may be required." And the honorable gentleman made the following remarks a few days since:

"The Naval Committee did not feel itself authorized—and, I think I may say, did not feel itself capable—of doing justice to a subject of this kind. It is a great subject—one of great interest—one requiring extensive knowledge, as well as experience, on the part of those who should undertake to prescribe a code of laws for the government of the Navy. How could any of us, who have never crossed the ocean, and who know nothing of the practical workings of these laws on board a ship, undertake to prepare a code of laws for the government of the Navy? Now, it is proper, and I conceive it is the only proper mode, to call upon the President to present the views of the Navy Department, and of such officers as may be required, to prepare a code, in order to alter and amend, if it may be necessary, and perfect into the shape of a law, a code which shall be effectual for the government of the Navy."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The gentleman from New Jersey will allow me to suggest that this is a very imperfect report of my speech. My idea was, that these officers of the Navy might be called upon to suggest the principle upon which the code should be prepared, and upon being presented to Congress, it should then be perfected by committees, and by the action of Congress itself. Mr. PRICE. I object to that course.

Now, I beg leave to entirely dissent from this mode of obtaining a code of laws for the government of the Navy. Pass such a bill, and what is the effect? The President, under the requirement of the law, refers it to the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy, who knows no more about the practical workings of these laws on board a ship than the gentlemen composing the Naval Committees of Congress, naturally refers the subject to the officers immediately around him, who are the old captains of the Navy, and they digest a code which in time will be presented to Congress. This mode of obtaining a naval code I object to; for it is partial, and will only represent one grade in the naval service, who are men accustomed to the old usages, and the young, ambitious, and progressive officer has no voice in framing a code governing a service under which he is ambitious, and hopes some day to gain renown. The talent of the sea officers of the Navy to-day is in the junior grades; and when I say this, I do not mean to disparage the old naval veterans; I only mean to say, they are not the men to prepare a code for naval government. Again, sir, under such a law the staff officers of your Navy would not be consulted—officers of the highest intelligence and cultivation would not be represented, and the result would be great dissatisfaction on the part of the whole Navy, causing great delay in the legislation, and in the end a postponement or rejection. No, sir, the Navy and the country expect Congress, through their committees, to frame the laws which are to govern the Navy.

I beg leave to differ, most respectfully, from the committee as to any want of authority or capability, on their part, to do justice to so great and interesting a subject. They have the power, or if they consider they have not, this House will grant it to them, as a matter of special reference, of obtaining all the required knowledge and information requisite to prepare such a code. And no laws emanating from any other source will be satisfactory or acceptable. Let the different grades be heard: the old and the young. It is a great labor, but one I trust the Naval Committee will not shrink from. It is the only way of reconciling all the conflicting opinions existing among the different grades of officers, who are extremely tenacious as to the action of officers or influence of any grade over another in the framing of laws or regulations—particularly should the attention of the Naval Committee be drawn to the present mode of promoting the officers, and the present system of enlisting the men; and also to assimilated rank and naval uniform, now regulated by the Navy Department, which are sources of great annoyance and bad feeling between the sea officer and the staff officer of the Navy, and ought, in my opinion, to be regulated by law. A late order of the Department, entirely changing the naval uniform, is now a source of great complaint and dissatisfaction. The uniform is subject to constant change, as it is changed almost as often as the head of the Navy Department, which works a very great evil, and gives great discontent, and great expense to the officers, and should be fixed permanently by law. I am informed that a board of sea officers drew up the regulations for this change, and the staff officers complain that they were not represented, and that they are depreciated, in a military consideration, by the new regulations.

But now, sir, I will proceed to examine this bill now under consideration, in the view that it will pass in some shape; and first, as neither bill nor amendments meet my entire approbation, I will give notice of the amendments I propose to offer to the bill of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, as I infinitely prefer it to the bill that came from the Senate, or the amendment offered by the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee, who has so far changed his views, since the bill was first introduced by him, of giving to the commander of a ship the discretion to punish without control, as to reduce the punishments so conferred, from thirty days' confinement to ten days' confinement. This is a great falling off; and if it is done in the spirit of compromise, I regret I cannot meet the gentleman and support his amended bill. But I believe authority to punish more severely than is contemplated by that amendment should exist somewhere, on board ships cruising alone and absent a long time from the squadron, to preserve proper discipline. This authority I would give to the summary court, as provided by the bill of the honorable gentleman from Virginia. The amended bill, therefore, is more objectionable than the Senate bill, as it would fail entirely of its object. First, then, I propose to repeal all the articles of the act of 1800, entitled "An act for the better government of the Navy," which empowers a captain of a ship to inflict, of his own authority, punishment. I do this, as some doubt exists as to the discretion and authority which the commander of a ship has of inflicting those cruel tortures alluded to by the honorable gentleman of the Naval Committee from Virginia. Under this act both bills are alike objectionable, as neither repeal those barbarous punishments that have been practiced under that law—and there can be no objection to repealing a law which might by possibility be construed to confer the authority to inflict such monstrous punishments. That law repealed, I will propose a further amendment, defining the authority of the captain, which shall be restricted to confining in irons, or otherwise, for the space of ten days, the imposition of extra duty; and also, if the offense is of a very serious character, and deserving a greater punishment than the summary court-martial is authorized to inflict, to detain the man in confinement until he is tried by a general court-martial. For offenses meriting punishment beyond the authority of the captain, summary courts-martial may be ordered. Against this system of courts-martial on board ship, the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee, and his colleague on that committee, have raised several objections, which I will now proceed to answer. They have argued that bringing up a sailor on board ship before a court, and confronting him with his judges, and permitting him to argue with them and dispute with them, would have a bad tendency. Now, I ask, sir, has such been the consequence of general courts-martial, which have been so long known and acquiesced in? And would not such reasoning apply as well to a general court as to a summary court?

The honorable chairman of the Naval Committee says this court-martial, on board of a ship, will be but a mockery. This is a broad declaration, and one that I meet by just as broad a dissent and denial. I believe that those courts would have a most beneficial and conservative influence on board ship. The honorable gentleman wants to leave the responsibility undivided with the captain, and says that the members of the court are not responsible for its decision, except by impeachment. The bill provides that the court shall consist of three commissioned officers; a record of their proceedings is to be kept, and the proceedings to be conducted under such forms and rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy. Now, I ask, is not each member of a court quite as responsible, and as likely to administer justice, as a captain? They are officers holding the same commission as a captain, and in every degree as responsible; influenced by the same high honor and consideration, and equally desirous of sustaining good discipline, and their decision is also subject to the approval of the captain. I am opposed, sir, and make the most positive and direct issue with the gentleman, upon the policy of giving the sole power into the hands of the captain, to punish on board ship. I prefer to divide the authority. I am willing to give the captain power to a certain extent. It is right that he should have power to meet, promptly, any insubordination or breach of discipline; but when you come to severe punishments, it is better that that authority should be divided. It is only in consonance with the spirit of our institutions. As to the impracticability of organizing courts upon some of the small vessels, urged by the honorable gentleman, on the ground that the officers are not on board, required to form it, such a case could scarcely arise; and if it should, the captain can carry the offender to the squadron, as is now the custom. This is no difficulty in the working of the system.

Again, the gentleman has assumed that summary courts-martial are unmilitary, and therefore inapplicable to the Navy, as a military establishment. I contend, on the contrary, that courts-martial are essentially military. The Army, for instance, have a garrison court, which assimilates with the summary court proposed by this bill; and during the Mexican war, in the city of Mexico, General Scott established military commissions, which was a court composed of three officers, for the trial of military offenses, which was found to work well; and there never was stricter military discipline maintained in the Army or the Navy than was maintained in the city of Mexico during its occupation by our troops. Now, I ask the honorable chairman whether he thinks the three officers, as a board, were as capable of doing justice as one of the generals of division? He may prefer to yield to General Scott, the hero of so many battles, to myself. Military and naval discipline is necessary. No one feels this more sensibly than I do. No one is more tenacious of the honor and glory of our military and naval character. The powers of commanders must be limited to a certain degree of authority, and beyond that let it be shared by officers equally capable and responsible. Power often makes men tyrants; there is always danger of abuse when unlimited, and it is this that we want remedied. Summary courts were proposed by the naval officers, and they presented a bill with that provision; but the honorable gentleman says it was not from choice. This is strange, that a board of officers should propose a system that has been characterized by the honorable chairman of the committee as a mockery, and impracticable; for he contends, in another part of his speech, that they are the source from which the Navy ought to draw a code of laws for its government; he ought not to invalidate his own witnesses.

In regard to the last section of the bill from the Senate, which provides for an asylum and half-pay for life, this section so greatly extends any pension law now existing, that I shall oppose it. To furnish an asylum and half-pay at the same time, is so far beyond what has ever been done, that whilst I have as lively an interest in the welfare of the sailor, and am as anxious to see him well and comfortably provided for as any person can be, still I think it best not to change the present regulations of the asylum. The rewards provided for good conduct is a most admirable feature, and are the same in both bills, and cannot fail to meet the sense of the House, the Navy, and the country. It will prove a valuable stimulus to good conduct, and a strong inducement for men to enlist. A man that has been one cruise, in the Navy, is worth much more than one that has not. It is very important to retain men in the naval service, and the country can well afford to give a bounty as an inducement for men to return and remain in the Navy. In the numerous objections which I have urged against the bill reported by the honorable Chairman of the Naval Committee, I hope nothing I have said can be tortured into a reflection upon the action of that committee; for I mean to accord to the committee, and every member of that committee, full credit for the industry and labor that they have bestowed upon naval subjects, and for the zeal and anxiety they have manifested to have them acted on. In conclusion, I hope that whatever judgment the House may come to on this subject, that they will give the further instructions for an entire new naval code, to be prepared and presented to this House, a system that will elevate the moral standard of American seamen, and teach them to know that degradation is not in the punishment, but in the offense or crime which renders it necessary.

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that has occupied the attention of the House during the morning hour for a long time, and being desirous of reaching reports from committees, I call for the previous question.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. Is a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CABLE. I then submit that motion.

Mr. MILLSON. I ask my friend from Indiana to withdraw his call, in order that I may submit a few remarks upon this bill, made necessary by what fell from my colleague [Mr. BOCOCK] a few days ago. In some respects what I wish to say may almost be called personal explanation.

Mr. FITCH. I would withdraw my motion to permit the explanation by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] as I understand it is somewhat of a personal character, but I am appealed to by others to withdraw it for them; and if I yield to one, I must to all. I must, therefore, decline altogether to withdraw it.

Mr. MILLSON. If my colleague were here there would be less necessity for my speaking, for I am sure he would himself admit that some of his statements were too broad, and did me injustice, though, of course, without any intention to do so; but he is not here, and I desire to make an explanation myself. I do not wish to appear upon the records of the proceedings of this House as entertaining, without explanation and without denial, the views attributed to me. My statement will not occupy more than a few minutes. If the gentleman will withdraw his call for the previous question, I will renew it.

Mr. FITCH. If the gentleman will promise to renew the call, I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. In the mean time I must say to the gentleman that he cannot deprive the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] of the right to the floor to move, as he has done, that the House go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CABLE. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MILLSON. I am perfectly willing to let the matter go over until to-morrow, I still retaining possession of the floor.

Mr. CABLE renewed the motion to go into committee; which was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the first business before the committee was upon the special order, being House bill No. 7, for the promotion of agriculture, commerce, manufactures, &c., and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEWTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield me the floor for a moment?

Mr. NEWTON. I will for a few moments.

Mr. HALL. By the courtesy of the gentleman from Ohio, I desire only to say, that I have committed to paper some remarks I had intended to deliver to the House had I been successful in obtaining the floor for the purpose. I ask, instead of occupying the time of the committee, to have the privilege of publishing my remarks.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

[Mr. Hall's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. NEWTON then addressed to Committee for an hour. He said that from 1796 to the present time the subject of an agricultural bureau has been recommended to Congress by the Executive branch of the Government. Nothing, however, has effectually been done. While other interests have been sedulously guarded and liberally patronized, agriculture, the foundation on which they rest and grow, has been struggling alone, without being acknowledged in the great relationship. We have increased in population—from less than four millions of people we have grown to nearly twenty-five millions. Our territory now stretches from ocean to ocean and from a tropical sun to near the polar regions, embracing various climates, soil, and people from all nations, with intelligence generally disseminated. More than eighteen millions of our citizens are engaged in the cultivation of the soil. It is this which gives us national prominence over every other people. In the course of forty years our country will contain more absolute freeholders than all the rest of the world beside. Improvement in agriculture is the strongest bond of union; but its neglect is too palpable. The great object of such a bureau as that which is proposed, is to elevate the social condition of agriculturists. At present the business appertaining to this class is confined to a small apartment of the Patent Office; but it has no more connection with the Patent Office than it has with the War or the Navy Department. The bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture, organizing an agricultural bureau, proposes an outlay of $10,350; an inconsiderable sum compared with the great and beneficent objects sought to be accomplished. He earnestly contended that such a bureau is demanded by justice as well as the vast interests involved. [Mr. N.'s Speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. RIDDLE, after a few preliminary remarks, said that the sooner we dispose of the unsettled and uncultivated territory, the better it will be for the public treasury and the people of the United States. The sooner we donate the public lands to the States for purposes of education, internal improvement, or whatever else the constituted authorities may direct, the better it will be for the people of the entire country. He then referred to the question of party politics; spoke in the highest terms of the Democratic Presidential candidates—Cass, Douglas, Buchanan, and Butler, and others—and condemned the arraying of them the one against another by their respective friends on this floor. Each and all of them are worthy of the support of the Democracy, and entitled to the confidence of freemen. The Democracy, as represented in the Baltimore Convention, will settle all the differences which now exist. He paid his respects to the Whigs, whose policy he condemned; and he claimed the passage of the Compromise measures as the triumph of the Democracy. [Mr. R.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. HOWARD obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, who moved that the committee rise.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I would state, on behalf of the friends of this proposition, that it is their desire to bring this debate to a close. I know there are many gentlemen who desire to speak, but we are anxious that this debate shall be brought to a close at an early day. I suggest that we continue the debate one hour longer.

Mr. ALLISON. I appeal to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] to yield the floor to me. I desire to leave this place to-morrow, and I have been anxious for the last month to obtain the floor, and speak upon this question. If the gentleman from Texas would grant, and the House would concur in it, I should like very much to have about three quarters of an hour to say what I wish upon this subject.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I would suggest that the gentleman over the way [Mr. ALLISON] may be allowed to speak this evening, and that, by common consent, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] be allowed to retain his place in the morning.

Mr. HOWARD. I have no objection.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I withdraw my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. OUTLAW. I should like it to be generally understood, that no business was to be taken up in the House, after the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLISON] shall conclude his remarks.

[Cries of "Certainly not!" "Certainly not!"]

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to understand, if these gentlemen who make this compromise between themselves, cut off other gentlemen who have been waiting to speak here for some three or four weeks?

Mr. ALLISON. It facilitates them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to understand upon what principle it is made.

Mr. SWEETSER. I rise to a question of order. I do not wish to extend to one gentleman a privilege which is not extended to all; and I therefore object to the gentleman from Texas yielding the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked if there was objection, and hearing none, assigned the floor to the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, who now has the floor. The objection comes too late.

Mr. ALLISON then addressed the Committee. He contended that the lands belong to all the States, and constitute a common fund, out of which all should receive an equitable portion. Eighty-four millions of acres have been given to the new States. He did not say that he complained of this, but he only asked that equal justice be rendered to the old States. He thought that he might at last ask for an approximation to justice for the old States. He preferred the scheme of the greatest living statesman, (Mr. Clay,) with regard to the disposition of the public lands. As to the bill under consideration, like the cure-alls and patent medicines placarded, he feared it claimed too much. If the benefits which its title promises could be secured, the House should not hesitate to give this bill their favorable consideration, and speedily pass it. [Mr. A.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. GROW moved that the committee rise.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to. The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman [Mr. HILBARD] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting every man who is at the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, for the period herein specified, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given. It is a bill to provide against the collision of steamers and sailing vessels in the night.

Mr. FOWLER. I object. There was an understanding that there should be no business transacted after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLISON] had concluded. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the House adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BOWNE: The memorial of E. Carrington Bowers, in behalf of his mother, sole heir of Ebenezer Sage, deceased.

By Mr. EASTMAN: The petition of 460 citizens of Wisconsin, for grant of lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Chicago, in Illinois, to Janesville, in Wisconsin; and branching at Janesville, to construct one branch by way of Lake Winnebago to Lake Superior, and another branch by way of Madison to Falls St. Croix; and that Allen's Grove, in Walworth county, may be named as a point on said line between Chicago and Janesville.

By Mr. CHASTAIN: Additional testimony on the claim of Robert Kirkham, of Cass county, Georgia.

By Mr. MCNAIR: The petition of sundry citizens of Montgomery county, in the State of Pennsylvania, in favor of a modification of the bounty land act.

By Mr. ROBBINS: A memorial signed by Michael W. Ash and 46 other citizens of Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to modify the act of September 28, 1850, so as to place those soldiers who served in the war of 1812, the Indian wars, and other wars of the Republic, on a footing with the recruits enlisted to go to Mexico; and thereby give to each soldier, for his services, one hundred and sixty acres of land. They say that Congress should be just, before undertaking to be generous, and not give away the land to new settlers in the country, before providing for those, or their representatives, that periled their lives to give value to the public lands.

By Mr. IVES: The petition of Elisha Camp, for aid in completing a railroad from Sackett's Harbor to Ellisburg, in Jefferson county, New York.

By Mr. KING, of Rhode Island: The petition of Asa Gray and others, of Tiverton, Rhode Island, for a buoy to be placed on a sunken rock in Nanaguet channel.

By Mr. PARKER, of Indiana: The petition of Benjamin McCarty, assistant marshal of Lake county, Indiana, praying additional compensation for taking the census.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of Hugh S. Steele, Wm. C. Kelly, James A. Sawyer, Francis J. McCaffrey, James Montgomery, and other practical printers of the city of Philadelphia, petitioning Congress to establish, by law, a national printing office.

Also, the memorial of Charles W. Hawkins and others, citizens of New York, praying for the extension of Uri Emmons's patent for a planing machine.

By Mr. HART: The memorial of Charles L. Barrett and others, citizens of New York, praying for the extension of the patent of Uri Emmons for a planing machine.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the act of 30th June, 1834, copies of such accounts as have been rendered by persons intrusted with the disbursement or application of moneys, goods, or effects, for the benefit of the Indians, for the two fiscal years ending 30th June, 1850, and the 30th June, 1851; which was read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the disbursement of the appropriations made for locating life-boats, &c., on the coast of the United States; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the Senate for information relative to the use of the marine hospitals of the United States for other purposes than the relief of sick and disabled seamen; which was read and ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. ADAMS presented a memorial of the assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in the northern district of Mississippi, praying additional compensation; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. MORTON presented a petition of mechanics, planters, merchants, and others, citizens of Florida, praying that a ship-of-war may be built at the Pensacola navy-yard, and that measures be taken to prepare that navy-yard for the construction, equipment, and repair of all classes of vessels-of-war; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of members of the Legislature of Massachusetts, remonstrating against an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. CASS presented a petition of citizens of Ottawa county, Michigan, praying the establishment of a mail route from Grandville to Holland; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented a petition of citizens of Memphis, Tennessee, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steamers; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD presented additional evidence in favor of the claim of William Meredith; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

COLLINS'S LINE OF STEAMERS.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have a resolution of the Board of Commissioners of the incorporated district of Northern Liberties, of the county of Philadelphia, on a very important subject. It reads as follows:

"Resolved, (as the sense of this Board,) That the appropriation, by Congress, of the sums of money prayed for to endow the Collins steamers of New York, and similar projects, to pamper the overgrowth of that city, with her dictation to the rest of the country, could be better spent in aiding to build the Sunbury and Erie railroad, connecting the Lakes with the Atlantic—a route which will secure an early spring and late fall transportation; and that our Representatives be requested to urge such aid being extended."

The PRESIDENT. Is the resolution addressed to the Senate?

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is addressed to their Representatives, and I am requested to present it to the Senate. It raises the question whether it is proper for Congress to be making such large appropriations for the benefit of the external foreign commerce, to the prejudice of the internal commerce of the country. I move that the resolution lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive it, although it is not a paper which properly comes before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I think there was a doctrine laid down upon that subject, at the last session, that the proceedings of meetings which were not addressed to Congress, nor to the Senate, should not be received.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair stated to the honorable Senator that it was not a paper proper to be presented to the Senate, inasmuch as it was not addressed to the Senate, but simply a request to Representatives in Congress to present it. However, if there is no objection, it will simply be received and laid on the table.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The matter to which it relates is before the Senate.

The resolution was laid on the table.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the memorial of the children and heirs-at-law of Nathaniel Leavitt, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that leave be granted to withdraw the petition; which was agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan in relation to claims to lands of Joseph Sansfacion and others, reported a bill authorizing a certain class of private land claimants to file their claims with the register and receiver at Detroit, Michigan, for investigation; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of James G. Bell, praying to be permitted to enter certain school lands in Louisiana; the petition of Charles P. Colston, praying the location of certain bounty land warrants; the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Marion county, Illinois, in favor of the enactment of a law granting the right of preemption to actual settlers along the line of the Illinois Central Railroad; and the petition of John L. Sullivan, praying that one half of the gold produced by working the mines on the public lands in California be set aside for certain purposes, submitted adverse reports on the first three; which were ordered to be printed, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the last-mentioned petition; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred two memorials of citizens of Philadelphia, praying the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of the River St. Mary, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana in favor of a donation of land for the use and benefit of the Pine Grove Academy, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the Pine Grove Academy; which was read and passed to the second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of George Morris, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution authorizing the closing of the accounts of certain officers of the Army; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GEYER, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to bring in a bill to provide for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river and the navigable waters leading into the same; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRADBURY, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the proprietors of the Washington Cemetery; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CIVIL OFFICERS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. FELCH submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to the Senate the number of civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico, while the same was under military government; by what authority they were appointed; their names, and the amount of salary allowed to each; how long they remained in office; what amount was paid to, and what is still due to each of them; and why the same is not paid to them out of the balance in the Treasury, belonging to the Mexican military contribution fund.

BILLS PASSED.

The following joint resolution and bill were severally read a third time, and passed:

Joint resolution for supplying arms to the "Washington Yagers," and the "Washington Boone Riflemen," in the District of Columbia; and

An act confirming the claim of the heirs of Joseph Thompson, deceased, to a tract of land in Missouri.

NON-INTERVENTION.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to take up the joint resolutions offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE,] in relation to non-intervention, for the purpose of moving to postpone them till next Wednesday. To-day was selected for taking them up, by the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has the floor upon that subject; but he has told me that he will give way, to allow us to go on with the deficiency bill.

Mr. COOPER. At the request of the Senator from Virginia, who is very anxious that the deficiency bill should be passed, I yield the floor, and will postpone my remarks upon the resolutions until such time as the Senate may suggest. I am ready to go on to-day; but I know that the chairman of the Committee on Finance is anxious that the deficiency bill should be disposed of, and I therefore waive any claim which I have to the floor.

The motion to take up the joint resolutions was agreed to; and then, on motion of Mr. HUNTER, the further consideration of them was postponed until Wednesday, the 28th instant.

THE CUMBERLAND DAM.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As fifteen minutes remain of the morning hour, I hope the Senate will oblige me by devoting that time to the consideration of the Cumberland dam bill; and I promise that I will waste no time by debating it. It has been under consideration here for years, and I feel pretty sure that we can dispose of it in fifteen minutes.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will not oppose the motion which I now make to take up the deficiency bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will come up at the regular hour. There are yet fifteen minutes remaining of the morning hour, and I hope they will not be occupied with the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. HUNTER. If I thought the bill proposed to be taken up by the Senator from Kentucky could be disposed of in fifteen minutes, I would make no objection, and would not persist in my motion. But I fear it will lead to lengthened debate, and interfere with the deficiency bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Virginia will not persist in his motion, I will agree that if this bill is not passed in that time, I will move its postponement.

Mr. HUNTER. Very well; then I withdraw my motion.

The question was then taken on the motion to take up for consideration the "bill to provide for the repair and improvement of the dam at the head of Cumberland Island in the Ohio river," and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The bill provides that the sum of $50,000 be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the repair and improvement of the Cumberland dam in the Ohio river.

Mr. HAMLIN. I believe that bill has been referred to no committee. I know that the Senator from Kentucky will inform us that the Senate and the country are so well apprised of the character of the bill, from their long acquaintance with it, that it requires no reference to a committee; but if we are now to depart from the rule, I would like to know why, when appropriations for specific objects, with respect to which the Senate is as well advised as in this case, they should not also be put on their passage without reference to a committee? It is a departure from the rule to take this measure from among those which are presented to Congress for its action; and is such a departure from the course that the Senate has pursued in other cases, that would justify the Senate in refusing to act upon it at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will answer simply that the bill is word for word the same as a bill which passed through the last Congress, and then went through all the regular forms of reference to a committee. I think any further reference useless and unnecessary; but if the bill is liable to objection on that ground, I hope that the Senator will himself move the reference to the proper committee.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope the bill will not be referred to the Committee on Commerce, or any other committee, but that it may be passed now. The bill has once passed the Senate, upon the yeas and nays, by a majority of three or four to one; and on that occasion the Senator from Mississippi, one of the most strenuous opponents of the system of internal improvements, said that this was an isolated case, that the Government put the obstruction in the river, and ought to remove it, as the whole of the commerce of that country was suffering from the obstruction. I hope the Senate will act upon it now.

Mr. ATCHISON. The Senator from Iowa is right. Some few years since, an appropriation to a large amount was made for the purpose of constructing this dam. The avowed object was to deepen the channel of the Ohio river, so that boats could ascend and descend with facility. But there was a covert object, as I have heard. The deepening of the channel was not the real object; it was to throw the channel of the Ohio upon the Kentucky side of the river, where the town of Smithland is situated, at the mouth of the Cumberland river, for the purpose of building up that town, more than for the purpose of facilitating the navigation of the Ohio river. But it is a matter of indifference, whether that was the real object or not. The obstruction was placed in the river by this Government at a great expense.

I desire, however, to have the bill corrected, so that the truth may appear upon its face. I desire that it may not be styled a bill to repair the dam, but a bill to remove it—to remove the obstruction in the Ohio river—for this is the only improvement that can be made. I move to strike out the word "repair."

Mr. HALE. The title of the bill is not under consideration.

Mr. ATCHISON. That word occurs in the body of the bill, as well as in the title. It provides that the sum of $50,000 shall be placed in the hands of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of "repairing" the dam. That is the substance of it now; but I wish the money to be appropriated for the purpose of removing the dam, and therefore I move to strike out the word "repair" and insert the word "remove."

The PRESIDENT. If the Senator will look at the bill, he will perceive that it will be necessary to strike out other words. The appropriation is for the "repair and improvement" of the dam.

Mr. ATCHISON. Then I move to strike out the words "repair and improvement," and insert the word "removal."

Mr. HUNTER. It is obvious that this bill will lead to much debate, and hence I ask the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well, I consent, sir.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope not, sir. I trust we will get a vote on the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I cannot assent to the amendment offered by my friend from Missouri, and I shall be able to show reasons why the amendment should not prevail.

Mr. HUNTER. Then, I hope the bill will be laid aside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will make a statement in one minute, and then leave the matter. The object was as the gentleman supposed—to improve the mouth of the Cumberland river, below the island. There is a bar below the island, and by concentrating the waters of the Ohio river at the mouth of the Cumberland river above the head of the island, you throw a volume of water over the bar at the head of the island, which makes the navigation good up to the head of the island. If, however, you do not concentrate the water at the bar, and allow the Cumberland river to spread, it will operate in such a way as to destroy the navigation up to Nashville. That is one objection.

The other objection is, that the best channel for navigation has always been on the Kentucky chute, and it is so now. I have myself been over it in low water in a steamboat, and this filling up the dam will make it altogether better. These are the reasons why the gap in the dam ought to be filled up, instead of taking out the whole dam.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator from Kentucky have the kindness to inform me whether any estimate has been made by the topographical department in relation to the improvement, for which he now asks an appropriation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know that any estimate has been made of the expense of taking away the whole dam; I can, however, inform the Senator, from personal observation, that it is more than a mile in length; and if you take away the whole of the rocks that you placed there, the expense will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Nor has there been any estimate made, that I know of, as to how much it will cost to fill the breach in the dam; but I think fifty thousand dollars will be sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that the bill be now referred to the Committee on Commerce; for it is obvious that it will be impossible to obtain a vote to-day.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was accordingly so referred.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill of the House of Representatives to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852. The question pending was upon an amendment of the Committee on Finance to add to the clause, "for continuing the collection and for publishing the statistics and other information authorized by the act of 3d March, 1847, and subsequent acts, $17,000," this proviso:

Provided, That the work shall be completed in five volumes, and that at least one volume shall be published in each year until the whole series of five volumes shall be published.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee was to substitute "Indiana," for "Indians," in the clause—

For expenses of removal and subsistence of Pottawatomies of Indians, $22,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee was stated to be to strike out—

For expenses of continuing negotiations with the Indian tribes of Oregon, lying west of the Cascade mountains, $12,000.

Mr. HUNTER. This item was put in by the House of Representatives according to estimate. The Delegate from Oregon suggested that perhaps there was something in it which required examination, and that it would be better for the present, to strike it out. He has since been satisfied that the item is a proper one, and that the objection raised to it was groundless. I do not therefore press the amendment to strike out.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the committee was after the following item in the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the Legislative Assembly of Minnesota: "For payment to Messrs. Babcock, Wilkinson, and Holcombe, for revising the laws, $500 each—$1,500;" to add:

Provided, That hereafter no expense incurred by a Territorial Legislature shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, unless previously sanctioned by law.

Mr. HUNTER. This is an item for some expenses incurred by the Territorial Legislature of Minnesota, for the revision of their laws, without any appropriation from Congress, or any authority by law. The Committee on Finance determined to grant it with the proviso which they have offered as an amendment, for the purpose of putting an end to such practices, which are deemed to be irregular.

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment of the committee was stated to be to insert this clause:

For contingent expenses of the Senate, $137,755: Provided, That, at the commencement of each session, the Secretary of the Senate shall report, through the President, to the Senate, the occupation of each person employed or who has been employed during the previous year in the service of the Senate, the compensation he receives, (distinguishing the regular from the extraordinary,) and also stating what he may receive under contracts to perform services or furnish anything to the Senate; the said statement to be accompanied by a reference to the law or resolution under which such person is employed; and provided further, That no officer or other person in the employment of the Senate shall hereafter become a contractor to furnish anything, or perform services for the Senate other than those imposed on him in consideration of the salary which he receives; nor shall a draughtsman be employed for the purposes of the Committee on Public Lands after the expiration of his present session.

Mr. HUNTER. I am informed by the Senator from Iowa, that he has this subject under consideration, that it has been specially referred to his committee by order of the Senate, and that he intends to report some provision in relation to this matter very nearly similar with this, and that he thinks it better that we should act on this matter, not by law, but by resolution. I have determined not to press this amendment, hoping that he will report his resolution.

Mr. BADGER. I did not exactly understand the purport of the remarks of the honorable Senator from Virginia. Do I understand him that he wants the whole amendment voted down, or only the proviso?

Mr. HUNTER. Only the proviso.

Mr. BADGER. Then I move to amend the amendment by striking out the proviso, so as to leave nothing but the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Senate.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Senator from Virginia has correctly stated the facts. On the motion of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MANGUM,] the committee to audit and control the contingent expenses of the Senate, of which I am a member, has been instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing these expenses. The draughtsman for the Committee on Public Lands is referred to in this amendment by name, and if the bill should become a law, with the amendment as it now stands, the Senate would be estopped from the employment of any such officer. I was opposed to the passage of the resolution offered by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] for the employment of the draughtsman. I thought, at the time, that such an officer was unnecessary. I am now satisfied that the Senator from Illinois was right—that he understood the business of the Committee on Public Lands much better than I did. I know that the gentleman who holds the position has been employed with very great benefit to the public service. He has been of very great service to the committee. I suppose his employment will be temporary. I was opposed originally to having such an officer, but I am now in favor of it. I should object, however, to his continuance as a permanent officer. We can dismiss him by resolution at any time. He is now engaged most industriously in the service of the public, and the committee will bear evidence to his efficiency.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is a single reason which has not been stated either by the Senator from Virginia or the Senator from Iowa, which, I think, will settle this matter immediately with the Senate. The proviso which the Senator from North Carolina moves to strike out, proposes to put our contingent fund under the provisions of law, and leave the contingent fund of the House entirely under the control of the House. I think we should be in a position where we could use our own contingent fund, or, if there is any restriction, the same restriction should apply to the House of Representatives.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay for the copies of the report of Dr. David Dale Owen, United States geologist, on the geology of Iowa and Wisconsin, and Minnesota Territory, heretofore ordered to be executed for the use of the Senate, under the special direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $33,750.

Mr. HUNTER. Since this bill was printed we have received a reformed estimate from the Land Office, reducing the amount to $31,218 75. I move to amend the amendment, by substituting that amount for $33,750.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. HALE. I should like to hear some explanation of this appropriation for the payment of thirty odd thousand dollars for printing geological reports for individual States. There are other States that have made geological reports at their own expense, which would be glad to have them published at the expense of the General Government.

Mr. HUNTER. This was originally part of the estimate for the contingent fund of the Senate. In pursuance of a resolution passed by the Senate, at this session, a certain number of volumes of these reports were ordered to be printed. We have had two estimates from the Land Office as to their cost—the last cheaper than the first. According to the last estimate, they will cost the sum mentioned in this amendment. I do not know when the order of the Senate was passed for the printing of these books. I was not aware of it until I saw the estimate in the contingent fund; but it struck me that the item ought to be in the appropriation bill, and not in the contingent fund; and, accordingly, there is a corresponding amendment which we wish to offer, to provide for the copies ordered by the House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. I wish that the Senator from Iowa would favor the Senate with some of those remarks which he made in the early part of the session, against this book-making business. I wish he would expose the policy of the Government and of Congress, in these wasteful expenditures for the printing and publishing of books. It seems to me, that instead of appropriating these $30,000, the better plan would be to rescind the order for the publication of the books. But I have nothing to say as to that. I hope the honorable Senator will be so kind as to repeat now what he has said in opposition to this system before. Perhaps other Senators do not remember so well as I do, what he has been accustomed to say against this system. I remember his remarks perfectly; and if he will favor the Senate with the same remarks now, I have no doubt that we shall strike out the appropriation.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senator from Iowa will do no such thing, because I should be sorry to hear him make a speech which would be entirely out of order. The question is not now on the propriety of printing the books; but the Senate having ordered them to be printed, the question is, whether we will pay for them. It is a matter of no importance, therefore, to know what were the reasons which induced us to make the order.

Mr. HALE. We can rescind the order.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I have so very accommodating a disposition that, notwithstanding the advice of my worthy and excellent friend from North Carolina—whose counsel I always receive with the greatest deference, and to whom, for his legal and other advice when we were members of the committee to audit and control the contingent expenses of the Senate, I acknowledge myself greatly indebted—yet, notwithstanding his admonition to the contrary, I feel that I am bound to respond to the call of the Senator from New Hampshire. I will then reiterate for his information that I am now just as much opposed to the seven, or eight, or ten hundred dollars' worth of plunder, in the shape of books, that are voted to the members of each House of Congress as I was at the beginning of the session, and as I am quite sure I shall be at the end of the session, and at all times and sessions. As the Senator has alluded specially to me in connection with this book matter, I will make him a proposition. He and I have each enjoyed a share of this plunder. I propose, then, that, for the benefit of the country, we mutually disgorge. If he wishes to make an exhibition of his patriotism and economy in this matter, let him just turn over the books he has got to the Librarian, and I will pledge myself to join him, and turn over mine too, for the benefit of the public. Then, when our geologists go on, under the appointment of the Executive, and in pursuance of appropriations made by Congress, into the Territories of the United States, and upon the public lands of the United States, and make these geological reconnoissances, we may be better able to publish them. The Treasury is not, I believe, at this time, very hard pushed, but still a sacrifice of the kind I offer may give it some little relief; and I propose that he and I should set a good example. Upon the other subject, I wish to say to the Senator and the Senate that these reports are not of States, but of Territories.

Mr. HALE. Both States and Territories.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. They commenced when the States named were Territories. When they were all your lands and your property, you desired to know, as far as science could inform you, whether there were contained, within the bowels of the earth, minerals—lead, coal, tin, copper, &c., which they do contain; and for your own purpose, with a view to the increase of the minimum price, which you always raise in a certain case, when, by scientific investigations, you ascertain that the lands come within a certain category. For this purpose, you commence these scientific surveys, which have received the attention of the Senate, and for which, from year to year, just as now, these sums have been appropriated. This report was ordered at the special session of the Senate last year, and the extra numbers were ordered at this session; and, but for the difficulty in relation to the printing, would have been long since printed and distributed. They are not for Senators. They are for the public—for the people. They are for distribution, if every man who receives them does his duty to his constituents, as I doubt not all will.

The final report of Dr. D. D. Owen, for the publication of which this appropriation is proposed, embraces a country equal in area to four times the State of New York, and twice and a half as large as the island of Great Britain.

It defines the limits of the geological formations, and their mineral character, from the great lead region, on the south, to the extreme northern limits of the United States, embracing the country bordering on Red river of the north; the whole of that part of the Lake Superior country situated both in Wisconsin and Minnesota; the country lying to the sources of the Mississippi, the St. Louis river, Rainy Lake, the Lake of the Woods, and Red Lake. It defines the boundaries of a new coal field, lying on the west side of the Mississippi, in Iowa, as well as the underlying and overlying formations that encircle and abut against it.

It describes, with the aid of minute local detailed sections, the elements of stratification of all the beds of rock which present themselves, along the course of the principal streams in Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota; especially on the upper Mississippi, north of the Wisconsin river; the Wisconsin river, from its mouth to the gravities and traps that commence near "Whitney's Rapids;" of the Des Moines river, from its mouth to the "Great Plaster Bed," near its "Lizard Fork;" of the Missouri river, from Council Bluffs to its confluence with the Mississippi. It exhibits, by a map—the original of which is nearly ten feet by four—the superficial area of those great geological formations, not only as they extend through Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, but also their connection with the formations of Illinois and Missouri. By means of these sections, sources of information are laid open to the miner, which will enable him to estimate the depth, hardness, consistence, and mineral contents of the various beds which he must penetrate in his search after mineral treasures, and the data thus furnished to him by which he can calculate the labor and expense of any proposed work, whether it be mining or internal improvement. They, moreover, lay bare to the inspection of the quarryman the various materials best suited for constructions along the lines of public works, or for private enterprise. They designate the position, succession, and inclination of the workable beds of coal throughout the valleys of the Des Moines, Iowa, Missouri, and Mississippi rivers.

Mr. HALE. As the honorable Senator has made a personal appeal to me, that he and I should disgorge our books, I want to tell him that I have anticipated him in that respect. I should not have mentioned the fact—and I do not wish to boast of it—but for his personal appeal to me. I have given away every single one of the books I have received, by the order of the Senate, to a public library in the town in which I live, on the express condition that they shall always be kept for the inspection of the whole people; and that, when the institution to which they are thus transferred shall fail thus to keep them, they shall become the property of the State library. Thus, so far as I am concerned, I have anticipated the Senator's proposition; and I am obliged to him for the speech, because it gives me instruction. I want instruction; and I would as lief take it from a Senator here as from my own Legislature.

The Senator has defined his position. He is opposed to the sins that have been committed, but in favor of those that are to be committed prospectively. He is opposed to the books that we have distributed, and in favor of those that have not yet been distributed. I think that is his position. I do not expect to be successful in my opposition to this, but I confess that I cannot see the difference.

The Senator says that these books are not for the Senate—that they are for distribution. Is not every single document of which you order the printing of extra copies, printed upon the supposition that they are for distribution? This document stands upon the same footing with every other document of which you order extra copies. I have uniformly voted against the whole of them. I remember, when I made a motion, in the early part of the session, for printing an extra number of some documents that related to a great national affair—the government of the Navy—an honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ARCHISON,] whom I always hear with pleasure and with profit, said, that he did not know what possible benefit the printing of an extra number of that document could be to the people of Missouri; and, as he was there to look out for the people of Missouri, and they had not any salt-water sailors upon whom the discipline of the Navy was to work, he was against going into this national expenditure for such a local object. He thought it was a local object, because he was not aware of any possible interest that it would be to the people of Missouri. If I had not heard that from a Senator standing so high in the Senate and in the public estimation as the honorable Senator from Missouri, I should not have thought it was exactly proper. But I do think so now. [Laughter.] But to apply the same principle here, let me ask, if a publication relating to a public interest of the Government is not as interesting to the citizens of all the States as the local geology of one or more of the States of the Union?

I am not so vain as to believe that I shall be successful in my opposition to this item; but, as I understand the Senator from Virginia, there is also provision to be made for printing these documents for the House of Representatives, at an additional expense of $30,000.

Mr. HUNTER. Only $17,000 for the House.

Mr. HALE. That makes the whole, then, about $50,000. If you are going to print at the public expense the geology of the States, the explorations of which have been made at the expense of the General Government, I do not see why other States which have made geological explorations at their own expense, should not come in and ask to have their geological reports published at the expense of the General Government. Now, I know that several of the New England States, and, I think, New York and Pennsylvania, and some other States, have, at great expense, prepared geological reports of their own States, and I do not see any reason why they should not be published as well as these. But I leave the subject.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the Senator from New Hampshire makes his objection to this a little too late. He ought to recollect that this is simply a proposition to pay for the work that has already been ordered by the Senate, and which is now in the course of preparation. Last spring, at the called Executive session, the Senate ordered this work to be done. And, in order to have it properly done, it was ordered that it should be done under the supervision of the General Land Office. Since the meeting of Congress at this session, additional numbers have been ordered of this work, and Dr. Owen, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, is now in Philadelphia, passing the work through the press. So it has been done under the supervision of the General Land Office, rather than under the supervision of the Committee on Printing, or the Secretary of the Senate, as has been usual. There seems to be some question whether it should be paid for out of the contingent fund of the Senate, or by a separate appropriation. To meet that difficulty—as the money has to be paid either one way or the other—the proposition has been made to pay it in this appropriation bill. I think it is a very proper place for it, and, in fact, the only place proper for it.

Mr. HAMLIN. The propriety of paying for this work which has already been ordered, cannot, I think, be well questioned by the Senate. But there is one point in relation to it, which I feel it to be my duty to state, and which may induce the chairman of the Committee on Finance to suggest a smaller amount of appropriation than the amendment now provides for. This work was originally ordered to be printed by the Senate at its called Executive session last spring. I have not been able to put my hand upon the proceedings of the Senate for that session, and I have not, therefore, the language in which the order was made. But I think the order was, that there be the ordinary number of the work printed and executed under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

At some day during this session there was an order passed by this body for 5,500 additional copies of the work, to be printed under the direction of the General Land Office. Under these two orders, it is said that the Commissioner of the General Land Office includes both printing and binding. It is also said that the binding is to cost $2 50 a volume. These facts were communicated to the Committee on Printing. Before these extra numbers were ordered by the Senate, the Printing Committee had made a contract with Mr. De Camp to do all the binding of the Senate at twelve and a half cents per volume. The binder made an application directly to the Committee on Printing, stating that he was entitled to the binding of these 5,500 additional copies, because they had been ordered subsequent to the making of his contract with the Senate. Under that view of the case, the Joint Committee on Printing unanimously passed a resolution that in their opinion the binder to the Senate was entitled to this work under his contract, at the rate of twelve and a half cents a volume, and they passed a resolution directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to hand over this work to the binder of the Senate for the purpose of having it bound by him under his contract.

If the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall regard the order of the Printing Committee, this work will be bound for twelve and a half cents a volume; while if it shall be bound under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, I am told that it will cost $2 50 a volume. If the Commissioner of the General Land Office, therefore, shall carry out what is fairly a vote of the Senate, and what he has been directed to do by the unanimous vote of the Joint Committee on Printing, then there will be a diminution which may be made in this appropriation of some $10,000 or $15,000. I make these suggestions to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, that he may take such course as he shall see proper.

I desire, further, to say that I believe the binder to the Senate, at this session, has complied with his contract, and the works that he has already bound are bound in a very neat and proper manner, and in a manner which is fully adequate to the wants of the country. I hold in my hand a volume of the report on commerce and navigation, which has been bound by him, and it is bound in a very respectable manner—in a way, I think, which will do ample justice to this work. It seems to me that this is a point to which the Senate may well direct its attention, and that we may thus save nearly $2 50 on each volume of this work in its binding.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Maine, who is cognizant of all the circumstances of the transaction, that he should propose a proviso, requiring the Commissioner of the General Land Office to have the books bound by the binder to the Senate. I believe that would accomplish his object.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no objection to that. I have already stated that the Committee on Printing have unanimously directed the Commissioner of the General Land Office to have them bound there; and I think that a proviso, such as suggested by the Senator from Virginia, might be unnecessary. I was about, however, to suggest a proviso, that not more than twelve and a half cents a volume should be paid for the binding.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I have no doubt in the world that the Commissioner of the General Land Office will receive and act upon the suggestions of the Committee on Printing.

A single word in regard to these reports. They are not reports for Iowa, or Wisconsin, or Minnesota. They are geological reports of the lands of the United States, ordered by ourselves. We have nothing to do with it. If New Hampshire and other old States have made geological surveys, they are surveys of their own lands. We do not own these lands. They are not our property.

Mr. BORLAND. I would say to the Senator from Maine that I think he must be somewhat mistaken on some point, as to the cost of binding these books. I cannot suppose it possible that the binding will cost $2 50 a volume. I do not understand how it could possibly cost that for binding these books. I should suppose fifty or seventy-five cents a volume would be as much as would be required. With regard to the binder of the Senate, I apprehend that, if the proposition were made to him, though it were at his own suggestion, that he should bind these books under his contract, he would refuse to do so. His contract relates altogether to books in the octavo form. If we require him to bind a book of a double size, in the quarto form, I think he would hardly do it for twelve and a half cents. If the binder will do it for twelve and a half cents, of course it ought to be done; for the lowest sum ought to be paid. But I apprehend he would not be willing to do it for that, and I apprehend that it does not come under his contract. I cannot think, however, that under the present arrangement it can cost $2 50 for binding the volume. Why, for that price the binding would be the most elegant we have ever had in this country. The Senator must be mistaken as to that point.

Mr. BADGER. I very much doubt whether any binding of these works that is suitable and proper can be procured for twelve and a half cents per volume. It should be recollected that it is a quarto book—that it is a book intended for preservation, and from the nature of the materials that are contained in it, it requires a strong binding. The little binding—such as was exhibited in the book held up by the Senator from Maine—may answer for the ordinary books, on light paper, for ordinary purposes; but for books of the kind to which this amendment refers, containing plates, and being of a description requiring also very heavy and solid binding for their preservation, it is all idle to talk about being able to bind them for twelve and a half cents per volume. A man may contract to do it for that sum; but you may take it for granted beforehand that he will not do it as he ought to do it, for that sum. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas, that the idea of this volume costing $2 50 per volume for binding must be an entire mistake. But I think it is preposterous to suppose that such books as these could be properly bound for twelve and a half cents per volume.

Mr. CASS. They would be better without binding.

Mr. BADGER. Yes, sir; it would be a great deal better to let the books be without binding, and let each person bind them for himself, than to have them bound in such a manner as they would be for twelve and a half cents per volume.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not state the fact of my own knowledge. I have stated what was communicated to the Committee on Printing, that the binding of this volume was to be in morocco, and gilt, and at a cost of $2 50 per volume. I do not understand by what process the book can cost the amount proposed to be appropriated here, unless there is some extraordinary expenditure of this character. Well, suppose the binder to the Senate shall not be able to place upon them a binding for twelve and a half cents—his contract, as it is said, holding him only to bind volumes in a quarto form—a binding which should compare with this which I hold in my hand?

Mr. BORLAND. I hope the Senator did not understand me to say that the contract of the binder obliges him to bind volumes of that size. I meant to say that it contemplated books of that size, and that he could not and would not have undertaken to bind quarto volumes at twelve and a half cents.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well; whether his contract binds him or not to it in terms—whether, under the terms of the contract, he is obliged to bind the work or not, I will not stop to inquire. But if he is bound to bind volumes of the octavo size for twelve and a half cents, he can bind a quarto book for twice the sum, and make the same profit upon it, and will do it. Consequently, in that view of the case, you may save at least two dollars upon each volume by transferring the binding of the book to the binder of the Senate. I think by the terms of his contract he is bound to bind it for twelve and a half cents a volume. Still, if we have presented a volume that was not contemplated when the contract was made, certainly I would not hold him to the rigid terms of it, but would allow him a proportionate sum, and twenty-five cents would be that sum; and thus we would at least save two dollars on each volume above its cost, if it should be bound in morocco and gilt at a cost of two dollars and a half a volume.

Mr. CASS. If there is the least probability that the binding is to cost such a sum, it ought to be prevented; and I would suggest the propriety of inserting a provision to let the work be bound under the direction of the Committee on Printing. That would obviate all difficulty. We would be sure then of having it done for a reasonable sum.

Mr. BADGER. I do not know whether the Senator from Maine has attended at all to the binding of the Indian statistics, to which we made some reference yesterday, under various names—as the history of romance, and the romance of history, in regard to the Indians. But that book furnishes a conspicuous example of the penny wisdom and pound folly of having valuable books, or books supposed to be valuable, bound in a light and insufficient manner. I can speak in regard to my own copy of the work, that in less than a month after I had it, it was coming to pieces. It was bound with such insufficient and frail materials that they were not capable of holding the weight of the paper together. Now, I would much prefer, according to the suggestion of my friend from Michigan, that we should put in a limitation here, which would leave a reasonable range as to the amount to be paid for binding—say not to exceed a dollar in value. If these books are to be published for preservation, and are of the valuable description supposed by my friend from Iowa, they ought to be bound well and substantially, or else the money paid for their printing would be so much thrown away. If these books should be bound for twenty-five cents a volume, they will be bound in paper that will hardly stick together for a month. Transferring them from place to place will so detach them that the several plates and sheets cannot be held together. This is the case, I know, with the other book to which I have alluded, at least with the one which came into my possession. Other Senators may have been more fortunate in the description of binding of the books that reached them.

Mr. HAMLIN. One word in reply to the Senator from North Carolina. I understand him to say that the volumes to which he alluded—I believe they are the historical account of the Indians—

Mr. BADGER. Indian romance.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, "Romance of History." I think the Senator called it—came to pieces, after a very short time, by their usage. Now, I think the example which the Senator has given us is a very unfortunate one for the position which he has taken. The printing and binding of that work cost ten dollars a volume.

Mr. BADGER. How much did the binding cost?

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not know what proportion the one bore to the other. I do not know what was the cost of the binding separate from the printing; but I understand that the edition of two thousand volumes cost $20,000, which is ten dollars a volume. I do not believe that the durability of the binding depends so much upon its exterior appearance as upon other matters.

Mr. BADGER. Nor do I.

Mr. HAMLIN. I believe that a substantial binding, and one which is fully adequate to this work, may be put upon it for half a dollar; and for that reason I move, to test the sense of the Senate, to strike out $31,218 75, and insert $20,000. That will leave a margin of more than half a dollar for binding.

Mr. BADGER. The case I referred to is not unfortunate for my purpose. If the Senator will look at that book he will find that an immense outlay of money was required for the superb engravings which it contains, and the very superior letter-press and paper of which it is composed. The real fact was, that they printed the book in an admirable style, and then they thought they could bind it in any, however imperfect, manner.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator to the amendment of the committee is not in order, inasmuch as the sum appropriated was amended to $31,218 75 by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. BORLAND. I offer the following amendment to the amendment, which I think will meet the difficulty:

Provided, That no more than fifty cents a copy shall be paid for the binding of the book.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. I now offer an amendment, according to the instruction of the Committee on Finance, to come after the one which has just been adopted, to provide for this work for the House.

The PRESIDENT. A proviso has been inserted in this clause that the binding of the work shall not cost more than fifty cents a volume.

Mr. HUNTER. I propose to add that proviso to the amendment which I now offer, as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay for three thousand five hundred copies of the report of Dr. David Dale Owen on the geology of Iowa, Wisconsin, and Minnesota Territory, ordered by a resolution of the House of Representatives to be executed under the special direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $16,187 50: Provided, That no more than fifty cents a copy shall be paid for the binding of the book.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would suggest whether, before adopting the amendment, it might not be advisable to limit the sum. It will be seen that the sum of $16,187 50 is proposed to be paid for a limited number of books. That sum undoubtedly embraces the expense of binding contemplated. We therefore appropriate a much larger sum than will be necessary. The construction might be that the whole sum would be paid, deducting the amount of the binding for the work itself. I think we ought not to appropriate beyond the necessary sum.

Mr. HUNTER. The estimate was made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I have no means of knowing how much was estimated for the binding, and how much for the other portion of the work; and I therefore have not the information to enable me to reduce the estimate with sufficient certainty. I apprehend, however, that if we attach this proviso to it—to pay not more than fifty cents a volume for the binding—the Commissioner will spend so much less than he originally estimated for that part of the work; how much that was, we have no means of knowing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee is to add to the clause "for payment of the second and third volumes of the Fifth Series of the Documentary History, under contract with the Secretary of State, in addition to the balance of the appropriation of $35,000 per act of the 30th of September, 1850, $11,294," the following:

Provided, That in addition to the conditions imposed on the contractors in the act of March 3, 1843, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1844, it is hereby prescribed that not less than two volumes annually shall be published, and that the whole shall be completed in five years: And provided further, That the parties interested in this contract shall signify their assent to this further condition in the manner prescribed in relation to the other conditions conferred upon them in that act.

Mr. HUNTER. Before this proviso was introduced, I consulted one of the contracting parties—the printer—who was very willing that it should be introduced; and it was a desirable object to hasten the publication, if we could do so; but Colonel Force, the gentleman who collects the materials, came to see me in relation to it, and said that it was impossible that he could get it out so fast. I called at his office this morning, and he showed me the mode in which he is collecting the materials; and he convinced me that this proviso would require him to bring out the work faster than he can do so consistently with the character and objects of the work. He says that, although he cannot pledge himself, yet it is his interest to get out the work as fast as possible; and he will endeavor to bring out three volumes in two years. That being the case, I think we had better not pass the proviso; and, therefore, I do not press it.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee is to add to the clause "to cover the balance of compensation due to the United States geologists for the Lake Superior region, and for Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, and to their respective assistants, including the cost of superintending the printing of their final geological report, $5,952," the following proviso:

Provided, That there shall be no further geological survey prosecuted in Oregon, unless authorized by law.

Mr. HUNTER. That proviso was introduced by the committee, because they found that a part of this estimate of deficiencies was occasioned by the employment of a geological surveyor in Oregon, for which there had been no previous appropriation, and no law authorizing it. It had been done because it was earnestly asked for by the inhabitants of the Territory, I believe, or, at any rate, by the Delegate, and because they thought it, at the Department, politic to do so. But the committee believed that it was a dangerous practice, and have offered this proviso to check it. I think that geological surveys, especially after the specimens which we have had of their expense, ought not to be carried on without the authority of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee is in the clause for compiling, printing, and binding the Biennial Register for 1851, in addition to the amount appropriated per act of 3d of March, 1851, to strike out $1,800, and insert $2,253.

Mr. HUNTER. This is rendered necessary on account of a clerical error. It was suggested by the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee is to insert the following:

And also a sum not exceeding $10,734 65 is hereby appropriated to pay Adam Boyd Hamilton, according to contract, for printing 20,000, and binding 18,610 copies, of 396 pages each, of the Register's report of the commerce and navigation of the United States, for 1851.

Mr. HUNTER. This appropriation is made upon an estimate from the Department, and upon the recommendation of the Committee on Printing. Owing to some mistake, provision was not made for it in the last appropriation bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee is to insert the following:

The sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid to and expended under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, in procuring such copies or other evidence of the laws, decrees, or ordinances of the Spanish or Mexican Governments, relating to or affecting land claims in California or New Mexico, and also such copies or memorials of said claims as may be obtained from the records of the Mexican Government, with all such other documents and official evidence as the said Attorney General may deem necessary and proper, and may direct to be procured. And for the purpose of procuring the information aforesaid, the said Attorney General is hereby authorized to employ or appoint an agent, who is to act under the direction of, and to receive such compensation as the said Attorney General may allow and order. Provided, however, That the whole expense of agency, of procuring books and documents, of transportation, and of translation, and everything connected with the work, except the printing, shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated.

Mr. HUNTER. I have a letter from the Department in relation to this subject, which I would like the Secretary to read.

The following letter from the honorable J. J. Crittenden, Attorney General of the United States, addressed to Mr. HUNTER, was accordingly read.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, April 7.

SIR: I have the honor to request that an appropriation of $10,000 may be made, by the deficiency bill, now pending before the Senate, to enable the Department to send an agent to the city of Mexico, to collect, translate, and compile the various laws of the Mexican Congress, and the ordinances of the Supreme Executive of that Republic, having reference to donations and grants of public lands, &c. The Board of Commissioners, appointed under the act of 3d of March, 1851, to ascertain and settle land titles in California, is now in session at San Francisco, and it will probably soon become necessary, in the discharge of their functions under that act, for the courts of the United States to adjudicate and determine the validity of those titles according to the laws, usages, and customs of the Government from which they were derived. Prior to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, these laws and customs were foreign to the country, and are now but little known or understood; and the necessity, therefore, of placing in the hands of the officers of the Government and of the Judiciary, the laws, usages, and customs by which their action is to be governed, is alike obvious and indispensable.

Mr. DAWSON. I move to strike from the amendment the words "Attorney General" wherever they occur, and insert in lieu thereof, the word "President," so as to make it read "President of the United States."

Mr. GWIN. I hope that will not be done. This matter has been thoroughly examined, and the necessity of the appropriation brought to the notice of the Secretary of the Interior, and by that Department to the Committee on Finance, by the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, and by the Attorney General. It is exclusively a law question, and one that pertains to the Law Department of the Government. I am perfectly confident that the amendment is in its right place; that the provision is right as it now is; and I hope it will not be changed. The only question in the Finance Committee was, whether the Attorney General or the Supreme Court of the United States should appoint the agent; it was considered that one or the other should do it.

The PRESIDENT. There is a letter here, signed by the Hon. John Catron, one of the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, which will be read:

"WASHINGTON, April 7.

"SIR: On yesterday I was shown a document signed by the two Senators and one of the Representatives from the State of California, asking your opinion as to what amount of money would be necessary to send an agent to Mexico, for the purpose of collecting the laws applicable to land claims, now in course of investigation by the board of commissioners in California, and likely to be presented (in part) to the Supreme Court of the United States.

"I agree with Attorney General Crittenden's statement, indorsed on the paper referred to, that the compilation of the laws proposed is not only necessary, but indispensable, in my opinion, to a proper understanding of the laws according to which the claims originated. The eleventh section of the act of March 3d, 1851, imposes the duty, in terms, on the district and supreme courts to adjudicate the claims according to the 'laws, usages, and customs' of the government from which each respective claim is derived. This duty Congress demands, and it must be performed. But it is impossible to do so unless the laws are known to the judges, according to which they are commanded to decide. These laws were foreign to our country previous to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. Since that treaty, they are as much municipal laws as those of Louisiana; and the courts of justice are equally bound to administer them, without proof of their existence and import. I therefore hope the courts will, at the soonest day, be furnished with a collection of those laws, and a true translation of them. As to the amount of the expense, it is a mere trifle compared with the enormous amount in dispute."

Mr. DAWSON. Under the suggestion of the Senator from California, I will change the motion which I made. I will only move to strike out "said Attorney General," and insert "President" in the following part of the clause:

"And for the purpose of procuring the information aforesaid, the said Attorney General is hereby authorized to employ or appoint an agent, who is to act under the direction of, and to receive such compensation as the said Attorney General may allow and order."

The President has the appointing power, and the amendment is for the purpose of requiring that the President shall employ the agent, who will still be under the control and direction of the Attorney General of the United States. Yesterday, in a case where the appointing power was conferred upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, we changed it, and put it upon the President of the United States. I now propose to make the same change.

Mr. BADGER. I think the amendment is nearly right as it now stands. The amendment proposed by my friend from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] originally, would, I think, have been wrong; but whether it was right or wrong, undoubtedly the amendment now proposed by him is clearly and unquestionably wrong. By the amendment proposed, at present, this money is to be placed in the charge of the Attorney General. He is to take measures for embodying, collecting, and translating these laws for the adjudication of the land claims, and then after you direct him to perform the duty, you interpose a subsequent provision—that the President of the United States is to elect the agent whom the Attorney General is to employ. There is nothing irregular in the bill as it now stands; the President of the United States has the appointment of all officers under the Government, with a few exceptions; but we have a right to give the heads of Departments the appointment of agents and subordinate officers.

Now, this is a matter relating to the legal department more immediately under the control of the Attorney General, who is the general law adviser of the Executive; and my friend from Georgia has fallen into a mistake. The amendment we passed yesterday did not confer on the President the power of nominating the officer to whom he alluded, but put it in the power of the head of that Department in which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is a subordinate.

It seems to me that the amendment is right as it now stands. There is no intrusion on the authority, respect, or dignity, of the President of the United States. On the contrary, it appears to me that there would be a large infringement on both by this new amendment, which would put the President on the footing of a joint agency with the Attorney General, the latter having the control and management of affairs, and the President merely the power of appointing the agents through whom the duty is to be carried out.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. I think it is right. I recollect that my friend, in the able speech that he made with regard to the abuses which took place on the Pacific coast, declared that he dealt not with commissioners, nor with subalterns and subordinates. Here is an important duty to be discharged, and I am for dealing with the President of the United States; I prefer him; he is accountable. I do not know which is most likely to be the candidate for the Presidency, the present President or the Attorney General. Both of them are excellent gentlemen. I desire that the present President should be held accountable.

Mr. GWIN. This is exclusively a legal question, and relates to the collection of law papers, and is merely temporary in its operation. These papers are to be collected for the purpose of having them brought here to the Supreme Court of the United States; and if they come there, it is that they may be used in the examination of the claims of the commissioners in California, and others. I agree with the honorable Senator from North Carolina, that the Attorney General should not only have the power to collect these papers but to appoint the agent. The Attorney General is the head of a Department, and he should be held responsible for the appointment. I would not give this duty to a chief clerk, but the Attorney General is the responsible law officer of this Government, and is the head of a Department.

Mr. BADGER. As much so as the Secretary of State or the Secretary of War.

Mr. DAWSON. I maintain that it is improper to confer this appointing power on the Attorney General. It is a part of the duty of the Executive. It is said that this is entirely a legal question. Would gentlemen contend that the appointment of a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States could be better performed by the Attorney General than by the President of the United States? Will it be said that the Attorney General is a better judge of the qualifications of the individual to preside upon that bench than the President of the United States? I cannot see for my life why this course is preferred; why gentlemen prefer this violation of the course which is usually pursued. Here is an appointment to be made. In what department of the Government is the appointing power? It is in the Executive Department; and, in the language of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Dodge], he is the responsible head. I do not understand why this appointment should be given to a department—and not exactly a department either, for the Attorney General is merely a member of the Cabinet by courtesy; he is responsible to the President of the United States.

Mr. BADGER. He is always his counsellor.

Mr. DAWSON. The plan I propose is this: That the execution of the order should be in the hands of the Attorney General, and that the appointment of the individual should be in the hands of the President. I have no objection to the Attorney General; none at all.

Mr. FELCH. I do not see the object of making the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia. It seems to suppose that this is a matter which can only be properly intrusted to the gentleman who is now at the head of the Executive Department, and that that would be the only proper way of making this appointment. I rise, however, for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senator to a case calling for an appropriation precisely similar in its character to the one called for here. Three sessions ago the Senate passed a resolution providing for obtaining the information which is now sought to be obtained under this provision. A resolution passed the Senate by which the Committee on Public Lands were instructed to provide the means necessary for obtaining this information; and in order to accomplish that, they were authorized to employ some person who might be competent to perform the duty thus required, and an appropriation was accordingly made for that purpose. The committee proceeded to appoint an individual, (Mr. Jones,) who made that examination. He obtained the laws, ordinances, &c., required; he made a translation of them, and presented them to the committee, but, for some reasons, he afterwards withdrew them, and refused to submit them again to the committee. He received no pay for the duties which he performed. The manuscript was withdrawn, and by that withdrawal we were prevented from obtaining the necessary documents. In that instance it was not thought at all necessary to go to the President of the United States, or even to the head of the Department. It was a subordinate matter, and was submitted to the charge of the committee in the manner I have mentioned, and was left entirely to their discretion. The object was considered very important by the committee, and was again submitted; but no resolution was passed by the Senate on the subject. The Senator from Missouri objected, and the proposition failed.

Now, in this case it will be observed, that the first part of the provision commits the charge of the matter to the Attorney General. He is to superintend the matter, as the law officer of the Government. It is a highly responsible duty—one requiring a great deal of care and attention in obtaining all the documents which are necessary, and in rejecting those which are voluminous and not necessary, and which cannot be properly embraced in this proposal. But the duty which is to be imposed on the person, whoever he may be, is merely the duty of an agent to assist the Attorney General in gathering together the materials to be used. That agent is to be sent to Mexico for the purpose of getting up the materials which the Attorney General makes use of, to be arranged and presented in a proper form for the action of the Senate of the United States, so that we may have them before us, worthy of being printed, and furnishing all necessary information on this great and important subject.

Mr. BADGER. I dislike to trouble the Senate again upon what appears to me to be a very small matter. I was not aware, until I heard the remark made by my friend from Iowa, [Mr. Dodge], that there was any connection between this appointment and the issues of the next presidential campaign. If I had been aware of that, I would have considered the matter of more intrinsic importance, and would have taken more time to inform myself before I decided in my own mind in relation to this important question, as to whether this person should be appointed by the President of the United States, or whether this high, important, overruling, awful trust, should be allowed to rest in the hands of so insignificant a person as the Attorney General of the United States. But having thus far committed myself, I am disposed to maintain my consistency.

Now, my friend from Georgia says, that as the President of the United States is the head of the Executive, he has the appointing of all officers. In answer to that I will say that, with the exception of a few officers specified by the Constitution of the United States, the President holds the appointment of every officer, subject to the will of the Senate. The Constitution declares that judges of the Supreme Court and others—enumerating certain officers—shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. But Congress may vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they please, either in the President alone, or in the heads of Departments, or in the courts of law. Therefore, if this were an office, in the strictest sense of the term, implying continuous employment, or the successive appointment of new persons to hold an office, it would be nothing to the argument of the Senator from Georgia. None at all. Our power over the subject is absolute. But, in the proper sense of the term, this is no office. It is a mere temporary trust or agency. A person is not appointed to fill an office with permanent duties, embracing in the nature of the case a succession of new individuals to keep it up, and carry it on; but here is a man appointed to go and collect some papers, under the direction of somebody; but this amendment proposes to place $10,000 in the hands of the Attorney General, for the purpose of accomplishing this object. Now, the Senator from Georgia says it will not be treating the President exactly well, to give the Attorney General the power of appointing this agent. That is all. Suppose this matter carried out: the Postmaster General appoints to office a number of post office agents—men who go round and investigate accounts; who superintend a great portion of our great postal system. It never entered the head of any man that it was either proper, or necessary, or useful, or expedient, or advisable, that the appointment of these persons should be placed in the hands of the President of the United States. Is it not the uniform course and custom of the Government, whenever an agent is to be appointed to discharge certain duties, the general supervision of which is under a particular head, that that particular head is allowed to select the agent to carry them out? Certainly it is. Look at the Department of the Interior—the head of that Department appoints all the subordinates; and it appears to me that if this money is to be placed in the hands of the Attorney General, and if he is to collect certain papers, it would be proper to leave to him the appointment of the agent who is to collect them. I must confess that I think it would be a very small business to call on the President of the United States to make the appointment.

Mr. BAYARD. I agree with the honorable Senator from North Carolina, that with regard to the constitutionality of the question, there can be no doubt. I believe that Congress can appoint this officer, or agent, or whatever name you please to give him, without any reference to the appointing power on the part of the President of the United States. I think it is a question of expediency. And I disagree with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. Badger], and also with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Felch], when he speaks of the duties of this agent as being merely to collect papers and arrange them for the use of the Attorney General. When we look at the scope and the power given to him, I will answer for it, that the agent is to perform the whole business, and that the Attorney General will merely appoint the agent. It requires for the superintendence of such a work as the collecting of legal documents in Mexico, intelligence of a very high order, and a legal acumen and capacity which few possess. It is not to go there to pick up a document here and a paper there for the Attorney General to arrange afterwards, for the benefit of the country. I submit that this appointment is more important than has been supposed, and that the real and important duties will be performed by this agent.

The question is one of expediency, as to who shall exercise the expediency of appointing this agent. The President may appoint him, and I think he should do it. You place in the hands of the Attorney General the sum of $10,000 for a variety of purposes, among which is the payment of the agent himself. I ask if it is not wiser that the discretion to appoint the agent should be different from the discretion exercised in superintending the work afterwards, and in expending the money? On that ground I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BORLAND. If the Senator from Georgia insists on his amendment, he ought to propose to amend still further, and provide that the President should send the name of the person he appoints to be confirmed by the Senate. If this is a matter of so much importance that the Attorney General cannot be intrusted with it, I think it must be of sufficient importance to require the further amendment I have suggested.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken, and resulted—yeas 18, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Brodhead, Brooke, Clemens, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Geyer, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Rusk, Spruance, Wade, and Walker—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Borland, Cass, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Gwin, James, King, Miller, Morton, Pearce, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Sumner, and Whitcomb—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the committee, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT. The next amendment is as follows:

For additional compensation for increasing the transportation of the United States mail between New York and Liverpool, in the Collins line of steamers, to twenty-six trips per annum, at such times as shall be directed by the Postmaster General, and in conformity to his last annual report to Congress, and his letter of the 15th of November last to the Secretary of the Navy, commencing said increased service on the first of January, 1852, at the rate of $33,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance, the sum of $236,500.

Mr. BORLAND. As that amendment is likely to give rise to considerable discussion, I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Hunter], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that he should withhold it for the present, and let other amendments be acted upon which will give rise to no discussion, reserving this to the last, as upon it I presume the main discussion will take place.

Mr. BADGER. This is the last amendment of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. I have an amendment to propose to another portion of the bill, which, I think, will give rise to no discussion, and I would like to have it acted upon first.

Mr. HUNTER. There are other amendments from the Committee on Finance, which we can go on with by letting this be passed over for the present, which I am quite willing to do.

The PRESIDENT. It can only be done by unanimous consent. The Chair must call for amendments from the committee, before any other can be received.

Objection was made to taking up any other amendments.

Mr. GWIN. The amendment proposes to increase the number of trips per annum of the Collins' line of steamers to twenty-six, and give additional compensation for the whole service. The memorial of Mr. Collins and his associates, asking for this increased compensation, was, at an early period of the session, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. After a thorough examination of the subject, the committee came to the conclusion that it was proper to increase the service to twenty-six trips, and the compensation per trip to the amount stated in the amendment. Being a member of the Committee on Finance, as well as chairman of the Naval Committee, I was instructed to present to the Finance Committee the amendment under consideration, to be offered as an additional section to this bill.

The successful and masterly policy of Great Britain, in uniting the elements of a commercial marine with those of a naval force, attracted, at an early period, the attention of our National Legislature. Some years elapsed, however, before any active measures were taken by Congress to meet this policy by competition. Meanwhile Great Britain had intersected the waters of the world with the tracks of her swift and powerful mail steamers, and was extracting immense sums annually from American citizens in the shape of freights, postages, and passage money. The twenty thousand American vessels afloat on all the seas, with their countless millions of property, were dependent on the enterprise and courtesy of a foreign nation for the transmission of every letter that passed between them and their owners. Thus Great Britain was enabled to sustain a numerous fleet of mail steamers, (convertible into efficient war steamers,) by contributions levied to a large extent on American commerce; because, unaided American enterprise could not enter into a successful rivalry with the self-sustaining policy and inexpensive liberality of the British Government. For several years this subject was pressed with unavailing assiduity upon the attention of Congress. At length contracts were made which established the present lines of the United States mail steamers, running between New York, Liverpool, and other important commercial points.

The interest with which this experiment was watched by the American people is well recollected. The establishment of the line between New York and Liverpool was regarded as the beginning of a national contest, the issue of which was to decide for many years the question of maritime superiority. If the United States mail steamers had failed in any important particular—in accommodation, security, or speed, as compared with the British lines—the failure would have been a source of national mortification and regret. Impressed with this view of their undertaking, the contractors determined to spare no expense that might be necessary to enable them in all respects to surpass their rivals. Without regard to the calls of their contract, they have built larger vessels than those of the Cunard line, with improved machinery; and it is officially before the country, in the last annual report of the Postmaster General, that these vessels exhibit "unrivalled qualities," and establish the "superiority" of American skill and enterprise in the construction of ocean steamers. Indeed, it is admitted on all sides, that they are the finest models afloat—the swiftest, strongest, and most beautiful steamers in the world. They are thus, in fact, a school for the steam marine of the country. This school necessarily educates good machinists, engineers, firemen, mechanics, and officers of every grade, alike useful to the commercial and naval marine of the country.

The enterprise and public spirit which induced the contractors to make this effort, and incur these large expenses, have stripped their contract of its commercial value, and rendered it financially disastrous to all who are interested in it. From satisfactory evidence, laid before the Committee on Naval Affairs, it appears that the entire cost of the four steamers of this line, viz: the Atlantic, Pacific, Arctic, and Baltic, amounted to $2,944,142 71. The sworn statement of the company, showing the actual expenses and receipts of the first twenty-eight voyages of these vessels, exhibits the actual average cost of each voyage at $63,215 64, and the actual average receipts at $48,286 85; leaving an average deficiency on each voyage, of $16,928 79, or for twenty voyages, the sum of $338,574 40.

Under these circumstances, the contractors call upon the Federal Government for additional assistance, on the ground that they have built larger and better vessels than their contract required of them; that they have been compelled to combat a most extraordinary and unequal competition; that the cost, the interest account, the expense of running, and the premiums of insurance have been thereby largely augmented; and that without thus exceeding the stipulations of their contract and incurring these extraordinary expenditures, they could not have accomplished the great object to which the nation looked with so much solicitude, and now contemplate with so much pride and satisfaction.

This view of the case embraces many considerations which entitle the parties to such an increase of their compensation, as may enable them to maintain against the Government steamers of Great Britain that competition, which will continue, at least, to divide the advantages of the mail and passenger service of the Atlantic with our great commercial rival; for it is sufficiently obvious that, from the moment the British Government made its first contract with Mr. Cunard to carry the Atlantic mail, at £60,000 per annum, (a sum now largely increased,) the door was closed to mere individual enterprise, or commercial competition.

The tonnage of the Collins steamers largely exceeds the whole amount stipulated in their contract, and is competent to perform the increased service required by the Post Office Department. And it should be observed in this connection, that the sum now paid to this line constitutes no charge on the Treasury, but is overpaid by the transatlantic postages, as will be seen from the letter of the Postmaster General to the Naval Committee, extracts from which I will now read:

Exhibit of postages on mails received and sent by the Cunard and Collins steamers from February 21st, 1849, to March 31st, 1852:

Postages by Cunard line from February 21st, 1849, to April 27th, 1850.....	$663,311 55
United States portion.....	$138,606 55
British portion.....	526,705 00
	$663,311 55

Postages by Cunard line from April 27th, 1850, to March 31st, 1852.....	1,071,302 34
United States portion.....	$223,188 00
British portion.....	848,114 34
	$1,071,302 34

Postages by Collins line from April 27th, 1850, to March 31st, 1852.....	373,337 80
United States portion.....	$326,670 58
British portion.....	46,667 22
	$373,337 80

$2,109,951 69

United States revenue for the same period.

1st. By Cunard line letters to 27th April, 1850.....	$138,606 55
2d. By Cunard line from 27th April, 1850, to 31st March, 1851.....	223,188 00
3d. By Collins line from 27th April, 1850, to 31st March, 1851.....	326,670 58
4th. Newspaper postage to December 31st, 1851.....	46,858 88
5th. Balance on closed mails.....	90,151 58
6th. Postage for State Department.....	3,200 00
	$628,675 59

The increase of transatlantic postage in 1851 over that of 1850 was.....	$197,435 61
Increase by Collins line.....	$143,734 05
Increase by other lines.....	13,701 56
	$197,435 61

In the preceding statement, the closed mails are estimated for the quarter ending December 31st, 1851, and the newspaper closed mail accounts for the quarter ending 31st March, 1852, are not included.

I will state for the information of the Senate, that the closed mails here alluded to are those sent to Canada and other colonies of Great Britain, upon which a stated sum per pound is paid. Let it also be borne in mind that the compensation paid the Collins line is $385,000 per annum; that it has not yet been in operation two years, and we have already received into the Treasury, from postage, by the establishment of the line and the postal treaty, more than the compensation paid to the contractors.

The returns of postages show that they are steadily increasing; and with the enlarged immigration, travel, and commercial intercourse, must continue to increase during the term of the contract.

The postage receipts accruing to the United States Government by the establishment of this line, and postal arrangement with Great Britain, up to the quarter ending 31st March, 1852, amounted, as above stated, to the sum of $828,675 59, of which amount $138,606 55 accrued to the Government by the postal treaty, and before the commencement of service by the Collins line, all of which in the absence of our own steamers, and the postal treaty, that resulted from the policy of establishing these lines, would have been contributed by American citizens to the maintenance of the powerful commercial and naval marine of a foreign Government. And this would have been but a small portion of the contribution; for the passage money, the freights on bullion and on expensive articles of merchandise, largely exceed the sum that is levied in the shape of sea postage. Indeed a more ingenious and successful scheme for the maintenance of a formidable steam navy, at the expense of the other nations of the world, and to the actual profit of the British Exchequer, could not have been devised.

I am aware that the objection has been urged against this line of mail steamers or the contemplated increase of pay, that it builds up a monopoly by which individuals are sustained at the expense of other members of the commercial community. But, in my opinion, the aid of Congress was invoked to neutralize an existing foreign monopoly, against which American enterprise could not venture to struggle, until it was also encouraged and stimulated by the aid of the General Government. The aid asked for is to prevent the resumption, by Great Britain, of a monopoly now lost, and which, cost what it may, she ought never to be permitted to regain.

But, passing over this view of the case, the present application loses all semblance of a monopoly, from the stipulation of the contractors themselves to transfer their ships at cost, with their contracts, and all the additional facilities that may be extended to them by Congress, to any persons who may be acceptable to Government, and capable of carrying out an enterprise of such vital interest and importance to the nation. In addition to this, there is $1,000,000 of the stock of the company, now represented by its bonds and debts, not yet taken, which will continue open to the subscription of American citizens, in the event of a favorable issue to the present application for additional compensation. In considering this important subject in all the aspects in which it has been presented, I cannot avoid the conclusion that it is the true policy and obvious duty of the Government to sustain this line of steamers by such appropriations as may be necessary. The enterprise is one of a national character. It elicits national feeling, pride, and interests, and must be regarded in a broad and liberal view, without reference to the narrow apprehension that too large a remuneration may accrue to individual beneficiaries. If this objection were not entirely removed by the stipulation to transfer the contract, a sense of justice would dictate that the parties who have run the hazard of this enterprise and have achieved its remarkable results, should receive their reward.

Their success has elevated the American name and character; it has wrested from Great Britain the palm of the maritime dominion, and merits such a substantial recognition by the American Government as will indicate that the contest is a national one upon both sides, and not a strife between an association of American citizens and the greatest governmental power of the world. Their enterprise cannot fail to commend itself to every American mind as worthy the spirit of the age, and the genius and destiny of our people.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment. I know that the opposition which I shall raise will be perfectly vain and fruitless; but I hold it to be a duty which I owe to the Senate and to the country, to raise my voice against the continuance of a principle which I think I can show is the adoption of that of the protective system in one of its very worst forms. That, sir, is the greatest, but not the only objection to it. In the first place, this is an amendment to a deficiency bill. There is no pretense that we have not provided for Mr. Collins $385,000 per annum, the sum specified in his contract. There is, therefore, no deficiency.

In the next place, if we should believe that the change made by the Postmaster General ordering up, as they call it in that Department, the service from twenty to twenty-six trips a year, to be right and proper, the addition that should be made pro rata would only be, according to his own statement, about $96,250 for the additional trips, which would make the compensation something like $481,000 a year for the twenty-six trips. But, in this amendment, (which has been offered to this bill, I think, very improperly—for if Congress mean to bestow this gratuity on the Collins line, it seems to me it should be done as a separate measure, or, at any rate, in one of the general appropriation bills,) we find, as I think, a manifest contradiction. The amendment provides, that the increased service from the first of January, 1852, shall be at the rate of $33,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance; and it also appropriates the sum of $236,500, in addition to what is already provided. Now, the addition of the sum of $236,500 to $385,000, the amount they now receive, makes a fraction over $620,000 per annum. But twenty-six trips, at $33,000 per trip, would be $858,000 a year, which they would get for this service. But take either sum, the higher or the lower, it seems to me, that there is no good reason for granting it in this bill, and at this time. Nor do I believe that it can be justified by sound policy or justice, at any time.

Sir, we are told that this is a grand enterprise, in which the credit of the nation is concerned. On the one hand, we are assured that these individuals cannot keep up this contest without further aid from the Government, because the British Government gives a greater support to the Cunard line; and, on the other hand, we are assured that it has already brought in postages enough to pay us. I understood the honorable Senator from California to contend that the Collins line has already brought in postages enough to compensate for what we have paid for it. In short, we are told that, according to a fair calculation, thus far the line has not cost us a cent. Now, I propose to look a little into that matter.

Mr. GWIN. I stated that the postages received under the postal treaty—which was the result of the policy of establishing these steam lines—into the national Treasury, had exceeded our expenditures for the Collins line.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I understand that the Senator from California does not maintain that the Collins line has brought in as much as we have expended on it?

Mr. GWIN. I never said so. I said the amount received—both by the Cunard and Collins lines, since the postal treaty—exceeded the amount paid for the Collins line.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I submit that it has nothing to do with the question before us. The amount of money that we receive under the postal treaty, and from the Cunard line, has nothing to do with the question as to what the Collins line brings, or how far it is calculated to bring, in money.

Mr. GWIN. It is a part of the same policy. Mr. HUNTER. We charge, on every letter brought by the Cunard line, five cents inland postage. So we do on every letter brought by the Collins line. Is all that to be given to the credit of our share in this grand national enterprise? Why, if we had had no postal treaty—if we had had no steam lines—undoubtedly we should have made a charge for this inland postage upon letters brought here by the Cunarders. Now, if you want to see what it is that the Collins line have brought in to us, and what it is that we have expended, let us look at the report of the Post Office Department.

In the first place, we had to make an advance, I think, of something like $380,000, to enable the company to build the ships. In the next place, we have given them $385,000 a year for twenty trips. That is something like $19,000 a trip.

Now, how can it be said that the English have given a better support, and a larger support, to the Cunard line, than we have given to the Collins line? That is one of the grounds upon which this appropriation is invoked. Why, it is found that the English have given, for fifty-two trips, a sum, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I think, of $660,000.

Mr. RUSK. Six hundred and ninety-six thousand dollars.

Mr. HUNTER. Well, that is less than $14,000 a trip. The English give the Cunard line less than $14,000, and we give the Collins line about $19,000 a trip; yet the Collins line comes in here for more assistance. It is proposed to give Mr. Collins $33,000 a trip, to enable him to sustain this great contest.

Mr. RUSK. I presume the honorable Senator does not wish to be mistaken. He has referred to me for one of his statements, and I hope he will allow me to correct him on that point. The annual pay, according to the last accounts I have seen, (and I understand it is from an estimate of the Admiralty,) of the Cunard line, is $696,000. To arrive, however, at the conclusion to which the honorable Senator does, that we make a larger payment to the Collins line than the English Government does to the Cunard line, he includes the advance, as he chooses to term it, by this Government, of $385,000 to the Collins line.

Mr. HUNTER. We pay them that amount annually.

Mr. RUSK. But I understand the Senator to include the $385,000 given as an advance, as he called it.

Mr. HUNTER. I stated that fact.

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir, and I wish to put the Senator right about it. The advance was made by act of Congress, to enable them to complete their ships. The $385,000 were to be paid back to the Government, in annual instalments of ten per cent., with six per cent. interest on the amount, and there has been paid back under that arrangement, out of that amount of $385,000, the sum of $77,500.

Mr. HUNTER. That does not alter the main statement upon which I relied in the comparison. We give them $385,000 a year for twenty trips. That is a compensation of something like $19,000 a trip. This statement has no reference to any sums heretofore advanced to them, and I say that is a larger compensation per trip than the English give to the Cunard steam-ships; and yet, notwithstanding that, it is now proposed to give them $33,000 a trip—a great deal more than twice what is appropriated by the British Government to the Cunarders per trip.

But, sir, the statement has been made elsewhere, if not here, (for I have had appeals made to me upon that ground,) that the Collins steamers were bringing enough, or very nearly enough, in the shape of postages to compensate the Government for what had been expended upon them. Let us see how that is. Here is a statement, given to me by the Post Office Department, of the amount of postages brought in by the Collins line, from the 27th of April, 1850, to the 31st of March, 1852, which is a period of very nearly two years. The amount thus brought in has been $373,337; and it is to be observed, that of this sum, ($373,337,) the Collins line itself only brought in two thirds. Upon every sea letter twenty-four cents are charged, of which the British Government receives three cents for inland postage; the United States receives five cents for inland postage, and sixteen cents are left to go to the account of the steamers, or only two thirds of twenty-four cents. Therefore, all that can be justly or properly credited to the Collins line is two thirds of the amount of $373,337, with certain exceptions to which I now come. One is, the newspaper postage, which amounts to $46,858. That is, as far as I can ascertain, the entire amount of the newspaper postage brought in not only by the Collins, but by the Havre, and Bremen, and the Cunard line; and that is the entire amount which we receive not only for the sea postage, but for the inland postage, on newspapers. Therefore, the whole amount of this newspaper postage is not, and cannot be, properly a credit to the Collins line. How much should be credited to them I suppose no man is prepared to say—certainly not half the amount. I have endeavored to ascertain at the Department how much of it was fairly to be credited to the Collins line, but I have not been able to do so.

The next item for which perhaps credit may be claimed is, the balance of the closed mails, $90,150. A portion of this is a credit to the Collins line; but I believe that far the larger portion of it should be no credit to them. These closed mails are for this purpose: The British are allowed to send a closed mail through to their provinces, from New York and Boston, at so many cents per ounce. They are also allowed to send a closed mail by our steamers from New York to the West Indies. This amount of $90,150 is the aggregate that was received for sending all the closed mails. Observe, also, these closed mails are not brought by the Collins line only, but are also brought by the Cunard line. Some come by the Bremen and Havre lines, so that it is impossible to tell what proportion of this property belongs to the credit of the Collins line—probably not one half of it.

But if you will take the whole of these items for closed mails, and for newspapers, and add them to two thirds of $373,337 received from postages by the Collins line, within a period of nearly two years, you would still have a sum vastly under what we have given them, by way of compensation during that period, at the rate of $385,000 a year. The whole, sir, would not equal the amount of one year's bounty. So, then, it is not true that they receive less compensation than the British give to the Cunarders per trip. Nor is it true, that they have brought in to us, by the receipts of postage which are fairly to be credited to them, anything like the sum which they have already cost us.

Well, then, what does this amendment mean, when fairly considered? It is a proposition to enable Mr. Collins and his company to sail these steam-ships as they may choose, from the proceeds of the Treasury of the United States. They are to sail the ships as they choose. And how, I submit, is national credit, or national reputation concerned in such a contest as this? Why, we all know that, if we open the doors and enable the owners of steam-ships and steam lines to come in to be supplied with money ad libitum, out of the Treasury, we can maintain that sort of competition with Great Britain. But what do we gain by such an achievement, after we have accomplished it? It would be an achievement, I admit, if we were to develop a self-sustaining business. It would be an achievement if we were to develop a new resource, which hereafter would sustain itself and redound to the profit and credit of the country. But is it any credit to us to succeed in this barren contest, not for power, for it would give us no power, but merely to gratify this desire to sail a ship across the Atlantic as fast as the English ships, if we do so at the expense of our National Treasury? When we come to examine it a little further, we shall find that we do it by ingrafting a dangerous principle upon our system of legislation; that we do it by inflicting great injustice upon other and meritorious classes of the community; that we do it to the injury of a branch of the navigating business which is self-sustaining, and which can sustain itself, if the Government does not interfere to favor others at its expenses.

Sir, is there anything, in such a triumph as this, to be effected by legislation so unjust, which can gratify national pride? Would it not excite a far different emotion in the minds of those who look to wise and just legislation as the chief glory of the country?

Upon what principle is it, then, that we thus justify the grant of this bounty, this meregratuity, to enable steam lines to carry freight and passengers at the expense of the Government? I know that, at one time, it was said that we could thus maintain a navy upon cheaper terms than we could without this system. It was said that it was a substitute for a navy. Under that plausible and seductive cry, many, I know, were carried off; but I believe that there are very few who now maintain that it is in this way that we can build up a steam navy. Why, the very officers who reported upon these ships when they were examined, have said, in relation to them, that the term in the contract that they should be adapted to war purposes was indefinite; that a vessel might be used for many purposes in war, and yet not be fitted for war steamers. Commodore M. C. Perry and Commander R. B. Cunningham, in their report, say:

"In the conversion of these vessels to war purposes, considerable alteration would be required; and though they can never be made equal to those steamers originally designed and constructed expressly for the Navy, still, they can be rendered available in cases of emergency, and without any very great disbursement of money."

Commander Cunningham, in his report, says:

"The term 'adapted to war purposes,' used, I believe, in all contracts heretofore made by the Government, with individuals or companies, is, in my opinion, too vague and general to admit of strict or rigid construction. A sea steamer may in truth be said to be adapted to war purposes, in a certain degree, when she is capable of transporting a large body of men, with their necessary baggage and munitions of war from any one point to any other point on our Atlantic coast—be fully equal to the severe duty of towing the largest class of line-of-battle-ships in or out of action, as the case may be—and yet be incapable, from the slight construction of her upper works, of carrying three heavy pivot guns or a small battery of carriage guns."

In the report of the Secretary of the Navy, which is to be found in the same document, it will be seen that he distinctly repudiates the idea that these steamers are fit for the purposes of war steamers. Who would take any war steamer, built for the purposes of war, either in the British or American service, and attempt to maintain a competition with steam-ships for passengers and freight? Why not? Because, in fitting steamers for war, they are necessarily so heavy in their construction that they cannot have the requisite speed to accomplish such purposes as the Collins liners and the Cunarders accomplish.

Again: I have heard it doubted by officers of the Navy, in whose opinions I have great reliance, whether side-wheel steamers can be converted into efficient war steamers. I have heard it doubted whether the side-wheel itself does not incapacitate a steamer; whether it does not prevent the training of the guns properly; whether the machinery of such steamers is not so much exposed as to cause them to be disabled at the commencement of an action; whether, in short, any but a ship that has its wheel in the stern can be fitted up for war purposes. But these are questions with which I do not meddle. They belong to "experts;" and I do not claim to belong to that class. I only speak of such information as I have derived from conversation with some of the most intelligent officers in our service. But suppose, for the purpose of testing this thing, that the British were to undertake to convert their navy—the vessels which move by sails—to the carrying of freight and passengers, should we emulate them, by engaging in the same business? Suppose that a company were to come here from New York or Boston, and say that, if the Government would help them, they would build such packets to move by sails as could be converted into war ships hereafter; and that, in the mean time, if we would give them so much per annum, they would carry passengers and freight, would any one think of agreeing to any such proposition? No, sir. And yet such vessels of commerce could be as easily converted into ships-of-war as these commercial steamers could be used for the purposes of war. The real purpose was to build up a steam marine by bounties and the aid of Government; and the naval service was rather the pretext than the object.

Then it comes to this, that we must maintain this line, cost what it may, in this struggle of national rivalry; because, if we do not (and that is the real ground on which the appeal is made) the British will sustain their steamers, and then they will get the business of transporting by steam, freight, passengers, and mails—that they will thus acquire a monopoly of the business, and that we shall nothave our share. Clearly, then, the object is to establish a commercial steam marine by Government bounties. Now, I ask if that is not precisely the argument with which the iron men come to us and ask for more protection? What do they say? They say just as it is said for the Collins line, that the British have raised up their works by a long system of protection. They say, "Give us protection, that ours may become sufficiently strong and secure to withstand the effects of competition." The Collins line men say, "Give us this assistance for a while, and we will become a self-sustaining enterprise; we will find that we shall be able to sustain ourselves—that the business will support itself." The iron men say, "Give us a little more protection for a while, and, after some time, these duties will no longer be necessary, for we shall be able to sustain ourselves in the face of all competition."

There is not an argument which can be used for the support of these steamers out of the Treasury of the United States, which, to my mind, does not apply with equal force to the imposition of duties for the protection and support of the iron interest. There is not an argument against protection to iron which does not apply, in my opinion, against protection to steam. Why, what is the complaint? That you protect one class at the expense of another. Have we not before us a memorial from merchants and ship-owners of New York, who protest that they are injured by these steamers which we support out of the Treasury; that the steamers compete with them for the carriage of passengers and freight? Have we not a memorial signed by most respectable merchants and ship-owners in that city attesting this fact? Is it not true? Does it not interfere? and is it proper that we should thus give from the Treasury bounties to an enterprise which is calculated to interfere with the legitimate profits of a self-sustaining business, and one so meritorious, one so worthy of the pride of every American heart as that of our great navigating interest, which heretofore has sustained itself? Look at the contrast. We have, in relation to that interest, thrown the gauntlet to the world. We have said to the rest of the world, Repeal your discriminating duties upon tonnage, and we will repeal ours. All that we ask is fair play and an open sea; and if you can beat us we will take the consequences. What has been the result? What has it been but triumphant and glorious to us, in trying the generous self-reliance of those who dared to risk the experiment? Now, we have commenced this system; and it is proposed that we shall plunge still deeper into a system which is calculated to encourage the steam marine at the expense of the other interests of the community, not only injuring them, but producing complaints, jealousies, and dissatisfactions, which, in my opinion, are well founded.

Let us see how nearly these arguments are analogous. How does it operate as between sections? It is complained of the protective system, when we come to apply it to iron, and woolsens, and cottons, that it benefits one section at the expense of another. How is this? Why, you start these lines from New York. She has lines supported at the expense of the Government, and running everywhere. If you are to afford Government aid and patronage, would not justice require that you should give it to poorer cities—to those that are less able to help themselves? Would not justice require that you should afford it to some other towns, in order to develop the resources of the places from which other lines might start and open a new trade in the country? If we pursue this system, shall we not be bound in justice to attend to other sections? If we give this aid to the Collins line, and New York, how can we refuse it to Philadelphia, and Charleston, and Norfolk, and Baltimore, and Mobile, and New Orleans? With what justice can we thus afford it to the richest city in the Union, and deny it to all the others? I desire to see New York grow. I desire to see her commerce have every facility and aid which legitimately belongs to it; but I am unwilling that injustice shall be done as between classes in this country, or as between different sections. Nor is there anything in this argument (for it is the old protective argument over again) that, if we do not sustain our lines in the competition, the British will acquire a monopoly, and that they will sweep our steamers from the seas. Now, the business of carrying freight and passengers is a business which either pays by itself, or it does not pay. If it does pay, there is no need of a bounty to aid it from Government. If it does not pay, then the more the British lines carry at the expense of that Government, the worse it will be for her, and the better it will be for us; because it will be a transfer which she will be annually making from the pockets of her people to ourselves.

But it is said that a period will come at which the business will be self-sustaining—at which the business will have grown to be so large, that those persons will no longer want this protection. I pray to know, if, when that period comes—when the business is self-sustaining, will not our steamers, our merchants, and our enterprising men go into it? When it does sustain itself, will they not go into it with as many chances of success as the English ship-owners? With greater chances, indeed; for in the interim we shall have gained, and the British will have lost by carrying our freights and passengers at less than the real cost. And in so large a business would not the less grow so much from year to year as to prove intolerable to those who suffered it? Look at it in whatever light you may, I think you will find that you cannot conduct this system without manifest injustice and impropriety. This thing of national steam-yachting over the ocean—a contest between the two nations to see who can run the fastest steamship, out of their respective treasuries—is a very expensive amusement, and one which will hardly pay. It is an amusement which will cost the people of both countries dearly, if they enter fully into it. For one, I am not disposed to carry it further. I am for carrying out the contract with Collins. I am for giving him what we promised to give him, and if he should come to bring any more to the Government by the sea postages than we give him, I am willing that he should have all of that. I am willing to give it, because that would be putting the enterprise on a self-sustaining footing. I am willing to hold out that sort of encouragement to encourage enterprise and develop trade; but I am not willing to enable him, or any other person, or company, to run steamships at the expense of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With the consent of the Senator from Virginia, I wish to make a few inquiries of him. I hardly know how to vote, and I have come to no determination as to the manner in which I shall cast my vote; but I want information. I wish the gentleman to state, because his attention has been directed, no doubt, to the point, if he knows, or whether he does or does not know, that this line is not self-sustaining. I wish to know, from those who may address the Senate upon the subject, whether they have turned their attention to the amount of the capital they invested in building the ships, and the capital employed in hands and labor, and then the profits from freight and passengers? It seems to me, that in this investigation before us, these would be very proper inquiries, and I should like to hear some information in regard to them.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator from Virginia will permit me, for a moment, I will state that there was a sworn statement laid before the committee. These vessels cost within a fraction of $3,000,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How many vessels are there?

Mr. GWIN. There are four: the Atlantic, the Pacific, the Arctic, and the Baltic. The average running expense of twenty-eight trips was $65,000 and odd, and the actual receipts $48,000; showing a loss on each trip of nearly $17,000, or on twenty trips of $338,000. This statement was sworn to before the Naval Committee.

Mr. BORLAND. Does that include the amount received from the Government?

Mr. GWIN. Everything.

Mr. HUNTER. They state the loss to be $17,000 a trip, after the $19,000 paid by the Government is taken out. If this statement of the proprietors of the Collins line be true, then the amendment is futile. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment in connection with this statement. The proprietors of this line say, that after this receipt of $19,000 per trip from the Government, they still lose $17,000 each trip. It is proposed in this amendment to raise the price paid to them from $19,000 to $33,000 per trip. That is an increase of about $14,000 a trip; so that if we add that sum, they will still be losing $3,000 or $4,000 per trip. There will be that loss on the mere running of the ships, allowing nothing for a fund to be laid up for repairs—nothing for interest on the investment. What good will it afford them, then, to extend the relief asked for by this amendment? When these vessels want repairs, and when they are worn out, there will be no fund to supply them, and they will go down. Then, in point of fact, this amendment would afford no relief.

Mr. GWIN. There was an estimate made of the amount necessary for annual repairs. The overplus was the interest account, which the committee were not determined to allow. The loss is interest upon the capital invested. There is an estimate made for annual repairs. There is an estimate made for each of the twenty-six trips. We know how much it has cost to keep the vessels in repair, and how much has been received, and what has been expended.

Mr. HUNTER. That would still leave a loss of some three or four thousand dollars a trip, and of all the interest—say $180,000—annually. I submit, then, that they could have no motive to go on with a business which was inflicting on them an annual or a monthly loss of even that amount. But why should we go to an expense of more than $600,000, or perhaps more than $800,000 a year—and I do not know which alternative of this amendment will be adopted. I do not know whether they will be rated at $33,000 for twenty-six trips, or that the $236,000 additional is to be added to the $385,000 now allowed.—I ask, why should we go into this expenditure for the purpose of enabling these men, who have embarked in the enterprise, to regain the money which they have lost?

We agreed to their own proposition. They came here and made proposals. They petitioned for a law, which we granted them. We not only gave the sum of $385,000 per annum, but we advanced to them $385,000, to enable them to complete their ships. In trying the experiment, they have lost; and they make such a showing as renders it improbable that they ever can make out of it a business which will sustain itself. What motive, then, have we to prosecute it any further? What good will it do to us to run these ships some three, or four, or five years longer, and, at the end of that time, come to the same conclusion to which we are brought now, that the business will not support itself, and that it must be abandoned, unless we choose to preserve it by way of a national amusement?

Why, it would be better to abandon it now; and if we thought, from the circumstance of their having entered into the enterprise, that they had claims upon the nation, it would be better to compensate them for whatever they have lost, and put an end to the system, rather than to ingraft it upon our legislation. If we commence with this, we must favor other lines. We cannot, with justice, shut our eyes to the claims of other parts. Shall we feed only the rich, and deny everything to the poor? If you are to act upon the principle of treating the different portions of the country with a parental care, you ought to turn to the weak, for the purpose of sustaining them, and not feed to repletion the strong, for the purpose of sustaining them, and in such a manner as throws the expense upon the weak.

Mr. MILLER next obtained the floor; but yielded to the suggestions of Senators; and, On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order, the consideration of the bill from the Senate, "to enforce discipline and promote good conduct in the Navy of the United States."

VIRGINIA MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. MEADE, by unanimous consent, presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, upon the subject of the Virginia military land warrants; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ORR. I desire to renew the request made yesterday, that an hour may be appropriated this morning to the call of committees for reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] is entitled to the floor. If that gentleman and the House assent to it, the course suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina will be pursued.

Mr. FITCH. I rise to a question of order. My object yesterday in moving the previous question on this bill was to devote the morning hour, which has been occupied for some time by this bill, to the call of committees for reports. It strikes me that this bill is improperly occupying the morning hour. If it can be placed elsewhere, I have no desire to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair recollects aright, this bill was introduced by unanimous consent.

Mr. FITCH. It is a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands, but it was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, by the unanimous consent of the House, and therefore is not confined exclusively to the morning hour.

Mr. FITCH. If the bill can be set aside until the morning hour has passed, I shall not insist upon the call for the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. I object to the bill being set aside.

Mr. MILLSON. Suppose the House should devote the morning hour to the call of committees for reports, when will the House resume the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. This bill is the first thing in order in the House during the morning hour, and throughout the day; and its consideration can only be interrupted by the introduction of a privileged motion, such as to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

Mr. ORR. The bill would come up then at the expiration of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It would. The bill can now be passed over informally, if the House desires it.

Mr. SMART. I object.

Mr. FITCH. I must then insist that the gentleman from Virginia shall renew the call for the previous question, when he has made his personal explanation.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I hope, then, that the gentleman from Virginia will allow me five minutes for personal explanation.

Mr. MILLSON. I will do so.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I want to see if I understand what point of the compass the House is at. I understand that this matter comes up regularly in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that this bill, having been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by the unanimous consent of the House, is the first business in the House during the morning hour, and throughout the day, on each day until it is disposed of.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand, then, that it comes up regularly during the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It comes up in the House regularly from day to day until disposed of, as the unfinished business of the preceding day.

Mr. ORR. Does the time consumed in the consideration of this bill come out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

DISCIPLINE IN THE NAVY.

Mr. MILLSON. I should not have thought it necessary to trouble the House with any further observations upon this bill, but for some remarks made by my colleague [Mr. Bocock] a few days ago. I do not believe that he intended to do me any injustice, but he was not so discriminating as he usually is in the selection of his phraseology, and he has thus attributed to me designs and sentiments which are just the reverse of those I really entertain. I am very much surprised that there should have been any issue between my colleague and myself. The House will recollect, that although he sustained the bill reported from the Naval Committee, yet, he has since said that he means to support the amendment offered by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Stanton,] to the substitute introduced by me. And, sir, when the House recollects that my colleague distinctly stated that the amendment of the honorable chairman had been prepared almost for the express purpose of obviating the objections which I had urged against the bill, it will be a matter of surprise that, while thus giving this practical evidence of his concurrence in the views which I submitted, he should have thought it at all necessary to place himself in an attitude of antagonism towards me. In the recent debate, he, himself, said that the bill gave a larger discretionary power to the commanding officer than was at all necessary or desirable. My objection to the bill was based upon that ground; and yet, concurring with me, as he did in those views, there was scarcely a single position that I assumed which he did not eagerly, and even virulently, assail. He declared that he could not support my substitute because it was too severe. Sir, I wish he was now here; I would ask him—and in his absence I call upon the honorable chairman of the committee to tell me—one single instance in which the substitute that I introduced is more severe than the original bill. I will tell him many in which it is less so. All the punishments provided for in the substitute are of the same kind as those contained in the bill, and whenever there is any difference at all, it is because I have modified and softened them.

But, sir, my honorable colleague, doubtless by the injudicious selection of language—and I am sure, without the least intention to do me any injustice—has placed me in a position in reference to this question which I am very unwilling to assume. The reports made of his remarks in the National Intelligencer and Republic—reports entirely justified by the tenor of his speech—represent me as having come forward to recommend a system of punishments most inhuman and revolting in their nature. Thus, he says:

"My colleague has come forward to readopt that old act, (the act of 1800,) with all its faults, and with all its antiquated punishments."

Again he says:

"I maintain that the bill of the committee is better than the gentleman's bill which reenacts the law of 1800."

Again he says:

"These are the provisions of the law of 1800, reenacted by my colleague's substitute."

Again:

"Let these sympathetic gentlemen listen to a description of the punishments which are still authorized in the Navy, and which they recommend still to retain."

Again:

"My colleague puts in a special provision in his bill to reenact and authorize those modes of punishment."

And again he says:

"If there be stricken from my colleague's substitute the provision reenacting the law of 1800," &c.

Now, here are six distinct instances in which my colleague attributes to my substitute a provision reenacting the law of 1800. Sir, there is not a solitary clause or feature in the substitute which "reenacts," as my colleague phrases it, "the law of 1800." Why, sir, the law of 1800 has never been repealed. It is now the law of the land, except as to the punishment by stripes. There is no occasion to reenact the provisions of that law.

The substitute which I offered does not repeal the law of 1800; and because it does not do so, my colleague refers to it as reenacting the law of 1800. Why, sir, I might say exactly the same thing of the bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and of the substitute now offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Stanton,] for neither repeals the law of 1800.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, (interposing.) The gentleman's colleague is not present to answer for himself, but I think I understand the position which he intended to maintain, and I think his position is correct. The provision in the law of 1800, allowing the commander of a vessel to confine a sailor ad libitum, in irons, or otherwise, in my judgment would unquestionably be repealed by the bill proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs. That was the idea of Mr. Bocock, and that was my belief. The bill expressly provides that no confinement shall exceed a certain length of time. Besides that, in providing specific punishments, and designating the punishments which the commander of a vessel can inflict upon a sailor, all others previously employed are necessarily excluded by a well-known principle of law. But with the gentleman's bill, it is precisely the contrary, and it is, as Mr. Bocock asserts, a virtual reenactment of that provision of the law of 1800; because nothing is given to, or taken from the commander of a vessel; but all the power is put in the hands of a court-martial.

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman's explanation does not remove the difficulty in the least degree; and he would have found, if he had listened a moment longer, that I intended to do justice to my colleague's opinions upon this subject, by showing how he had fallen into error, or rather into the loose phraseology which he adopted in referring to my bill. I say, sir, that conferring particular powers upon a commanding officer of the Navy does not necessarily take from him the powers which the law confers upon him at the present time, if there be no express provision in the bill repealing the act of 1800, and depriving him of the authority conferred upon him by that law.

But, sir, however that may be, it does not touch the point I am now considering. My object is to call the attention of the House to the statement of my colleague, that certain punishments, which, I say, never were lawful, and others which are no longer so, were recommended and reenacted by my substitute. He quotes from the articles of war several clauses providing for the infliction of punishments by the captain, and among them one which declares that, for some offences, "a private shall be put in irons, or flogged, at the discretion of the captain," &c. And then, he says, these are provisions of the law of 1800, reenacted by my substitute. Now, my colleague does me great injustice when he makes that statement. He certainly did not mean to say that my substitute reenacts punishment by flogging. Yet his statement amounts to that. I know that he is the last man in this House intentionally to do me injustice. The kind feelings and cordial regard existing between us would forbid such a thing, even if he were capable of such a course towards any one. I am now complaining of his want of care in presenting his argument; but this renders it not the less necessary to set my own position right before the House.

Now, what is the provision in the substitute offered by me, upon which my colleague bases his argument? It is this:

"Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That any punishment authorized by this act to be inflicted by a summary court-martial, may likewise be inflicted by any general court-martial: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to abridge the powers of such general court-martial in respect to punishments now authorized to be adjudged, nor to take from any commanding officer the right to order such punishments as, by law, he may now inflict of his own authority."

Now, the sole object of that section was to prevent the inference from being drawn, that by conferring these powers upon the summary court-martial, you thereby took them from the general court-martial; and that, by giving them to the general court-martial, you meant to deny all of them to the commanding officer, who, by the existing law, is vested with some of them—such as the power of confinement. It is only the exclusion of a conclusion. It was put in for greater precaution. My leading object in offering this substitute was to provide for the establishment of a summary court-martial. But I did not wish, in any degree, to interfere with the existing powers of the general court-martial, or of the commanding officer. And, as far as the effect of that proviso is concerned, neither the court nor the commander could inflict any punishment not now authorized by law.

But my colleague read, from a literary magazine, accounts of certain cruel punishments which, he says, have been, and may be, inflicted in the Navy, such as cruekying, bucking, and keelhauling; and he states that I put in a special provision in my bill to reenact and authorize these modes of punishment. He doubtless alludes to the provision I have just read. The bare reading of it is a sufficient answer to this charge. Can my colleague really suppose that these punishments are authorized by the existing law? He seems, indeed, to think so; and I do not know but he succeeded in making an impression upon the House, the other day, by the recital of these cruel punishments. Now, here I take issue with my colleague. I say that no such punishments can be, or ever could be, inflicted by law, in the American Navy.

I go further. I say that no such punishments ever have been inflicted in the American Navy. As to this punishment of keelhauling, which my colleague says is authorized and sanctioned by law in the American Navy, I beg to inform him that it has never been inflicted in any navy within the last hundred and fifty years, and I believe it has never been resorted to in any naval service except, perhaps, in the Dutch Navy, in the time of Van Tromp.

As to the punishment of bucking, of which my colleague gave so graphic an account the other day, I will inform him that within the past few days I have held conversation with three officers of the highest rank in the American Navy. Two of them informed me that about a year ago they were members of a court-martial held in the city of New York, and composed of twelve captains. One of the witnesses having in the course of the testimony used the expression "bucking," the judge advocate, after the court was cleared, inquired of some member what was meant by that term; and out of these twelve naval commanders there was not one who even knew the meaning of the phrase; and yet my colleague speaks of this punishment of bucking as one authorized by the act of 1800, and which he supposed it was the special object of my substitute to recommend and reenact! Now, will my colleague say that these unusual punishments, a description of which he read from some literary journal, are expressly authorized by the existing law? I am sure he cannot say that. How, then, does he seek to establish his position? Why, he says the commanding officer is authorized to inflict punishment according to the usage of the sea service. Yet, that gentleman, in another part of his remarks, said these punishments were so cruel that commanding officers would not inflict them at all. Now, if they are so cruel that they are not inflicted at all, then they are not usages of the sea service—if not usages of the sea service, they are not authorized by law. So that my colleague's argument is a complete felo de se. His very reasoning disproves his own conclusions.

Mr. BOCK. I have this moment come into the Hall. I regret that I have not heard my colleague's logic.

Mr. MILLSON. I regret that my colleague has not: for though I have not as much of that commodity as he was pleased to ascribe to me some days ago, I endeavor to make the best use of what I have; and I wish that he could have had the opportunity of judging whether it was too attenuated to go to the mark, as he seemed to think was the case on a former occasion. Now, sir, my colleague has been endeavoring to prove that the punishments provided for in my substitute were so severe that he could not sustain my proposition on that account. He thus places himself in a position of direct antagonism with the chairman of the Naval Committee, [Mr. STANTON,] as well as other gentlemen who urged the passage of this bill. My colleague says it was designed to take from the captain the exercise of these arbitrary powers. But they urged the passage of that bill for precisely the opposite reasons. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] complained of the defeat of the bill, and said he had been told by a naval surgeon that insubordination had been carried to such an extreme that sailors on board our vessels were daily and habitually accustomed to use the foulest, most profane, and even the most licentious language to their officers, and that there was no punishment for it. The same gentleman also quoted a remark made by my colleague from the Accomac district, [Mr. BAYLY,] about a sailor who threw a missile at his commanding officer, and he said he did not wonder at it, for insubordination had run riot. On the same occasion, the chairman of the Naval Committee said: "Crime must not go unpunished. 'You must give this high and important power to the commanders of vessels, or else the service will go to destruction. This is the feeling of the whole Navy.' It was a proper and just remark of the chairman of the committee. But how does this consist with the declaration of my colleague, who urged the passage of the bill, not for the purpose of strengthening the executive arm, not for the purpose of giving authority to the commanding officer to repress this insubordination, but for the purpose of weakening his authority, and taking from him the right to inflict those inhuman and cruel punishments, which he styled 'bucking,' 'crucifying,' and 'keelhauling?'" No, sir, my colleague, in another part of his address, seemed to think that it would be difficult to sustain his original position, and, forgetting, perhaps, that he had said there was too much authority in the commanding officer, and that it was the object of that Senate bill to take from him this arbitrary power, he appealed to the House most earnestly and said that it was absolutely necessary that there should be some authority vested in the hands of the captain, and protested against taking it from him.

Mr. BOCK. (interrupting.) If my colleague will allow me, I will say that I have not had the pleasure of hearing the whole of his remarks this morning. If the whole of it has been like the specimen which I have heard, I think his logic, always good, has not been particularly successful in this case. The first thing I heard my colleague say, when I came into this House, was this: that because the punishment is too arbitrary to be used by an American captain, that, therefore, it is not in conformity with the usages of the sea. Perhaps my colleague's view of sea service does not extend beyond American ships. The usages of the sea are made up of the usages of all sailors, on all ships, and on all seas, whether they are American sailors or not. The thing, or act, may be exactly conformable to the usages of the sea, and yet it may be true that it had gone into disuse among American officers, and would have continued in disuse in American service, unless recognized by the substitute of my colleague.

The next thing I heard my colleague say to the House was, that I was forgetful in one part of my address of what I had stated in another part. But, sir, he confounds what I said in relation to one subject, with what I said in relation to another subject. In the latter part of my remarks, I was combating the idea of taking all authority from the captains of vessels, and giving them to these ship courts. I was not saying that there was no authority now in the captains. I did not countenance any such idea as that. I was combating the doctrine that there were to be ship courts, and that all power was to be given into their hands, and it was in that connection that I said that it was absolutely essential that some authority should be left in the hands of the commanding officers of vessels.

Mr. MILLSON. I am always pleased to hear my colleague, and particularly when he speaks as earnestly as he has recently done. I wish he had heard the whole of my remarks. If he had, I think he would have found that there was little necessity for the warmth which he displays upon this occasion. For while I was combating the position of my colleague, yet I was careful to do him all the justice to which I knew he was entitled. I expressly absolved him from all intention to place me in an unfair and unjust position before this House. I was following the argument of my colleague, and combating it.

Mr. BOCK. When I came into this House this morning, from which I have been detained by indisposition for several days past, I did not know what had been the style and character of that part of my colleague's remarks which had been made before I came in. I thought that the latter part, the part which I did hear, was a little unfair, and calculated to do me injustice. From what he has now stated, I am free to say, that if I had known the real character of the remarks which my colleague had made, I should not have said anything on the occasion, or else I should have pitched my remarks upon a different key. I am glad, however, that I have not said anything calculated or designed to injure or wound my friend, for there are few men in this House whom I can so designate with as much propriety as my colleague. I take this occasion to say that I had no idea, and did not intend to convey the idea, in the remarks which I made upon this subject upon a former occasion, that my colleague did actually design to reestablish these antiquated usages, though I thought that it would be the effect of his bill to do so. I had no idea that he designed it; but he had argued against the Senate bill—a bill which met the approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs—by adverting to the remote and possible abuses to which it might lead. I thought it was a fair argument to show the possible consequences which might result from his bill. I only did it as an offset to the remarks which he had made.

Mr. MILLSON. My purpose is to show, that by no forced construction of language could any such design, or any such effect, be imputed to my amendment.

But first, I must resume the thread of my discourse, at the point where my colleague interrupted me, and that is in reference to what he supposes the unfair presentation of his argument. I take him now upon his own explanation. He says, that when he declared there must be some authority vested in the captain, he was commenting upon the idea presented in my substitute, of taking the power from the hands of the captain, and giving it to a summary court-martial. That is what my colleague now says he intended to express. Well, sir, I knew that very well; and it was precisely that inconsistency which I was about to show to the House; for while, in the first part of his argument, he maintained that my bill did not take these powers from the hands of the captain, but that the very effect of it would be to reenact and reestablish these cruel punishments, and authorize the commanding officer to inflict them, he afterwards argued, as if he supposed no such effect would be produced, and that the passage of my substitute would take too much power from the commanding officer; for he insisted that it was "absolutely necessary that there should be some authority vested in the hands of the captain," and complained of the attempt to transfer it to a summary court. Well, sir, if my substitute does take so much power from the hands of the captain, and vest it in a summary court-martial, as he said the other day, and as he now says again, how can it be that it increases his authority by recognizing his right to inflict all those old punishments?

My colleague says that he does not refer to the substitute, but to the remarks I made in support of the substitute. I refer my colleague to the printed report of my remarks, and he will find that I expressly stated, that I did not design so take any power from the hands of the captain, but to leave him to the exercise of that authority which he now has by law.

But I pass from the consideration of this part of the subject altogether, which has already employed me a much longer time than I intended.

I will say a word or two in reference to that part of the bill to which my colleague objects, and that is the part establishing a summary court-martial. One of his objections to this is, that he does not wish to encourage disputes between the captain and his sailors, and he says the captain must not squabble on every little petty affair before his inferior officers. My colleague has, perhaps, never attended a naval court-martial. My locality has given me an advantage over him in this respect. I have been a frequent attendant at naval courts-martial. It has been my fortune, from time to time, to appear before such courts, as counsel for officers of every grade and rank, from captain down to midshipman. I am somewhat familiar with their proceedings, and if my colleague supposes that there ever has been, or ever can be, under the existing organization of these courts, any squabble between the captain and the sailors, or anybody else, he entertains erroneous notions of these tribunals. Does he suppose that the captain is to be the prosecutor? The captain is vested, by this bill, with the power of pardon. My colleague need not apprehend, then, any squabbling over little affairs between the captain and the sailors. Indeed, he will find that the substitute which I have offered does not provide for the establishment of a court-martial to determine little affairs at all. It expressly declares that no case shall be brought before the summary court-martial, except such as require greater punishment than the captain is now authorized to inflict of his own authority. He says, too, it may sometimes happen that you cannot get a sufficient number of commissioned officers to form a court-martial. Certainly it may. In rare cases it may so happen; but what then? The substitute provides a tribunal for the ascertainment of crimes, and the punishment of offenses which could be promptly organized in a vast majority of cases; and if it should not apply to all, it leaves them exactly where they now are. I have known instances where sailors have been brought into port, charged with serious offenses, and in consequence of their term of service having expired before they arrived in the United States, where only the Secretary of the Navy could convene a court-martial, they were obliged to be discharged without any trial or punishment at all.

Now, sir, the summary courts-martial will enable the commanding officer to try all offenses which are not of so heinous a character as imperatively to demand a trial by a court of higher jurisdiction; but I do not deem it necessary to amplify this part of the case, for my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. PRICE,] in his remarks on yesterday, has expressed himself so clearly, and urged such forcible replies to the objections stated to that part of the bill, that it would be a work of supererogation to add anything to what he has so ably said.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman to allow me a few moments.

Mr. MILLSON. Certainly; but before I yield to the gentleman, I wish to make another observation. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] the other day, thought it necessary to advert to my remark in reference to the action of the Senate upon this bill, and seemed to suppose that I had urged a grave charge against that body, and declared that they had acted upon this bill without due consideration. Now, sir, I am very unwilling to be supposed unmindful of those courtesies which are due from the members of this House to the other branch of Congress. I assure the gentleman that I designed no disparagement to the Senate, nor should I have alluded to their action upon this bill at all, but that the gentleman himself had previously referred to it, saying that the bill had borne the light there, and would bear the light here. I only meant to say that that bill seemed to have met with but little consideration in the Senate. It excited little interest; very little attention seemed to have been given to the subject, and the yeas and nays were not even called. What I said was, that I strongly suspected the Senate may have supposed they were voting upon the bill in its original form, rather than that in which it was presented by the amendments offered from the committee. I have thought it proper to say thus much, because I am not willing to be considered unmindful of the proprieties which should be observed towards the other branch of Congress.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. With the gentleman's permission, I desire to make a few remarks, in reply to some that fell from the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PRICE] yesterday. I shall detain the House but a very few moments, and then, by the arrangement made with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FITCH], the previous question will be called.

Now, one of the objections made to this bill by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PRICE] was, that it did not go to the whole extent of the mischief to be remedied, and that it was not a total revision of the naval code. The gentleman admits, and everybody must admit, that such a revision of the naval code would be a work of very great importance; and the Naval Committee upon former occasions, and during this session, have thought that the proper mode of reorganizing the Navy would be to apply to the head of the Navy. Now, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PRICE] seems to think that course objectionable, because, he says, the Secretary of the Navy consults nobody but the old officers around him. But I wish to say to that gentleman, and to the House, that this very provision was suggested to me, and adopted upon the recommendation of one of the lieutenants of the Navy, whose authority, I am sure, would be as great and as commanding as that of any other officer in that corps, or all of them combined. I will further say, that I never introduced a bill into this House, bearing essentially upon the interests of the Navy, without consulting officers of all grades; and I do not think the gentleman from New Jersey is doing exact justice to the Secretary of the Navy, to the Administration, or to any person who may, at any time, occupy those high positions, in the supposition that in providing for the government of the Navy they will take the advice of a single corps of officers, high or low. The true difficulty in this case, and the only point of difference between the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PRICE] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] and the Naval Committee is, whether the punishment of the sailor for these inferior offenses should be inflicted by the commanding officer or by a court-martial.

I have said, sir, and I adhere to the declaration, for I believe the truth of it firmly, that such a court-martial, upon the deck of a ship at sea, would be a mere mockery of justice. Those stiff and formal rules of proceeding, to which the gentleman refers, as being peculiar to courts-martial, would be impossible; or, if they would be possible, upon the deck of a ship they would be nothing more than a mere farce. The proceedings would be conducted in writing, with all the formalities of a regular court-martial; and I must be allowed to say, sir, that if there be anything which needs reform in our Navy, the very thing of all others which needs it the most is this proceeding by court-martial; for you frequently see proceedings of this kind conducted at very great expense, day after day, and month after month, and upon a cause which would be tried as well, and justice administered perhaps better, in any circuit court in the country, in the course of two or three days. And this, sir, is the system of proceeding these gentlemen propose to substitute for the effective mode of punishment recently repealed by Congress. Now, sir, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PRICE] does not object to the cruelty of these punishments, but on the contrary, he says that the punishments which I propose, in my substitute, are not sufficient. They are not sufficiently severe, he says; but the difficulty is, that the severe punishment which he proposes, shall be inflicted in a court-martial, composed of three officers, upon the quarter-deck of a ship. Now, I hold in my hand a paper, the National Democrat, published in New York, which finds fault with the bill presented by the Naval Committee, as passed by the Senate, representing the punishments contained in it as very cruel—very cruel, indeed. It says:

"We have always acknowledged the necessity of strict discipline in the Navy. It is a service that from its nature does not admit of the principles of republicanism. You cannot have a jury on board of a ship. You cannot have a republic in the military service of the country, upon shore or on sea."

"The commander, of necessity, is an autocrat, and the officers are his nobles; but, surely, in this free Republic, and in this enlightened age, some rules of discipline might have been framed and approved of that would not have subjected the so-called free American seaman to punishments that a savage would die rather than submit to."

Well, now, this paper thinks that the savage would die rather than submit to the punishment, the power to inflict which this gentleman proposed should be conferred upon the commanding officer.

Mr. PRICE. Do me the justice to say that I did prefer that no action should be had before this House upon either of these bills; and that an entire revision should be made, and more humane punishments should be provided in that revision. And I further distinctly said, that if one of these bills should pass this House, I should prefer the authority to inflict punishment to be given to the summary court-martial.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The highest and severest punishment proposed by the original bill was thirty days in irons, on bread and water, with the loss of three months' pay. This was the very severest punishment. Now, by my substitute, I propose to reduce that punishment to ten days on bread and water, or ten days in irons, with the loss of but one month's pay; but that the captain shall not be allowed to inflict but one of these punishments for any single offense. If punishment is to be effective at all, it seems to me that these punishments cannot be considered too severe. This, sir, is all I have to say. The question is between courts-martial upon board a ship, and giving to the commanding officer authority to inflict the punishments necessary to maintain the discipline of the ship. I will further say, sir, it is suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON], that this provision for the establishing of courts-martial on board a ship was stricken out of the bill at the suggestion of Commodore Stockton, chairman of the Naval Committee in the Senate, who is as humane a man, and uttering as humane sentiments as any that have fallen from the gentleman from Virginia, or the gentleman from New Jersey, or any one else.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman will also state that he has since understood that Commodore Stockton changed his views in this regard.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I have not so understood it.

Mr. PRICE. And I further state in all my views expressed yesterday, that I was looking forward to the ameliorating of the punishments that are now known in the Navy, and substituting bounties for good conduct and good discipline, instead of those punishments.

Mr. MILLSON. I am very happy to hear the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PRICE] say that Commodore Stockton has changed his views upon that subject. But, sir, with all deference to the high authority of Commodore Stockton, I should not have changed my original views had there been no alteration in his; for, sir, notwithstanding that the two gentlemen from the Naval Committee distrust the efficacy of the summary court-martial, I cannot forget that this very system of summary courts-martial was recommended by the board of naval officers convened in the city of Washington, of whom I need only mention the names of such men as Morris and Shubrick. I am glad, however, to hear that Commodore Stockton now concurs with them. I will state, moreover, that this system is favored by a large number of other officers of the Navy; and since the original discussion of this question, I have received letters from several of them, favoring the establishment of this very system of summary courts-martial. I do not see the difficulty presented by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] and my colleague from Virginia, [Mr. BOCK], neither of whom,

I imagine, ever attended a naval court-martial in their lives. A word as to the substitute presented by the gentleman from Tennessee. The House will perceive how vast the falling off from the original bill. The Naval Committee, after recommending the passage of the Senate bill, now come forward and propose to vest in the commanding officer only about one thirtieth part of the power which they first proposed. The bill gave him the power to inflict ten punishments, and this amendment only gives him the power to inflict one; and they take off two thirds of the severity of these separate punishments by restricting the punishment of confinement to ten days instead of thirty; so that one third of one tenth makes only one thirtieth of the original severity. Sir, this is certainly a very complimentary tribute to the judgment of this House, in rejecting this bill.

One more remark, and I have done. I must express my dissent from the views of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PRICE] upon one point, which is, that we should stay all action upon this subject until we can revise the whole naval code. I doubt very much whether there ever will be such a revision—at least, in our time; and I see no propriety in postponing action upon a subject which demands immediate attention, because there may be necessity for revising other parts of the system also. In compliance with the promise I made the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FITCH],—

Mr. PRICE. I want, with the permission of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON], to address one word of reply to the remark of the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee, [Mr. STANTON], made a few moments ago. It seems that he wished to impress upon the House that I advocated the cruel and barbarous punishments provided for in this bill.

Mr. STANTON. I do not think they are cruel.

Mr. PRICE. I think that they are. I am taking ground against both of the bills. Let the system of punishments continue as it now exists, in preference to passing the bill or amendments as they are now presented, until a new system can be devised and presented, more fully embracing the principle of rewards—giving bounties, increased pay, and good treatment for good conduct. This is my wish, and I believe my remarks made yesterday will sustain this view.

Mr. MILLSON. In compliance with my promise to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FITCH], I call for the previous question.

Mr. BOCK. I withdraw the motion submitted by me to recommit the bill. I moved it for the purpose of keeping this business before the House.

The call for the previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. LOCKHART. I move that the bill do lie upon the table.

The question was taken and disagreed to.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the amendment of Mr. STANTON of Tennessee, to the substitute of Mr. MILLSON, for the original bill.

The amendment of Mr. STANTON was read by the Clerk.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understand that the amendment which has just been read is offered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, in lieu of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON].

The SPEAKER. It was submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. The difference between them is, that one (the amendment to the substitute) extends power to a court-martial, and the other (that of Mr. MILLSON) to the commanding officer. The amendment of my colleague [Mr. STANTON] provides an asylum for the sailor who has served twenty years, and who has continuously received good-conduct discharges.

Mr. GOODENOW demanded the yeas and nays on the question; which were not ordered.

Mr. TUCK demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and VENABLE, were appointed.

The question was then taken upon Mr. STANTON's substitute, and the tellers reported—yeas 50, noes 52; no quorum.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, APRIL 23, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No 73.

Mr. CLINGMAN asked for another count, to which there was no objection.

Mr. TUCK asked that the amendment be again read.

Mr. HENDRICKS objected.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Is it too late to demand the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. They have been refused by the House.

Mr. TUCK. Let the amendment be read. I am perfectly confident that it is not fully understood.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. JONES. I demand the yeas and nays upon the amendment of my colleague; and I submit to the Chair that the right to have the vote entered upon the Journal, is a constitutional right, and not to be decided as a question of order under the rules. Again: if my recollection serves me, when the Chair counted the affirmative vote that he announced, there were only twenty-two rising—not a sufficient number. It does not require any specific number other than one third of those present to call the yeas and nays; so that, were there only fifteen in the House, three could order the vote to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is fair that the sense of the House should be taken as to whether or not the yeas and nays shall be ordered. For the reason that there was not a quorum present when the call was made and refused, no fair test has been made of the will of the majority, for or against the yeas and nays.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion, in the opinion of the Chair, is not in order, the main question having been ordered, and the House being about to proceed in the execution of that order.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

Mr. GOODENOW. I ask that the amendment be again read, for gentlemen do not, generally, understand it.

Mr. DEAN. I object to the reading.

Mr. GOODENOW. I ask, then, that the sense of the House be tested as to whether the amendment shall be read or not.

The question was then put, and upon a division there were—yeas 63, noes 22; no quorum.

Mr. FOWLER demanded tellers.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I understand the request is, that the particular amendment be read which we have to vote upon. It appears to me that there can be no objection to that; and I trust the gentleman will withdraw his objection, and let us have the amendment read and none other, so that we may know what we are voting upon.

Mr. DEAN. I withdraw my objection.

The amendment of Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, to the substitute of Mr. MILLSON was then again read, as follows:

Strike out all of the said amendment and insert: That the commander of any vessel in the Navy shall have authority to punish offenses committed by petty officers and persons of inferior ratings, by any one of the following punishments, to wit:

First: By diminishing their rations; by restricting their diet to bread and water; by imposing extra police and other duties; and in cases of theft, in addition to any of the foregoing punishments, by making good from the wages of the offender to the owner of the value of the article or articles stolen.

Second: By discharging from the service, with bad-conduct discharge.

Third: By solitary confinement in irons, single or double, on bread and water: Provided, No such confinement shall exceed ten days.

Fourth: By solitary confinement in irons, single or double, not exceeding ten days.

Fifth: By solitary confinement not exceeding two months.

Sixth: By confinement to next inferior rating.

Seventh: By reduction to next inferior rating.

Eighth: By deprivation of liberty on shore, and loss of pay, not to exceed one month, may be added to any of the above-mentioned punishments: Provided, That no sentence to solitary confinement shall be directed to be carried into execution until the surgeon, or senior medical officer on board at the time, has examined the prisoner, and certified that it can be done without serious injury to his health; and it shall be the duty of the commander to remit the whole or any part of any sentence, the execution of which would,

in the opinion of the said surgeon or senior medical officer, produce such injury.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the commander of every ship or vessel in the Navy shall cause a conduct-book to be kept, embracing every petty officer and person of inferior rating under his command, in which shall be noted every instance of meritorious or bad conduct of each man; and the punishment inflicted under this law; and whenever a man is discharged, either at or before the expiration of his term of service, he shall take care that his general character be noted on his discharge, giving to those who merit them, good-conduct discharges; and to those who deserve them bad-conduct discharges; and to those whose conduct shall merit no particular note, discharges in the usual form: Provided, That the character to be given on a discharge shall be ascertained and established under such rules as shall be prescribed by the Navy Department.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That any petty officer, or person of inferior rating, who shall be discharged with a good-conduct discharge, after a service of not less than two years, shall have a preference on reentering the service, and in advance to higher ratings over persons of similar qualifications, but who have not so served; and whenever a petty officer, or person of inferior rating, shall be transferred from one ship or station to another, his character shall be noted on the transfer roll.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That every petty officer, or person of inferior rating, who shall receive a good-conduct discharge, after a continuous service of not less than two years, shall, if he reenters within three months after his discharge, be entitled to a credit on the books of the ship to which he may be first ordered, of three months' wages, at his former rating; and after twenty years' service in the Navy, with good-conduct discharges at the termination of each enlistment, every such petty officer or person of inferior rating shall be entitled to admission to and provision in the Naval Asylum for life, with half the monthly wages of his last enlistment.

The question was then taken on the above amendment, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, John Appleton, William Appleton, Bartlett, Bocoek, Bowie, Briggs, Geo. H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Clingman, Doekert, Florence, Fowler, Thos. J. D. Fuller, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grey, Harper, Hart, Haws, Hebard, Hillyer, Horsford, Howard, Thos. M. Howe, James Johnson, George G. King, Kurtz, Landry, Mann, Martin, McMullin, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, Nabers, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Perkins, Porter, Rantoul, Scurry, Smart, Standley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Ward, Addison White, Alex. White, and Williams—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ashle, Averett, D. J. Bailey, Barrere, Bowne, Bragg, Brenton, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chastain, Cobb, Conger, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dean, Dimmick, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Faulkner, Picklen, Fitch, Floyd, Freeman, Gaylord, Giddings, Green, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Hens, Hibbard, Houston, Jno. W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robt. W. Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, McNair, McQueen, Milson, Molony, John Moore, Morehead, Morrison, Murray, Newton, Olds, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Phelps, Price, Robbins, Ross, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Benj. Stanton, Stone, St. Martin, Stuart, Sweetser, Geo. W. Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Wallace, Watkins, and Yates—86.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ORR. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the substitute of Mr. MILLSON for the original bill.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana, demanded the yeas and nays; and tellers on the yeas and nays were ordered; and Messrs. STUART, and STANTON, of Tennessee, were appointed; who, having made a count, reported—yeas 41, which was deemed to be sufficient.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The reading of the bill and substitute having been called for, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commander of any vessel in the Navy, or of any shore station, shall have authority to punish offenses committed by petty officers and persons of inferior ratings, by any one or more of the following punishments, to wit:

First: By diminishing their rations; by restricting their diet to bread and water; by imposing extra police and other duties; and in cases of theft, in addition to any of the foregoing punishments, by making good from the wages of the offender to the owner of the value of the article or articles stolen.

Second: By discharging from the service, with bad-conduct discharge.

Third: By solitary confinement in irons, single or double, on bread and water: Provided, No such confinement shall exceed thirty days.

Fourth: By solitary confinement in irons, single or double, not exceeding thirty days.

Fifth: By solitary confinement, not exceeding thirty days.

Sixth: By confinement not exceeding two months.

Seventh: By reduction to next inferior rating.

Eighth: By ball and chain, but not to be worn at sea.

Ninth: By deprivation of liberty on shore and loss of pay, not to exceed three months, may be added to any of the above-mentioned punishments: Provided, That no sentence to solitary confinement shall be directed to be carried into execution until the surgeon, or senior medical officer on board at the time, has examined the prisoner and certified that it can be done without serious injury to his health; and it shall be the duty of the commander to remit the whole, or any part of any sentence, the execution of which would, in the opinion of the said surgeon, or senior medical officer, produce such injury.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the commander of every ship or vessel in the Navy shall cause a conduct-book to be kept, embracing every petty officer and person of inferior rating under his command, in which shall be noted every instance of meritorious or bad conduct of each man; and whenever a man is discharged, either at or before the expiration of his term of service, he shall take care that his general character be noted on his discharge, giving to those who merit them good-conduct discharges; and to those who deserve them bad-conduct discharges; and to those whose conduct shall merit no particular note, discharges in the usual form: Provided, That the character to be given on a discharge shall be ascertained and established under such rules as shall be prescribed by the Navy Department.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That any petty officer, or person of inferior rating, who shall be discharged with a good-conduct discharge, after a service of not less than two years, shall have a preference on reentering the service, and in advance to higher ratings over persons of similar qualifications, but who have not so served; and whenever a petty officer, or person of inferior rating, shall be transferred from one ship or station to another, his character shall be noted on the transfer roll.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That every petty officer, or person of inferior rating, who shall receive a good-conduct discharge, after a continuous service of not less than two years, shall, if he reenters within three months after his discharge, be entitled to a credit on the books of the ship to which he may be first ordered, of three months' wages, at his former rating; and after twenty years' service in the Navy, with good-conduct discharges at the termination of each enlistment, every such petty officer, or person of inferior rating, shall be entitled to admission to and provision in the Naval Asylum for life, with half the monthly wages of his last enlistment.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That any punishments authorized by this act may likewise be inflicted by any general court-martial.

Mr. MILLSON's substitute was then read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That summary courts-martial may be ordered upon petty officers and persons of inferior ratings, by the commander of any vessel in the Navy, for the trial of offenses deserving greater punishment than the commander of a vessel is now authorized to inflict of his own authority, but not sufficient to require trial by general court-martial.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That summary courts-martial shall consist of three commissioned officers, and of some competent person to act as recorder, to be appointed by the commanding officer, who shall have authority to order any officer under his command to act in that capacity. Before proceeding to trial, the members shall take the following oath or affirmation, to be administered by the recorder:

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will well and truly try, without prejudice or partiality, the case now pending, according to the evidence which shall be adduced, the laws for the government of the Navy, and my own conscience."

After which the recorder of the court shall take the following oath or affirmation, to be administered by the senior member:

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will keep a true record of the evidence which may be given before this court, and of the proceedings thereof."

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all testimony given before such court shall be given orally, on oath or affirmation, and shall be delivered in presence of the party accused, who shall be allowed to interrogate the witnesses.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That summary courts-martial may sentence petty officers and persons of inferior ratings to any one of the following punishments, according to the nature and degree of the offense, viz:

First: Discharge from the service, with bad-conduct discharge: Provided, That no person shall be discharged in a foreign country, without the approval of the commanding officer of the squadron to which the vessel may be attached.

Second: Solitary confinement in irons, single or double, not exceeding thirty days.

Third: Solitary confinement on bread and water, not exceeding thirty days.

Fourth: Solitary confinement not exceeding thirty days.

Fifth: Confinement not exceeding two months.

Sixth: Reduction to next inferior rating.

Seventh: Deprivation of liberty to visit the shore.

Eighth: Loss of pay, not to exceed three months.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That no such sentence shall be carried into execution without the approval of the officer ordering the court, who shall have the power to remit in part, or altogether, but not to commute any such sentences: And provided, That no sentence to solitary confinement shall be directed to be carried into execution until the surgeon, or senior medical officer on board at the time, has examined the prisoner, and certified that it can be done without serious injury to his health; and it shall be the duty of the commander to submit a court-martial, the execution of which would, in the opinion of the said surgeon or senior medical officer, produce such injury.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the commander of every ship or vessel in the Navy shall cause a conduct-book to be kept, embracing every petty officer, and person of inferior rating, under his command, in which shall be noted every instance of meritorious or bad conduct of each man; and whenever a man is discharged either at or before the expiration of his term of service, he shall take care that his general character be noted on his discharge, giving to those who merit them, good-conduct discharges; and to those who deserve them, bad-conduct discharges; and to those whose conduct shall merit no particular note, discharges in the usual form: Provided, That the character to be given on a discharge shall be ascertained and established under such rules as shall be prescribed by the Navy Department.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That any petty officer, or person of inferior rating, who shall be discharged with a good-conduct discharge, after a service of not less than two years, shall have a preference on reentering the service, and in advance to higher ratings over persons of similar qualifications, but who have not served; and whenever a petty officer, or person of inferior rating, shall be transferred from one ship or station to another, his character shall be noted on the descriptive list.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That every petty officer or person of inferior rating who shall receive a good-conduct discharge, a continuous service of not less than two years, shall, if he reenters within three months after his discharge, be entitled to a credit on the books of the ship to which he may be first ordered, of three months' wages at his former rating.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the proceedings of summary courts-martial shall be conducted under such forms and rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President of the United States; and all such proceedings shall be transmitted, in the usual mode, to the Navy Department.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That any punishment authorized by this act to be inflicted by a summary court-martial, may likewise be inflicted by any general court-martial: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to abridge the powers of such general court-martial, in respect to punishments now authorized to be adjudged, nor to take from any commanding officer the right to order such punishments as by law he may now inflict of his own authority.

The question was then taken on the substitute of Mr. MILLSON, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 66, nays 79; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Averett, Bowne, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Caskey, Chapman, Chastain, Clark, Conger, Curtis, Edgerton, Ficklin, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Giddings, Green, Grow, Hall, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, McMullin, McQueen, Mencham, Milson, Miner, John Moore, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Polk, Price, Robbins, Ross, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Stuart, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Wallace, and Watkins—66.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, John Appleton, William Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bartlett, Bocoek, Bowie, Bragg, Brenton, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Clingman, John G. Davis, Dean, Dinmick, Dockery, Doty, Eastman, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Goodenow, Gorman, Grey, Hamilton, Harper, Haws, Hebard, Hibbard, Hillyer, Horsford, Howard, John W. Howe, T. M. Howe, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Mann, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McNair, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Newton, Outlaw, Penslee, Penniman, Phelps, Rantoul, Riddle, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Scurry, Smart, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stone, Strotter, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Tuck, Venable, Ward, Alexander White, and Yates—79.

So the motion was disagreed to.

[A message in writing was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his Private Secretary, MILLARD P. FILLMORE.]

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana. I move to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that the vote just taken be reconsidered, and that that motion do lie upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CARTTER demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay upon the table; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ashe, Averett,

Barrere, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskey, Chapman, Chastain, Clark, Cobb, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dean, Dinmick, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Green, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Milson, Molony, John Moore, Morrison, Murray, Nabers, Orr, Penslee, Perkins, Phelps, Price, Robbins, Ross, Schoolcraft, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Benj. Stanton, Stuart, Sweetser, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Wallace, Addison White, and Yates—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, William Appleton, David J. Bailey, Bartlett, Bocoek, Bowie, Bowne, Bragg, Briggs, E. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Clingman, Conger, Cottman, Iockery, Evans, Ewing, Florence, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Grey, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Hillyer, Horsford, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Jackson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Martin, Mencham, Meade, Miner, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Newton, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Porter, Riddle, Schermerhorn, Scudder, Scurry, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Venable, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, and Alexander White—66.

So the whole subject was laid upon the table.

Mr. STUART. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table; and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I now renew my motion that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ORR. With my friend's indulgence for a moment, I will state that I desire to leave the city to-morrow morning. I have a few reports which I would ask now to submit from the Committee on Public Lands.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I withdraw the motion.

FLORIDA, ATLANTIC AND GULF RAILROAD.

Mr. ORR, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the Board of Internal Improvements of the State of Florida, made a report thereon, accompanied by a bill granting the right of way and a portion of the public lands for making the Florida, Atlantic and Gulf Central Railroad; which bill was read a first and second time by its title, and committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

RESERVATIONS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. ORR also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of R. W. Johnson, reported a bill to release from reservation and restore to the mass of public lands certain lands in the State of Arkansas; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] allow me to say a word to the House? A great many years ago, it will be recollected, bounty lands for the purpose of rewarding services in the late war, were set apart in the States of Arkansas, Illinois, and Missouri; and in other States. Those bounty land claims, at that day created, were to be then discharged by the names being put into a wheel, and drawn out, and the numbers that were drawn out with them, gave title to certain parts of tracts in specific regions of country. One of these military bounty tracts was in Arkansas; another in Missouri; another in Illinois; and another in Indiana. Thus a large tract of country in Arkansas, and in each of these other States, was reserved from public sale, and for the express purpose, by a system of lottery, of satisfying military warrants. The land is kept now from going into the market at all; it is not all drawn out for bounties, by a vast deal. In all the States but Arkansas, this reserved land has been released from reservation, so it goes into the Treasury of the United States, and is offered for sale just as all other public lands. The object of this resolution is to produce the same effect. At present the United States cannot sell, and whole counties cannot be settled. There can be no difference of opinion about it. There is no favor given to anybody by this resolution; it enables the land to be entered and sold, by and for the benefit of the United States, as other public lands are. In other words, it restores this land to the mass of public lands. I ask, therefore, my friend, the gentleman who has reported the bill, that he will express the opinion of the Committee on Public Lands, who have examined the case, and if what I have stated is correct, I hope the House will pass the bill. It gives nothing to Arkansas, and it only restores this land to the mass of public lands.

Mr. ORR. The facts stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] have been ascertained to be correct by the committee. I have no objection to the passage of the bill. If there is objection in the House, I shall feel constrained to move its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon engrossing the bill, and ordering it to be read a third time.

Mr. STANLY. I hope it will be read through. The bill was then read by the Clerk.

Mr. STANLY. That bill, it seems, releases to the State of Arkansas land which has been hitherto set apart for a particular purpose. What becomes of the claims outstanding?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state that it releases nothing to the State of Arkansas. It restores the land to the mass of public lands, and those claims which are unsatisfied bounty land claims, are put where they ought to be. If I understand rightly, they are put upon the same footing with the bounty land claims of the present day, so that the person who has the claim, may locate it anywhere, without being confined to a comparatively narrow strip, much of which is very poor land, and upon any tract subject to sale at private entry, without being subjected to a ridiculous raffling-box and a chance location upon the number drawn from its wheel.

Mr. STANLY. The bill is not understood by the House at all. I do not wish to prevent its passage, or refer it to the Committee of the Whole, where it cannot be got out, but I do object to hurrying it through the House, not understanding what it is, in advance of other measures. I shall probably vote for it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] to allow me to state the case, because the citizens of the old States are interested in this matter as well as ourselves. This bill enables the persons entitled to this bounty, to locate, as in the case of the present bounty land claims; if not passed, all this class are compelled to go under the hot-pot lottery law, and draw by chance, and they will not be enabled to act under the existing laws for all other bounty land claimants, and locate upon other public lands subject to private entry.

Mr. STANLY. I dare say the gentleman is right. I do not wish to defeat the bill.

Mr. ORR. Does the gentleman wish to refer it to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. STANLY. No; but I do not know its provisions. I object to picking out particular bills from the Committee on Public Lands, and pushing them in advance of the great measures of the country. I like to favor these Western States, and I have voted for them sometimes to such an extent, that it has brought down censure upon me for so doing—and I will do so again when they are proper measures. I do not wish to refer this bill, but I want some time to examine it. If it is not put upon its third reading, it will come up hereafter, without being referred, and no harm will be done to the public or the State of Arkansas. I would respectfully suggest to the chairman of the committee that it go over informally, that we may have time to examine it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would be very glad that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] or anybody else may examine it.

The SPEAKER. If it goes over informally, the Chair will state that it will go upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. STANLY. That is nothing unfair. Then we must get it out in its proper order.

Mr. HALL. I understand that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] wants time to examine this bill. I suppose that two or three days would be sufficient. I suggest, then, that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that a motion to reconsider be made, and then it will go over, and in this way be brought up.

Mr. STANLY. That is an indirect way. I do not wish to defeat the bill.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to ask, if the House now passes to other business, whether this would not remain on the Speaker's table? I recollect that, four years ago, when I was on the Committee on Public Lands, and we had this measure before us, there was no doubt of its being right. The gentleman from North Carolina wants time to examine it, and I therefore suggest to the House that we pass to other business. It will not be worth while to make the motion to reconsider, suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] as we should never reach it again. Better let the gentleman go on with other reports.

Mr. JOHNSON. In what class of business will it come upon the Speaker's table? There is a class of business there which never ought to, and never will, be reached. I do not want this bill to get into that class, because it is just and right. Does it come in the fifth class?

The SPEAKER. It comes within that class.

Mr. ORR. If a particular motion I propose to make will have the effect indicated—

The SPEAKER. A motion to recommit would keep it before the House.

Mr. ORR. I make the motion, then, to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, by general consent, that the vote upon the recommitment will be passed informally.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

On motion by Mr. ORR,

Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions, and that they do lie upon the table, viz:

The petition of citizens of Arkansas for a donation of land to the Arkansas and Central Railroad Company; and
The petition of the Jacksonville and Alligator Plank Road Company.

Mr. ORR. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Silas Noble and nineteen other registers and receivers of the Land Office, asking additional compensation for locating bounty land warrants, have instructed me to report back the same with the recommendation that they lie upon the table. They are petitions from the late and present registers and receivers at different places in the United States, having the same object in view. The bill which passed the House some two or three weeks ago, making bounty land warrants assignable, has superseded further legislation upon the subject. I ask, then, to refer back all these petitions with a recommendation that they lie upon the table.

It was so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of A. W. Reynolds, contesting the legality of the election of R. H. WRIGHTMAN, as a Delegate from New Mexico, and that the same do lie upon the table.

Mr. DEAN moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a privileged question. I am glad to see my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] who was not here a short time since. The privileged question I wish to make is to renew to-day the motion I submitted yesterday morning, with this difference only, that I will defer the day and hour at which I proposed to close debate upon the homestead bill, to Monday next, at one o'clock. I will make no remarks, but call the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a question of order. I ask if my motion is not also a privileged motion, and if it is not to be put first?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged motion, but, in the opinion of the Chair, the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas has precedence.

The question was then taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, and on a division there were—ayes 50, noes 61.

Mr. STUART demanded tellers.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will withdraw my resolution, believing the House are determined not to pass it.

The resolution was withdrawn.

The question recurred on the motion submitted by Mr. DEAN.

Mr. NABERS. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York, that he should change his motion to one to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. DEAN. No, sir; I cannot.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion; there is a large amount of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. DEAN. No, sir.

Mr. VENABLE. With the indulgence of the House, I desire to make a suggestion. There are a great many gentlemen who wish to speak upon the homestead bill, and I would, therefore, suggest that we should have a night session, to give them an opportunity to do so.

Mr. HALL. I rise to a question of order; it is this: that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FREEMAN] was entitled to the floor, and that the gentleman from New York had no right to take the floor from the gentleman from Mississippi to make the motion that he did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, on the ground that we are acting under a special order, and that the gentleman from New York, therefore, had a right to arrest the proceedings of the House, to submit the motion which he did, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order. Ordinarily, the gentleman from Missouri would be correct in his view; but as we are acting under a special order, the Chair thinks he is not correct, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. VENABLE. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield the floor, to enable me to submit a proposition, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. SWEETSER. I object.

Mr. DEAN. Then I insist upon my motion.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me to state that my drawer is so full of reports from the Judiciary Committee that it can hold no more. I would suggest that reports should be delivered from committees before any other business is done.

Mr. DEAN. I cannot withdraw my motion.

The question was then taken on Mr. DEAN's motion, and it was agreed to, on a division—ayes 68, noes 63.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HUBBARD in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the business before the committee, the consideration of House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and for other purposes, on which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] was entitled to the floor.

COMPROMISE MEASURES—WHIG CAUCUS—GENERAL SCOTT.

Mr. HOWARD said: Mr. Chairman, were I to confine myself exclusively to the subject under debate, or, more properly speaking, to the subject before the committee, it might be construed into an intentional disrespect to the usage and custom of this committee. I therefore propose, in the first instance, to address a few observations to the political aspect of the country, and to that common topic, the next presidential campaign. I intend to say a few words in relation to the principles on which that canvass must be fought; and when we consider how much of public interest depends upon the result of that contest, we cannot be astonished that it has occupied so large a portion of the attention of this House.

In the outset, I desire to say, that I am opposed to anything like a separate Union party, and for the plain reason that I do not believe that the condition of the country makes such an organization necessary. I admit, that there are questions in this country, which may rise above party, and when the time shall arrive that the existence of the Government itself depends upon such an organization, such an organization will necessarily take place. But that is not the present condition of affairs.

I am one of those who believe it necessary to keep up the old party organizations. I believe it is expedient, for the reason that an opposite course would lead directly to sectional parties, and to geographical organizations, which can only exist for a short time in this country without the destruction of the Government itself. I would therefore postpone the evil day of such a state of things, to the time when it may be necessary for the preservation of this Government.

I am in favor of adhering to the old Democratic platform—adding to it no more than the absolute wants of the country, at this time, may require; for, as to party creeds, when old party creeds do not answer the purpose, it is as legitimate to have new ones as it was to adopt the old in the first instance. It is for this reason that I have voted in this House for the passage of the resolutions approving, or rather, acquiescing in the compromise measures, and asserting the principle that the fugitive slave law should be enforced. I do it, not for the purpose of reflecting on the past action of any one, but because I conceive that such action is necessary to the welfare of the nation, and indispensable to the peace of society in our country, at this moment. Nor do I see how any gentleman opposed to those measures can complain of such a course, unless he be one of those who think that this Government has lasted too long, and that what has taken place is a sufficient ground for breaking it up. I may be permitted to say that if nothing was involved in the question but the aspect of parties at the South, I should esteem such a vote unnecessary. But such is not the case. I should esteem a resolution approving or acquiescing in the compromise unnecessary, for the obvious reason that every Southern State, in some form or another, has acquiesced in the measures adopted by the Thirty-first Congress. If it was intended, therefore, to operate upon Southern parties and Southern politicians alone, it would be unnecessary. But, sir, that is not the state of the case. We have been notified here by the Free-Soil connection, that they hold the fugitive slave law to be unconstitutional, and that they regard the acts in relation to the territorial governments to be as subject to modification and repeal as any ordinary acts of the American Congress. It is to reach these, mainly and principally, that I am in favor of adopting the compromise as a finality. I do not wish to reflect even upon the Free-Soilers, or to thrust them out of the party. But if they are to continue to act with us, they must give bonds to keep the peace. If they do not, then, in my estimation, we ought to hold no further affiliation with them. These persons ought not to be allowed inside of the Democratic party, by further agitation to furnish a fresh cause for secession, or to endanger the public peace and the stability of the Government. Agitation should cease on this subject.

Now, sir, I am unable to perceive how any Southern man, however extreme his opinions may be in relation to this subject, can feel any reluctance in adopting the compromise as a finality in reference to the whole subject. There is, in my estimation, a necessity growing out of the enforcement of the fugitive slave law; as it is obviously the purpose of the Free-Soilers and Abolitionists to remain quiet for the present, and then, after the presidential election has terminated, to come into Congress and agitate for the repeal of the fugitive slave law. It is not only that measure which makes the adoption of the compromise resolution proper, but the whole subject of slavery in the Territories. If there was anything well understood when the compromise measures were adopted, it was that the question of slavery in the Territories stood upon the Constitution, that it should be maintained there, and that the Territories should be open to slavery if the Constitution permitted slavery to exist in those Territories. Now, we are notified by these extreme gentlemen that it is their purpose to agitate the subject of slavery in the Territories, and to introduce bills for the exclusion of slavery from the Territories of New Mexico and Utah. This is the more necessary on the part of the South, because the census returns show that slavery actually exists both in Utah and New Mexico. I think, therefore, that it is incumbent upon the Democratic party to say that that which was a settlement shall remain a settlement, unaltered, unmodified, and unrepealed. And, sir, it becomes, in my estimation, the more necessary to say so because I see certain opinions advanced since the adoption of these measures touching this subject, to which, in another aspect, I wish, for a few moments, to call the attention of the Committee.

Mr. MEACHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. HOWARD. If you will be brief.

Mr. MEACHAM. I ask the gentleman whether he, in sustaining the compromise, will go against the proposed division of the boundary of California, so as to make two States instead of one?

Mr. HOWARD. I am astonished that such a question should be asked by a gentleman who is a member of the Judiciary Committee. California is in the Union. She is a sovereign State. She has the right to divide herself with the consent of Congress, and one portion has the right to come here and demand admission into the Union after the consent is given; and when it comes here we have no power then but to look into their constitution, and see whether it has or has not adopted a republican form of government.

Mr. MEACHAM. Will not you be varying the compromise if you say you will go for that division?

Mr. HOWARD. Not at all. The idea is preposterous, for the simple reason that California was admitted into the Union with all the privileges, all the powers, and upon the principles of equality with the other States. No man doubts that any one of the old States has the power to exclude slavery, or to retain it, at its own will and in its own time. The compromise did not go beyond the admission of California. It did not extend to maintaining or excluding slavery there, nor to retaining the State with its present limits or institutions.

But to return to the subject upon which I was commenting. It has been put forth, in certain quarters, that although the exclusion of slavery in the Territories, by a direct act of Congress, would be unconstitutional, yet that it was constitutional for the Territorial Legislatures to exclude it. Now, for one, I desire to say that I repudiate altogether the idea of the squatter's sovereignty—that it can have no existence in the Constitution, or in the brain of any sound-reasoning lawyer. And why? The territorial governments are organized by Congress. Their political powers are charters derived from Congress. They can look to that charter for their powers, and not beyond it. To say, therefore, that we can confer upon a Territorial Legislature a power we do not ourselves possess, is an idea which, in my opinion, cannot be defended by even plausible argument. A government organized by Congress cannot contain a grant of constitutional power which Congress does not possess. If Congress cannot adopt the Wilmot proviso, much less can a Territorial Legislature, which is its creature.

But there is another doctrine advanced in reference to this matter, which I desire to notice. It is said that all the inhabitants of a Territory possess inherent sovereign power. Now, the idea of sovereign power disconnected from political organization is one which is difficult to comprehend, if it have any existence. The idea of sovereignty is represented by the State; and if the people are sovereign, it is because they are a part of the State, living within an organized political community, and constituting a part of an organized political government. The idea that Daniel Boone, when he migrated outside the boundaries of civilization and settled there, possessed the powers of sovereignty in any legal sense, is one which I shall never be able to appreciate. There is no sovereignty in separate individuals, or in man in a state of nature. Sovereignty, in a legal or political sense, is created only when men form a government by giving up a portion of their natural rights. It is an idea inseparable from organized government. Squatters on the public domain, without legal government, are not sovereign; they are at best tenants at sufferance. But suppose that a certain amount of political sovereignty may be admitted to be inherent in the people of the Territories, I deny that there can be anything in the proposition put forth; and for this reason, that they have exercised it in adopting the territorial governments prepared for them by Congress. Admit, if you please, that they are sovereigns, the Congress of the United States have conferred a certain restricted form of government upon the people of the Territories, placing them in a condition of pupillage, and they have accepted of the Government with those powers. They have agreed to live under the Government thus framed by the Congress of the United States. In the exercise of their sovereignty, even if they possess it, they have accepted of the charter thus given them by Congress. That charter contains their powers, and by it they have submitted to the jurisdiction of Congress, and cannot set up any authority inconsistent with the supervision and control of this Government, much less in opposition to constitutional powers of Congress. I deny as a constitutional proposition the existence of "squatter sovereignty." It has no foundation in sound reasoning or the practice of the Government. It is inconsistent with the jurisdiction of the Federal Government over the public domain as expressly conferred by the Constitution.

In relation to these compromise acts, I desire to say, that I look to the Democratic party alone to maintain and enforce them. That party has made the Government and country the great power that it is, and can alone preserve the Union. It should, therefore meet these questions boldly, and preserve the public tranquillity by avowing a platform adequate to the occasion, in its approaching national convention. I look to the Democracy in this crisis, because it is their principle of strict construction which alone can render the Federal Government immortal and preserve the Union by keeping the Government within its legitimate sphere; for I must be permitted to say, that, however good may be the intentions of certain individual members of the Whig party, or however sound may be the views and intentions of a certain sect of that party in relation to the great questions of acquiescence in and the enforcement of the compromise measures, I do not think the Whig party, or, at least, the majority of the Northern section of it, can be depended upon. I say it not from any intention of casting any unjust censure upon that party, or of imputing any improper motives to any one, but I say it because I have been forced to the conclusion from the political action of that party for the last twelve months. And what has been that action? Why, sir, it is known that the gentleman who now occupies the presidential chair, and who, during all this controversy, has shown himself to be a patriot and a gentleman, is now to be sacrificed because he has taken ground in favor of the fugitive slave law, and has maintained and enforced it. If I may judge from what I see in the newspapers, I should think that last night he had been bound, and that in a very few weeks he is to be taken, thus bound, to the funeral pile, there to be immolated, to propitiate that power in the North which is in favor of repealing, or of resisting, the fugitive slave law—that great conservative measure for the enforcement of a clear constitutional right of the South. I understand, from what I can gather from the papers of this morning, that in the Whig caucuses held last night, those who were for standing up for the Constitution were confined almost exclusively to the Southern section of the Union, and were not very numerous at that. I see some gentlemen upon the other side of the House who, no doubt, could give us some information upon this subject. Perhaps the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] could tell us something in relation to the matter. I understand that upon that occasion the compromise measures were not only so unpopular as not to be adopted, but they were actually ruled out of order. If this be untrue, there are many gentlemen present who were there, and they can correct me. I think, then, that we have small hope from the Whig party. It is suggested to me that the gentlemen on the other side of the House are mum now, as their candidate will be when the final conflict comes off; and I take it for granted that General Scott is to be that man. If they will allow him to say anything at all, it will be with the consent of Mr. Seward, and it will be about as explicit as the expressions of opinion which were made to serve the turn of the Whig party during the last presidential contest.

Several Members called for Mr. CLINGMAN to explain in relation to the caucus.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope gentlemen will not call me up. I was there, it is true, but I was there rather as a spectator than an actor. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. FOWLER,] who recited the proceedings of the other caucus, or my colleague, [Mr. OUTLAW,] who was the chairman of that other caucus, or the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] will be called up. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. I think it must be very apparent that the convention which sat last night, and of which we have heard so much, is not very communicative in relation to the principles upon which it intends to act in the next presidential election. I understood, when these resolutions were ruled out of order, there were found only eighteen in that meeting who were willing to stand up for the finality of the compromise, and to say that the public peace shall be maintained in relation to these measures.

Mr. STANLY. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me to ask him a question?

A MEMBER. Make him promise to answer yours first!

Mr. HOWARD. Oh! I know the honorable gentleman from North Carolina will not be so discourteous as not to answer my question afterwards.

Mr. STANLY. That is another affair. [Laughter.] I dislike to interrupt the gentleman—and would not do so, but because he seems to solicit an answer—and I will do so but for a moment. When I get the floor, I will show that gentleman that he is wholly in error about the proceedings of the caucus of last night. I cannot do it now, for it would take up the whole of his time.

If the gentleman from Texas will answer me this question, he will afford me some information which I have been wholly unable to get from any member of Congress this session: Why did not General Cass vote upon the fugitive slave bill, when he was in the Senate the day it was passed? When he was in his seat a short time before the vote was taken? Will my friend from Texas say why General Cass did not vote?

Mr. HOWARD. I would suggest to the gentleman that he had better ask that question of General Cass himself.

Mr. STANLY. That would be impertinent. It might offend the old gentleman, and I would not do that for a great deal.

Mr. HOWARD. It is a matter that I have never had any conversation with him in relation to. I understand from his speeches—

Mr. STANLY. The gentleman cannot answer, the "noise and confusion" is so great. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. There may be some private reason, of which I know nothing; but I know that, in speeches made before and afterwards, which are published in the Union of this morning, he expresses himself in favor of the fugitive slave law, in clear and distinct language.

Mr. STANLY. He expresses one thing in his speeches, and votes the other way. Why did not he vote for the bill? Can any gentleman on the other side answer that question?

Mr. HOWARD. As the gentleman proposes to conduct this debate by asking questions, I want to know of him—for I understand General Scott is his Magnus Apollo in this matter—whether he can say that General Scott approves of the fugitive slave law as it at present exists? and whether, if elected President of the United States, he would employ the power of the Government to execute that law?

Mr. STANLY. He would be a perjured man if he did not execute the law. [Much laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. Well, that would be a question of morals, as well as a question of law. What I want to ask my honorable friend from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] is, whether he knows, as a matter of fact, that General Scott is in favor of this measure, and will resist its modification or repeal?

Mr. STANLY. He is as good a compromise man as my friend from Texas, [laughter]—a true compromise man. For further information, I refer my friend to my letter to my constituents, published a few days since, which no man can misunderstand.

Mr. HOWARD. I did not hear distinctly, but I understand the gentleman refers me to General Scott's letter.

[Cries: "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. STANLY. I beg leave to refer the gentleman to General Scott, as he has referred me to General Cass; and when he gets General Cass's answer, I will not vote for General Scott when he is nominated, if he should be, if I do not give you his. Is not that a fair trade? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. That is a trade at which I should be likely to be cheated, if I accepted the bargain; for, if General Cass would answer, the gentleman would not only have an answer, but an answer to the point—an answer that he would maintain it by his veto power before he could get my vote, if there was no other chance, except a Whig precisely in the same predicament. But it is suggested that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FOWLER] would probably give us a more lucid explanation of that matter, and show us in what light he understands the position of General Scott on the fugitive slave law.

Mr. FOWLER. I suggest that there are other gentlemen who can tell the truth besides myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman gave such lucid testimony, and so much to the point, on a former occasion, that I was in hopes that upon this he would also have enlightened us in relation to this subject. He says there are perhaps other gentlemen who could tell the truth as well as himself. That may be, if they happened to know it. But the misfortune of the thing with my Whig friends upon the other side is, that they do not know whether General Scott will stand up to the Constitution or not.

Mr. STANLY. I know it. I answer the gentleman, I know it. I say, he is as good a compromise man as my friend from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD,] or myself.

A VOICE. The fugitive slave law included?

Mr. STANLY. The compromise measures, and the fugitive slave law, too. As good a compromise man as my friend from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD,] and I rather think in favor of more of them than he was.

Mr. HOWARD. If the honorable gentleman can state that of his own knowledge, or by authority of General Scott, I shall be happy to receive the information. And I would like to know whether that is the understanding of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. FOWLER,] who always has to be consulted in relation to these matters.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Come out, Mr. FOWLER. Give us your experience.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman [Mr. STANLY] could relieve us from the difficulty, by saying, whether General Scott has authorized him, or any one else, to make that declaration? [Laughter.]

Mr. STANLY. I will answer my friend from Texas. I have not talked with General Scott, I think, in three months. I have other business to attend to—a great deal—and I suppose he has. I do not speak by anybody's authority. He never authorizes anybody to speak his opinions. He will speak for himself. He is able to do so. I only tell the gentleman—and I told my constituents in the letter I wrote—what I know, of my own knowledge, from his own lips. There is no mistake about that. If I would say I heard my friend from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] say a particular thing, so and so—my veracity not impeached—I take the ground that I speak what I know. Is that an authority in fact? I say, therefore, what I know. Before the compromise measures were passed, during their pendency—during the time when Texas was so much alarmed about the bill, which my friend [Mr. HOWARD] had to change his vote to get passed—General Scott was as anxious for the passage of the compromise measures, as my friend from Texas. I know that after the passage, he is as true, as firm, and as unyielding a friend, to the measures, as the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD,] or myself.

Mr. OUTLAW. I would like to know from my colleague, [Mr. STANLY,] why General Scott, if he is a compromise man, does not say so?

Mr. STANLY. That is a strange question from my colleague. He knows as well as I do, that General Scott is in favor of the compromise measures. But, sir, as to why he does not say so, I suppose there are ways by which everybody regulate their own affairs. Each general has his own notion of propriety about the manner of acting; and I think General Scott would descend from the high position which becomes him, and would act an unworthy part, if he were to write letters every ten days to every popinjay politician of every cross-road and dram-shop in the country, who might address him a letter, and asks his opinion. That he will give a full and satisfactory answer to the National Convention, and that his position will be so plain that no one can misunderstand it, I have no more doubt about than that I am now living. Whether that National Convention shall nominate that man whom both my colleague and I prefer, or any other, I think I can safely say he will not have my support, if my colleague, with the honorable and patriotic motives that always animate him, cannot also support the nominee.

Mr. OUTLAW. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] seems to think that it is a strange question I ask him. Well, in response to that, the gentleman well knows the position I occupy upon this subject. I will vote for no man for the Presidency, or the Vice Presidency of the United States, who is not publicly pledged, so that there can be no mistake about it, that he will maintain each and all of those measures, as a final adjustment of the slavery question. Nor am I satisfied, nor will my constituents be satisfied, by declarations made to individuals in private conversation. They wish to judge for themselves of the extent to which he is committed to the maintenance and upholding of these compromise measures. When General Scott shall make that public declaration, I shall be able to judge, and everybody else will be able to judge how far he is committed to maintain them as a final settlement.

Mr. STANLY. I agree to all that, except what my colleague may think about the pledge. I rather prefer a man's past life and high character for patriotism, truth, and honor, to pledges. He signed a pledge during the last Congress, which I did not sign. I do not sign temperance pledges. I will not do so, because I think it wrong to pledge to man that I will not sin. I will not put my name to a paper to say that I will not lie, nor steal, nor drink, but I object to no man's signing a pledge about anything. If that is what my colleague [Mr. OUTLAW] means, by a pledge, I hope General Scott will never give one. But if he means by it, his expressing his full opinions, without any reserve, and without any mistake, there is no difference between us upon that point, and my colleague will be satisfied, as I will. I repeat, my preferences are like those of my colleague. I have said, and I say again; it is due to General Scott's character—worth more to him than the Presidency—that he should not allow his opinions upon great questions at issue to be misunderstood. It is due to the country, as well as to himself. And I venture the prediction, if General Scott is nominated, his opinions will be as distinctly known to the public, as they have been to all persons who have conversed with him. I have no doubt, after the nomination, I shall be side by side with my colleague, or rather, in my proper place, following his lead.

Mr. OUTLAW. I shall be happy to see that prediction, when it is forthcoming. But confidence is a plant of slow growth. It is not a part of my political creed to render my confidence without knowing the grounds upon which it is rendered. And I tell my colleague, [Mr. STANLY,] that when I signed that pledge it was nothing more than a declaration. I was elected upon that ground to a seat upon this floor, and I appeal to him, if he, too, was not elected a member of this Congress upon the express ground that he would vote for no man for the Presidency or Vice Presidency who would not uphold these compromise measures. I ask him if he did not fight the battle against those who were opposed to this settlement?

Mr. STANLY. That I did; and I told my constituents that I would rather have the support of any honest Union Democrat than of any secessionist scoundrel who advocated the dissolution of the Union from opposition to the compromise measures, no matter how good a Whig he might pretend to be. I said all that; and I have no more doubt of General Scott's opinion upon the compromise question than I would of my colleague's, [Mr. OUTLAW,] if he had not just expressed it.

Mr. GOODRICH. I was present in caucus last night, and I can answer the question which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] has put. I was there from the commencement to the close. The only reason given for ruling the resolution out of order last night was the same which has been assigned in this House for laying the same resolution upon the table in the Democratic caucus at the commencement of the session; to wit: that it belonged to the National Convention. No other reason was given.

Mr. HOWARD. I have only to say that, for general national purposes, that was only a single resolution; but that they should have adopted it at the first caucus, and made it an issue before the country, and repudiated it at the second, can have only one explanation, and that is, that they have repented of what they have done, and intend to take a new position. I infer that from the facts I have stated.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman indulge me for only a moment?

Mr. HOWARD. Very well. They say free confession is good for the soul.

Mr. BROOKS. I understand the gentleman from Texas to ask—and it is a question in which I am somewhat interested, and for that reason I answer it—why, in a caucus of fifty-one members, we adopted that resolution, and subsequently repudiated it in the House of Representatives by only seven Whig votes from the North?

[Cries: "No!" "No!" "That is not the point."]

Mr. BROOKS. I only want to get at the gentleman's question. I understand him to ask why it was that, in a Whig caucus of fifty-one members at the opening of the session, we adopted the compromise resolutions, and why we subsequently had this action in the House, in which there appear only seven Northern Whig votes? I will tell the gentleman the reason, and it will unfold to him the whole story, and it may as well be unfolded. In the prior caucus we had no record made; and it was then the settled policy of the Whig party that the compromise measures were to be final. Subsequent to that time it has been found to be the interest of a portion, or supposed to be the interest of a portion, of the great body of the Whig party North, and a portion of the Whig party South, to repudiate that compromise.

[Cries: "That is it!" "That is it!" "That is it!"]

But when there was a resolution introduced into this House, upon the part of the Southern Whigs, a resolution to support the Whigs of the North, who were compromise national Whigs—and that resolution was introduced here by the honorable gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER]—all our hearts wavered, because the Southern Whig column wavered, and did not stand by us national Whigs; and the cry was of Napoleon at Waterloo, "Take care of himself who can." For, if the whole Southern column would not stand by the Northern conservative Whigs, it was useless to fight Southern battles on Northern ground. Hence, when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILLYER] introduced his resolution here, the cry of every Northern man was, "Save himself who can." So the record was reversed, and there were found but seven Northern Whigs voting for the finality of the compromise.

That is the resolution of the subsequent caucus. In the organization of the Whig caucus, held last night, we were not permitted to approach a discussion of that subject. Upon a resolution, in a Whig caucus, called for Whig purposes, it was held to be out of order to speak of the compromise, or even to agitate the subject, until we had decided upon the time and place—is that a mistake?—for the meeting of the Convention; and there stood behind those ready, the moment we had fixed upon the time and place, to adjourn, and afford us no opportunity to vote upon the compromise resolutions at all.

[Great confusion in the Hall.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I only desire to correct the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] I do not come here to testify in relation to this matter at all; but I desire that what information may be communicated with reference to what was done in the caucus last night, shall be correct. The gentleman from New York is mistaken in his statement of what was the decision of the Chair last evening. A proposition was presented to the caucus, fixing the time and place for the holding of the National Whig Convention. A substitute to that resolution was then offered, embodying the question of the finality of the compromise. The presiding officer decided, notwithstanding the proposition submitted as a substitute might, or might not, be entertained at another stage of the proceedings, that it was not germane to the resolution then before that body; that it was not pertinent to the proposition for the fixing of the time and place of holding the convention. That was the decision of the Chair; and while I am up, allow me to correct the gentleman, or rather to make a statement which he has omitted; which is, that while the Chair was sustained in that decision, gentlemen from the North, from the South, from the East, and the West, expressly declared their opinion for and against the resolution; and that they did not at all desire to shirk it, but that when it was introduced at the proper time as an independent, substantive proposition, they were willing to entertain it; that they were willing to propose such modifications or amendments as they might see proper, embracing other questions. That is the history of the matter. That is the reason why it was properly ruled out of order, as any similar resolution would be in this, or any other deliberative body.

Mr. STANLY. Will my friend from Texas allow me a little while?

Mr. HOWARD. Be brief, if you please.

Mr. STANLY. I will be brief. The gentleman himself has called us out. Now, sir, there was no rejection in the Whig caucus of this compromise resolution, and there never has been any. There has been no Southern Whig waiving or repudiating the compromise measures. I know of but one called a Southern Whig who ever has voted against this compromise resolution—but one—one of my colleagues, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] who left the caucus last night, as he stated a moment ago. Is there another Southern Whig who has voted against those resolutions? Where is the man? I do not know, nor have I ever heard of him. Yet the gentleman from New York says that the cause of the proceeding alluded to was the faltering, the wavering of Southern Whigs. How did they falter? I deny, most emphatically, and as positively as courtesy will admit, the statement made by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman takes the whole Southern Whig party under his protection, and because we do not follow his lead, he seems to think that he is to be sacrificed—bound and taken to the altar—that he is to be sacrificed because we do not follow his dictation, and regulate our conduct according to his manifestoes and his lead; that the compromise measures are all lost, unless all Southern Whigs implicitly obey his mandate.

Mr. HOWARD. I cannot yield further to allow the gentleman to go into an argument.

Mr. STANLY. I wish, then, only to say that there was no rejection of the compromise resolution. But one Southern Whig was against it. We invited gentlemen to come and go for it. If the gentleman who left had staid, we would, as I believe, have adopted the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee. What the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] states, is correct. There was no intention to prevent discussion; but we did not intend to allow the caucus to be broken up, without recommending time and place.

Mr. BROOKS. One word in reply. This matter of parliamentary law I will not undertake to discuss, but it is a fact—and the intelligent people of this country will understand it—that in a Whig caucus the Whig compromise resolution of the caucus which met at the opening of this Congress was introduced, action asked upon it, and it was ruled out of that Whig caucus as not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I hope that I may be allowed to add—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" and great confusion.]

Mr. STANLY, (the confusion having subsided,) obtained the floor and said: The gentleman from New York, I feel authorized to say, has written letters announcing, in advance, the intention of some persons to leave that caucus before the thing was done. I got my authority from the New York Express.

Mr. BROOKS. Where is it?

Mr. STANLY. Does the gentleman deny he wrote it? Here it is in the New York Express, [holding up that paper,] which I have received this morning. I have shown it to eight or ten gentlemen, and it has been admitted by all of them to contain the argument, and some of the very expressions, verbum verbo, used by the gentleman from New York last night in the caucus, and like those made by him here to-day. The article is contained in the paper which I hold in my hand.

Mr. BROOKS. Has the gentleman no other authority than that?

Mr. STANLY. Does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. BROOKS. I do, from the beginning to the end, and, before high Heaven, in the presence of God, I say I wrote not one word of that letter.

Mr. STANLY. Did you not see it before it was sent? Did you adopt or approve it?

Mr. BROOKS. I will reply to the gentleman's question. The person by whom that letter was written submitted it to me. It contained harsh expressions against the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] which I demanded should be stricken out.

Mr. STANLY. I do not thank the gentleman for so doing, for he approved what remained.

Mr. BROOKS. A considerable portion I caused to be erased. For not a sentence of that letter do I hold myself responsible in any degree, nor for one word or syllable of it. There are sentiments in that which I have expressed, which are my sentiments, and of gentlemen with whom I associate, and to which, at all times and upon all occasions, in social circles, I give expression.

Mr. STANLY. The gentleman has confessed that the letter was submitted to him and corrected by him. What motive his correspondent could have to assail me, as I do not know him and never injured him, I cannot imagine. What kindness there was in erasing will appear by reading what is left.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman's allegation was that I wrote a letter announcing my intention to leave the Whig caucus.

Mr. STANLY. That the letter was written by the gentleman's authority and consent he has confessed.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman stated that I wrote a letter announcing my intention—

Mr. STANLY. No, sir; letters written by your authority and consent. It was then your letters in your paper announcing the intention of some persons—

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to hear what is going on. Let the gentlemen speak one at a time, and I have no objection to giving way. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN. Will my friend from Texas permit me for one moment?

Mr. HOWARD. I think that I have as much of this as I want. The evidence is pretty full. [Cries of "No!" "No!" "Let him go on!"]

Mr. HOWARD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WASHBURN. Reference has been made by the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] to the caucus of the Whig members of the House, held at the commencement of the session, and, also, to that held last night. He has said that at the former the compromise measures were affirmed, and that they were repudiated at the latter; that the Whig party North were then in favor of them, and are now against them, and he alleged that this change had been wrought by considerations growing out of the altered condition of affairs in regard to the Presidency. I wish to repel this allegation. I was present at both caucuses, and occupied the same ground at both. The Whigs of the North, I have no hesitation in saying, and the Whig members of Congress from the North, hold the same opinions and occupy the same position to-day respecting those measures, that they held on the first day of the session.

Mr. PHELPS. What was that position?

Mr. WASHBURN. I will answer if I have time. Their course and their aim has been to restore harmony and peace. There are those among them who approved of those measures, and those, also, who sincerely disapproved of some of them. They would not—certainly the latter would not—oppose the nomination or election of any man to the Presidency because he differs from them in opinion concerning these measures. They would not oppose Mr. Fillmore, Mr. Webster, or General Scott, or any man, North or South, simply for the reason that they do not agree with them as to the wisdom or propriety of the compromise. [Cries of Order! order!] They will allow men to differ on this subject; they know that men from different sections, and from the same section of the country, will differ upon questions growing out of the institution of slavery. But this I may safely say—they will not consent that the Whig party shall be denationalized by the introduction of any new test of political orthodoxy. They will never consent that the finality of the compromise measures shall be made a part of the Whig creed; and any candidate, whether he be General Scott or any other man, who insists upon that, or who is nominated by a convention which affirms or requires it, cannot, in my judgment, obtain the vote of a single Northern State—not one. Gentlemen may as well understand this first as last. If we are to exist as a party, it must be upon a platform on which men of all sections of the country can stand together, without any sacrifice of opinion, of principle, or of honor; and not upon one which may well hold men of all parties in one section, and exclude all in another. Gentlemen should remember that if they can make a test of this kind, it will be equally competent for others to make tests in reference to the same general subject—they yield the question of jurisdiction and make slavery a national affair.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to know whether my friend from Maine, and his party in Maine, are opposed to any modification of the fugitive slave law; and whether they are in favor of enforcing it?

Mr. WASHBURN. They will not agitate for its repeal or modification when agitation can be but useless or mischievous. They have not come here with petitions. I have made no inflammatory speeches, and shall make none—

Here Mr. HOWARD claimed the floor. [Cries all over the Hall of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is called to order. This discussion is not in order. The Chair has permitted it by common suference, and if no member of the committee interposes against it, the Chair hereafter will deem it his duty to arrest it.

Mr. DURKEE. It will break up both parties. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. My object in yielding to the gentleman from Maine was to obtain some testimony—some facts in relation to the caucus.

Mr. WASHBURN. It was my desire to satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD. Of facts his speech will be found extremely barren. The Whig party, with which he is connected, is opposed to political orthodoxy, if I understand his explanation.

Mr. WASHBURN. They are very much in favor of political orthodoxy.

Mr. HOWARD. They are opposed to making an explicit avowal of their opinions.

Mr. WASHBURN. They are opposed to making—

[Great confusion. Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Order having been restored—

Mr. HOWARD resumed. From all the statements made by our friends on the other side, the Whigs have changed their party tactics. It appears that they were, at the commencement of this Congress, in favor of the compromise measures, and that they now find it expedient to go against them, or at least to give them the go by. The expression of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] makes that conclusion manifest. He said that he hoped General Scott never will condescend to pledge himself upon the subject of the compromise measures.

Mr. STANLY. To signing pledges.

Mr. HOWARD. I have only to say, in relation to that subject, that it must be sufficiently apparent to an intelligent public, that the man for the first office in the world, who comes before twenty-five millions of freemen, and is above stating the principles which he himself entertains, must live in a region of pride far above republican institutions, or he must intend to cheat and gull those who take him upon trust.

Mr. STANLY. Nobody said that.

Mr. HOWARD. But what is the history of this matter? The nomination is to be made. Under this miserable pretense of parliamentary rule, a resolution of approval was ruled out of order, when it was known that the decision was to be a test of party action. What is parliamentary law? What is it here upon political questions? It is precisely what a majority of the House choose to make it, and if there is anything for which I hold supreme contempt, it is the parliamentary law of this House. But in relation to this subject, what does every man of sense know? He knows this, that the object of starting that parliamentary law by a Whig President of a Whig caucus, the object of ruling it out of order, has no other motive and purpose than that of stifling all inquiry and action directly upon the resolution which was intended to evoke and elicit party action. I feel that I should be insulting the intelligence of the country, if I contended for such a position, and I am astonished that a man so bold as my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] should take shelter behind a question of order in relation to a matter which involves the interests of the whole country.

Mr. STANLY. I will tell my friend why: I believed there was a design to break up and have no National Convention at all. That is the reason. I thought the people sent us here not to instruct their representatives in the National Convention in doctrine, but in caucus, to recommend time and place for holding the National Convention. That body will attend to their own appropriate duties.

Mr. HOWARD. Let me say to the gentleman, what I would say in reference to my own party, that if, instead of giving a clear and explicit pledge, it took shelter behind an unimportant parliamentary rule, which can have no existence in a caucus of a political character, that the party deserved to be broken up, for it has nothing worth preserving to hold it together; and the party who wish to administer the Government, must be destitute of any lofty, sound principle, that will take shelter behind a question of that sort.

Mr. STANLY. Let the gentleman look to the Democratic Convention, as I will to the Whig Convention; and then if he, and I, and Southern men are not satisfied, we may stand shoulder to shoulder.

Mr. HOWARD. I am glad to hear the gentleman indicating that wish. But it looks inauspicious at a time like this, when it is necessary to settle principles upon which a great canvass is to be conducted, and upon the assertion of which a great majority of the country looks to for the perpetuity of our institutions, to be quibbling about parliamentary rules, dodging questions, and refusing to answer. This is not the way to address freemen in a free country, which depends for its existence upon the representative principle. With out knowing the opinions of men who are candidates for office, it is impossible to administer the Government according to its theory, because the theory is, that the people shall administer the Government. The theory on the other side of the House, so far as it has been developed, is not that the people shall administer the Government, but that the trustees—the officers shall be taken upon trust, without expressing their opinions; and then after they succeed in being elected, that they shall be governed by temporary expedients in the administration of a Government of a Democratic cast and character.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOWARD said that he had not yet touched upon the argument he intended to deliver. He would avail himself, however, of the privilege extended to others of writing out his remarks. [His remarks will be published hereafter.]

Mr. MOLONY obtained the floor, but gave way to

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was put, and carried in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 7, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Upon motion by Mr. JONES, the House then adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CABELL, of Florida: The petition of Joseph M. Hernandez, for himself and others, asking the passage of a law to insure the fulfillment of certain stipulations of the treaty ceding Florida to the United States.

By Mr. EASTMAN: The petition of L. H. Johnson for additional compensation for taking the census.

By Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania: The resolutions of the board of commissioners of Northern Liberties of Philadelphia, against a further grant of money to the Collins steamers.

Also, two memorials from the printers of Philadelphia, in favor of the establishment of a national printing office.

By Mr. YATES: The petition of citizens of Woodford and McClean counties, for the establishment of a mail route from Bloomington to Spring Bay.

Also, the petition of H. N. Marsh for extra compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

Also, the petition of Joseph C. Howell for the same purpose.

Also, the petition of Moses Shepherd for the same purpose.

Also, the petition of A. C. Hardin and others, for a grant of lands to the State of Illinois, to aid in the construction of the Burlington, Peoria, and Lafayette railroad.

Also, the petition of L. A. Cunningham and others, for the same purpose.

Also, the petition of John O. Fallon, president of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad Company, for a grant of lands to the State of Illinois for a railroad from Illinois town, on the Mississippi, to Vincennes, on the Wabash.

Also, the petition of Luther M. Kennet, mayor, and the aldermen of St. Louis, to reimburse that city for moneys expended by the corporate authorities in removing obstructions in the harbor of St. Louis.

Also, the petition of B. Kellogg and others, of Tazewell county, against the extension of the Woodworth patent for a planing machine.

Also, the petition of L. L. Bullock, president of the Buel Institute, Granville, Putnam county, Illinois, for the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau.

By Mr. GREEN: The petition of R. R. Sloane and others, for the extension of the mail route from Fremont to Port Clinton, to Ottawa City, Ohio.

By Mr. FOWLER: The remonstrances of Daniel Fillmons, Henry Baylie, and 51 other members of Providence conference, (of the Methodist Episcopal Church,) against the reestablishment of flogging in the Navy.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petition of Joseph C. Delano and others, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, asking for light-boats to be placed on Minot's Ledge, and the south shoal of Nantucket.

Also, that a buoy boat may be placed near the shoals called the Bass and Great Rips.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, relative to the state of affairs in Oregon, growing out of a conflict of opinion among the authorities of that Territory in regard to the location of the seat of government of the Territory; which was read, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of State, communicating statements showing the number of passengers who arrived in the United States from 30th of September, 1850, to 1st of January, 1852; which was read, and ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, Lieutenant Williamson's report and survey in reference to the Umpqua and Rogue rivers; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MANGUM. I desire again to throw myself on the indulgence of the Senate for the space of five minutes. When a man begins to speak of himself, he generally becomes garrulous, and occupies a good deal of time; but I will be very short, Mr. President; I will limit myself to five minutes.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent.

Several SENATORS. Go on.

Mr. MANGUM. A newspaper was placed in my hands by a friend yesterday—a paper that I am not accustomed to read—in which I find a violent, unjustifiable, and a most atrociously injurious personal assault made upon me. Here it is:

WASHINGTON, April 17.

The presidential movements here continue to be the engrossing topics, and they absorb all other matters of interest. It is in vain to disguise facts, and to face them always is true heroism.

An impression prevails—be it true or not, it is yet the impression—that Mr. Senator Mangum made the speech in the Senate he has made in consequence of the lure of the Vice Presidency on the Scott ticket; and an impression prevails that a like lure is held out to Mr. Senator Jones, of Tennessee, in consequence of which is the division manifested among the Southern Whigs in Congress. I must not be censured for writing you of the existence of this impression. I did not create it. It is my bounden duty, as your correspondent, to write you not only facts, but widespread rumors affecting public men; and when these rumors are put by me into print, I but confer an obligation in giving them a reason to contradict in public what is everywhere whispering in private. The rumor and the belief among many, therefore, is, that at supper parties and at dinner parties a coalition has been formed between Mr. Mangum and ex-Governor Seward on one side, involving others on their respective sides, that with General Scott, as the unwritten candidate for the North, is to be run Mr. MANGUM South, or Mr. JONES, with the distribution of other high offices among their followers in North Carolina, and Tennessee, and Kentucky. Hence this astonishing coalition!

Mr. Mangum was selected, rumor adds, to preside over the Whig Congressional caucus at a private meeting, where Governor Seward was the prominent spirit, and it was there determined that the Whig compromise resolution of the first Congressional caucus should be ruled out of order. All this may be most untrue, and I indorse not one word of it; but such rumors are as current in the Washington circles as any item of news in circulation. I have before me names of men alleged to have been present at these private dinner and supper caucuses, but it is not my business to invade social circles further than as they produce public measures. The Scott speeches agreed upon in these caucuses to follow Mr. Mangum, from Tennessee and North Carolina, and to back him up, will soon tell what I need not write.

It is agreed, too—and Mr. Mangum's speech already discloses it—that the Whig compromise resolution of the early Congressional caucus is to be repudiated, not only for the coming Congressional caucus, by being ruled out of order, but in the Whig National Convention, repudiated as unequal for and unnecessary also. Some of the Southern Whigs in this new movement insist upon it, that the waiving of the issue now is but its adjournment to a more fitting body—the Whig National Convention—and such of them as are in earnest (for some of them are) are but dupes, as dupes they should be. The whole compromise, as a "finality," is to have the go-by, then, in the convention, and such is the supper and dinner caucus understanding among the high contracting parties, and the go-by it will have and should have in the present position of things. Why? I think I hear you ask, in astonishment. Why? Hear me, then, and I will tell you why.

We Northern Whigs can never fight for Southern constitutional rights on Northern ground, if Southern men abandon us. The provision in the Constitution for the surrender of fugitive slaves is to us a most unpopular, often a most revolting and shocking duty; but it is a duty imposed upon us by the Constitution, and as sacred—solemn a part of that instrument, as any other section in it. If such leading men as Mangum, Stanly, Jones of Tennessee, or any portion of Kentucky, ever abandon us when we struggle in the North for the unquestioned, unquestionable rights of the Southern States, we must fall before the unpopularity of the fugitive slave provision of the Constitution. We cannot stand up for men who refuse to stand up for themselves. We have no earthly interest in protecting the odious parts of the Constitution, surrendered by the South itself. We will never be the catchers of negroes that North Carolina men or Kentucky men do not want. If we can evade that provision of the Constitution by Southern acquiescence, we must assuredly will. Slave catching, next to slave trading, is thought by most people to be the meanest of all occupations. We Whigs who, in the North, have sacrificed ourselves, our popularity, our power, to preserve the consecrated instrument as George Washington and a John Adams bequeathed us, are resolved from all obligations to continue this self-sacrifice when such men as Messrs. Mangum, Stanly, Jones, and others, acting for their States, acquit us from the contract.

And why should we continue this sacrifice? Answer ye me that, Messrs. Editors. You have given the country from Western New York an anti-slavery man for President, whose education, every feeling of whose nature, beyond all doubt, was and is anti-slavery, but who, upon becoming President, and taking the oath faithfully to administer the Government under the Constitution, remembered there was a South as well as a North, and who now, for this remembrance only, is assailed by all the violence of abolition, assisted even in this assault by such men as Mr. Mangum in his echoes of what they say, viz: that Mr. Fillmore is unavailable among the Whigs of the North, and in the demand of his immolation therefor. This Southern man admits, in his own State, that Mr. Fillmore is preferred above all others, but he advances the extra judicial dictum that he is not available in the land of his boyhood and birth, and that the State which has hitherto crowned him with its highest honors, will now turn its back upon him. Why, however, it may be asked, I suppose, can he not carry Northern Whig votes,—an avowment by the way, as unfounded as cruel in Mr. Mangum's mouth—why, (if admitted,) because he has been faithful to the Constitution and to the South, as well as to the North. We see in Mr. Fillmore, therefore, (and the same may be said of Mr. Webster, for their course is one,) Northern men sacrificed by Southern men, and sacrificed by Southern men, too, because, in obedience to their oaths to support the Constitution, they have supported in good faith that provision of it which secures the rights of the South.

The path of duty, therefore, for Northern National Whigs, if Mr. Mangum and his followers persist in their course, and are satisfied at home, or even by divisions at home, is clear; and that path is, to let the South take care of itself, its fugitive slaves and all. If Southern men encourage the reopening or the keeping open the anti-slavery issues, why, let the reopening come, and if slavery be an institution that cannot stand the test of law, or religion, or popular opinion, it must tumble down. If Mr. Mangum can embrace in caucus, Governor Seward, fresh from the Bloomer anti-slavery demonstrations of Auburn, and Thaddeus Stevens, with hands red with the blood of the Gorsuch murder in Christiana, without any definition of principles—nay, declaring them all as out of order—why cannot you, the editors of the Express? I see no reason why you Northern Whigs, who, as forlorn hopes, have led on even the Democratic columns from the errors of the Wilmot proviso to the defense of the Constitution and the Laws, should act as forlorn hopes any more. When the Southern generals—chief are deserting you on the field of battle, you would be fools to be leading forlorn hopes in their behalf. There are periods in politics, as in war, when to surrender is a duty as well as discretion. I counsel no surrender now, however, but more vigilant action than ever until it is settled whether Mr. Mangum leads, or even divides the South. New York and New England Whigs of the national faith should stand by their principles, and such exponents of them as Mr. Fillmore and Mr. Webster, as long as the Southern Whigs are true in mass; but if the Southern Whig regiment even stagger, or begin to stagger, sauve qui peut be the cry. Mr. Mangum, however, it is believed, will soon be put hors du combat.

General Scott will certainly be nominated President in the Whig National Convention, if the Southern Whigs divide between him and any Northern man, and of that there can be no doubt; or, vice versa, if the Southern Whigs are united, Mr. Fillmore or Mr. Webster will be the man. If General Scott is nominated on Mr. Mangum's programme, it is wisely calculated, in these dinner or supper caucuses of which I have been speaking, that he can carry the Northern States, with some (one only) Southern State. Even such a State as Maryland is given up on the canvass I have seen! Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York, with their solid columns, are set down for him sure! North Carolina, Tennessee, and Louisiana, are utterly sacrificed in this calculation. It is felt and known that, with such able men from Tennessee speaking, as Mr. Gentry is reported to have spoken the other night, in the Whig caucus, or such as Mr. Outlaw, of North Carolina, speaking with the energy he is reported to have done, there can be no possible hope of these States.

Mr. Mangum's programme, therefore, is a wise one: utter abandonment of the compromise bills, and the permission to run General Scott in the free States, with the repeal, or virtual annulment, of the fugitive slave law, upon every Whig banner. His strength in the free States will be determined by the candidate the Democracy run against him; but it is obvious, already, that in Ohio, central and western New York, Abolition Democracy will beat Whig Abolition in this scheme, two to one. The best Whig districts in Ohio have been cut out by demagoguing Democratic Abolition; and in this race of demagoguing, there is nothing that can equal, much less eclipse, such men as Rantoul, in New England, or the Chase and Giddings free Democracy of Ohio.

I have no right to advise you, Messrs. Editors, but the programme I have marked out for myself I may ask you to publish for others to see. As a Northern man I shall go—nay, I must go—with the Northern Whig party, even with this threatened new inscription of it: "The practical nullification of the fugitive slave section of the Constitution;" simply because I have nowhere else to go, save into the arms of a Democracy, three fourths of whose presses in the State in which I reside go for the very same thing, and almost everything else besides. No single man, or single set of men, can breast the flood of Abolitionism when such men as Mr. Mangum take away their dykes. He who attempts it would only be drowned in some Zuyder Zee. The Whig party is dear to me, and I cannot abandon it now, even with these its great faults, to cling to something worse. General Scott, if nominated and elected by us, is a man whom, of himself, we can trust; and we must live as well as we can in the malaria and the influences that will have nominated and elected him. They do us all to proscription, to utter proscription; we see, know, and feel, as like influences did under General Taylor; but what men suffer are things unimportant, as long as a principle can be maintained. Parties are never perfect, and a man must make a choice of the best of them. Under General Scott, as under General Taylor, if General Scott is faithful to the influences that make him President, Mr. Webster must hang around ante chambers, as he hung before, repulsed or frozen, and Mr. Fillmore must be sneered at as not having the power to get even a clerkship for a friend, or Mr. Clay be denounced, as denounced he was when he introduced his omnibus bill.

The future is big with events. No human being can foresee or control them. It seems to me an utter disruption of all old parties is portending.

AN EYE ON THE CAPITOL.

The following editorial article I find in the same paper which contains this letter—The New York Evening Express, of Tuesday, April 20th:

"The letter from our occasional Washington correspondent to-day being of that kind which will probably create an excitement at the Capitol, we have, for the sake of peace, delayed its publication, so that it will not appear at the Capitol until after the meeting of the Whig caucus to-night. The writer, in one thing, expresses our own views, and in others he does not. He argues his case ably, and with effect. Had he passed the whole winter at Washington, in stead of a portion of it, his view might have been different, but, being an independent citizen, and just as independent of the present Administration and all its influences, as of all candidates for the Presidency who hope to succeed the present Administration, and above administering to any popular or official caprice, his views are as frankly given as they are strongly expressed.

"The tone of this letter leads us to apprehend that the Whig caucus this evening will not be harmonious; that Mr. Davis should attend it, and some other Whig Senators from the South, should they be present, will leave the caucus, together with Messrs. Gentry, Marshall, Williams, Cabell, Landry, and other Representatives from the South. Messrs. Mangum, Jones, Stanly, Calhoun, of Tennessee, Gray of Maryland, and others, we judge, from recent public incidents and letters, will remain, and, of course, these will control the result.

"If Southern Whigs choose to divide upon such an issue as the compromise measures, it is not for us to complain. Upon the merits of these measures our views are unalterably fixed, and neither time nor circumstances can change them. It is, however, to us a source of deep mortification to see Whigs doubly disagreeing upon this question—first, as to its utility and justice; and secondly, upon the propriety of sustaining it publicly. The enemies of the compromise, especially at the North, are made happy by this state of fact; and if this is any source of gratification to either of the Southern Whig sections, we long they will make much of it. It has, however, been so long the fashion for Northern Whigs to be divided upon the compromise questions, that perhaps we shall be rebuked for arraigning those at the South who now disagree as to their merits, and the propriety of sustaining them. We of the North, however, who have sustained these measures, have been made the pack horses for all sort of Free Soil abuse; and if there is a party at the South who prefer such alliances to others, we can have no sort of objection to the coalition. The full freedom of such fellowship may teach both sides more of charity towards different sections of country."

I do not notice these communications when they proceed from the usual organs of communication; but when there is internal evidence that they proceed from a higher official quarter, I may feel myself called on, as I now do, to stigmatize their falsehood, and brand their mendacity as they deserve, and to fix the burning brand upon the mendacious and sycophantic calumniator. In this letter to the New York Express, I am charged with a coalition with the Senator from New York, formed at "supper parties and dinner parties;" the rewards of which coalition is to bring high offices to the "high contracting parties," and their friends respectively. Sir, every charge of coalition, preconcert, or agreement with that Senator, on any public question, I pronounce to be unqualifiedly and absolutely false. We are understood to agree on the presidential question. On that I have not been deflected, for I stand now where I stood four years ago, as my colleague [Mr. BADGER] well knows, and will be ready to verify on all proper occasions.

The author of the letter undertakes to assign motives to me—the desire of high office, &c., &c.—and yet is somewhat at fault to designate it. The only one named is indivisible, notwithstanding two gentlemen are named for it. The terms of the coalition are singularly inexplicit and indefinite. The calumniator is at fault—not in his dirty trade, but as to the stipulations contained in the coalition.

Another is still more serious—it represents me in the light of venality, as having been selected in a private caucus—the New York Senator being present, and a prominent person in it—to preside in a Congressional caucus, to rule certain points of order to suit the views of these conspirators. This is equally false, as is well known to the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] who nominated me in a caucus of the Whigs of the Senate as chairman, as he likewise did of the Congressional caucus; which passed on both occasions without dissent, and was done upon his own motion, and without consultation (as I presume) with any one.

With a proper respect for the Senator from New York, and estimate of his talents; but he has as little influence on my opinions and my actions as any one in this body; and I think he would verify that, as matter of opinion, upon oath, if required. [Laughter.] Sir, with regard to the charge of venality, I may say that I have had the honor of occupying, for several years, the high seat which you now so worthily and ably fill; and the last act of this body, on my retirement, I look upon as the proudest honor ever conferred upon me; which was the unanimous vote of the Senate—with a majority in politics adverse to me, and when one objector could have arrested the proceeding—to give me the amount of salary fixed by law for a Vice President elected by the people. I suppose the gentlemen who observed my course here for years, saw nothing like venality or conscious partiality; otherwise, such a result could not have been realized.

These are the material allegations. I believe they have been willingly, wittingly, and wickedly made, with a full knowledge or belief of their falsehood, on the part of him who made them; and these allegations and insinuations I here pronounce to be—in the aggregate and in detail, in the whole and in every part—and I do it under every responsibility, moral and otherwise, that a gentleman can assume—utterly and absolutely false and unfounded, so far as they affect my honor or my integrity. The insidious and skulking editorial, designed to screen the malignant miscreant, speaks of an occasional correspondent!—who has been here but a part of the winter!—otherwise, he might have had other impressions. The skulking hypocrite! The base, cut-throat calumniator!

Sir, I have in my own mind no sort of doubt about the authorship. I have recently heard a speech in this Chamber, not from a Senator, between which and portions of the letter to the Express there is a remarkable identity of sentiment, identity of language, and singular identity or coincidence in minute turns of phraseology. It is incredible that both did not proceed from the same forge which has hitherto turned out much base, uncurrent coin, and I have thought proper to notice and brand it with the stigma of base, unprovoked, deliberate and deliberated falsehood, so far as I am able to do so; and if the author can think of anything (as doubtless he can in his vocation) that will more strongly and pointedly express contempt and contumely on my part, he has, by these presents, a carte blanche from me to write it, and print it, too, in the Express, always with the reservation that he is neither to make me say or insinuate that, in my opinion, the author has any essential element of a true gentleman. A half-way mendicant of an editor, who fishes up his dirty and dependent bread from the filthy pools of slander and calumny, may, in some sort, in some circumstances, be an object of pity, for "his poverty and not his will consents."

But when some freak of fortune shall throw an editor into a high official position, and he shall affect the loftiest airs of a brilliant court, and majestically roll in his splendid coach through the broad avenues of the capital of the Union—his official position serving as a passport to refined and virtuous, and the highest and most polished circles of society, it is always to be deplored to find him devoid of the principles, the sentiments, and the feelings of a gentleman—and when this passport enables him to find his way to "private supper or dinner parties," and we find him prowling about for the means of picking up calumny and slanders or facts, as the case may be, in the way of his vocation, to minister to the rabid appetites of the readers of his press or Express, and thus abusing the hospitalities in which he unworthily participates, he is a fit subject to be kicked out of every decent circle, and banished the society of honorable men. That is my opinion.

I am alleged to have met the Senator at "dinner and supper parties," where all the mischief has been concocted, and the coalition perfected.

Sir, I have met the honorable Senator but once on a social occasion this session, where all parties met, Southern-Rights, Whigs, and Democrats, and where an elegant and refined hospitality excluded every debatable and party matter.

Sir, I turn from this subject as I do from its author, with loathing, contempt, and scorn.

The identity of language, of sentiment, and other circumstances, plainly enough indicate the author. I have little doubt he is one of the editors of the Express. And I here pronounce, under all the responsibilities that can appertain to me, that he is a malicious slanderer, a mendacious calumniator, and devoid of all the essential principles, instincts, and feelings of a gentleman—a man of honor. That editor of the Express, I take to be now a member of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot permit such language. It is altogether out of order.

Mr. MANGUM. I am aware, sir, that it is out of order; and I am done.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. CLEMENS presented a petition of citizens of Benton county, Alabama, praying a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Alabama and Georgia railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ADAMS presented the petition of the administrator of John F. Wray, deceased, praying that the money paid for certain lands purchased of the United States, his title to which has been declared null and void by the courts of the State of Mississippi, may be refunded; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the petition of William T. Zollickoffer, praying arrears of pension and his traveling expenses from the place of his discharge from the army to his home; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a memorial of members of the Presbyterian churches in the District of Columbia, praying the donation of a portion of the public land in the District as a cemetery or place of burial; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS presented two petitions of merchants and others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of mail steamers; which were ordered to be laid on the table.

PETITION WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. GEYER, it was Ordered, The petition of John Moore, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Jacob Gideon, asking indemnity for damages sustained in consequence of a violation of contract by the Navy Department, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Hezekiah Miller, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Jane Kearney, praying to be allowed bounty land for the services of her son, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred documents relating to the claim of Emily Hooe, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADBURY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill to incorporate the proprietors of the Washington Cemetery, reported back the same with amendments.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of the heirs of Jeremiah Wingate, reported back the same without amendment.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill to revive, for a limited time, "An act in relation to donations of land to certain persons in the State of Arkansas," reported back the same without amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a motion to print the memorial of Henry M. Price, reported adversely thereto; and the report was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred a resolution of the 15th March, for the printing of "five thousand copies of a journal of a military reconnaissance from Santa Fé to New Mexico, to the Navajo country, by Lieutenant James H. Simpson," reported adversely thereto; and the report was agreed to.

O'REILLY TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. DOUGLAS, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill for the protection of the emigrant route, and a telegraphic line, and for an overland mail, between the Missouri river and the settlements in California and Oregon; which was read and passed to the second reading, as follows:

A Bill for the protection of the emigrant route, and a telegraphic line, and for an overland mail between the Missouri river and the settlements in California and Oregon.
Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be and he is hereby authorized to raise, organize, and equip, in conformity with the first, second, and third sections of the "act to provide for raising a regiment of mounted rifle men, and for establishing military stations on the route to Oregon," approved May 19, 1843, three regiments of volunteers, of ten companies to each regiment, and one hundred men to each company, to serve for the period of three years, in guarding and protecting the emigrant routes and telegraphic lines, and of conveying the mails between the Missouri river and the settlements in California and Oregon, in the manner hereinafter provided:

There shall be established a line of military posts—say ten in number—at convenient and suitable points on said routes, and garrisoned by a sufficient force—say one hundred men at each post; and there shall also be established, in addition to said military posts, station-houses at suitable places, and distances not exceeding twenty miles apart, throughout the entire length of said routes, to be guarded and protected by at least twenty men at each station; said posts and station-houses to be of a cheap and temporary character, yet strong enough for the purposes of defense, and of affording the protection contemplated by this act, and to be erected by the volunteers, from materials to be obtained in the vicinity of the route.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said volunteers, under the direction of the President of the United States, to keep the roads on the said routes in good traveling condition, with safe bridges and ferries across the streams; to carry the mails and to protect all telegraphic lines, and persons employed in establishing and working the same, and all emigrants, travelers, settlers, and traders along the line, and in the vicinity, from hostilities and depredations by the Indians, and to aid in the execution of the laws whenever called upon by the proper authorities.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said volunteers, in accordance with such regulations as the President shall prescribe, shall be required to raise, gather, and preserve, all the provisions, bread-stuffs, forage, and supplies of whatever kind, which shall be necessary to sustain themselves and their animals, without cost to the Government, to the fullest extent that the country can be made to yield and produce the same.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the colonels of the said regiments shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and all other officers of said regiments, commissioned and non-commissioned, shall be elected by the volunteers in accordance with such regulations as the President shall prescribe. And the volunteers shall be enrolled for the period of three years; and all the officers and men composing said regiments shall be entitled to the same pay and emoluments as are allowed, by the act referred to in the first section, to the officers and men of the regiment of mounted riflemen respectively; and, in addition thereto, shall be entitled, so soon as said military posts and stations shall have been established, to select, each for himself, one section, or six hundred and forty acres of land, along said routes, but not to include the tracts upon which said posts and stations shall be located, which are hereby reserved for public uses; and they shall receive patents from the President for said lands upon the expiration of their respective periods of service; and in case any such volunteer or officer shall die while in the service, the land to which he would have been entitled shall be granted to his heirs. But the said volunteers shall furnish their own clothes and horses, and horse equipments; and when mustered into service, shall be armed at the expense of the United States.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That whenever it shall become necessary for the purpose of carrying the objects of this act more fully into effect, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to increase or to reduce the number of said posts and stations, or to change their location, or to increase or diminish the number of men to be stationed in any of them, according to the necessity and circumstances of the case.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That Henry O'Reilly, and such persons as he shall associate with him, are hereby authorized, at their own expense, to establish and operate lines of telegraphic communication over the public domain, along said routes, and under the protection of said military posts and stations, subject to such regulations and conditions as shall be prescribed by the President, and during the period of three years, shall be permitted to use the military posts and stations as telegraphic stations free of charge.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That in order to enable the President to carry into effect the provisions of this act, including the supplies of live stock, agricultural implements, and the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands along the route, the sum of _____ is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

JUDICIAL SALARY.

Mr. BRODHEAD submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the judge of the western district of Pennsylvania.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORTNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills:

An act to authorize the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to sell the lands heretofore appropriated for the use of schools in that State; and to ratify and approve the sales already made; and

An act to release from reservation, and restore to the mass of public lands, certain lands in the State of Arkansas.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the apportionment bill will now be taken up and finally acted upon. It will give rise to no debate, and will consume only a moment. I hope that, as an act of courtesy, it will be taken up.

Mr. BADGER. That bill ought to be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT. Is the Senator aware that an amendment is pending which was offered by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Downs,] who is not now in his place?

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir; but he agreed to have it taken up this morning. He said he was going to make no speech on the subject, and was quite willing that the bill should be taken up. I make the motion to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the "bill supplementary to 'An act providing for the taking of the 'Seventh and subsequent Censuses of the United States, and to fix the number of the members of the House of Representatives, and provide for their future apportionment among the several States,' approved 23d May, 1850."

The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. Downs, to strike out "four" and insert "five," so as to make the number of Representatives two hundred and thirty-five, and to add at the end the words, "and Louisiana shall have five instead of four Representatives."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. I now move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting what I send to the Chair. The amendment which I offer embraces the provisions of the bill as it now stands, in such language as to relieve it from the obscurity which some found in it. I have shown it to several individuals, and I believe it relieves the objections which they had to the bill.

The substitute is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior proceed forthwith to apportion the two hundred and thirty-three Representatives among the several States, in accordance with the provisions contained in the twenty-fifth section of the act of 23d of May, 1850, and according to the returns of the population which have been completed and returned to the Census Office, in the Department of the Interior; and it being made to appear that the returns of the population of California are imperfect or incomplete, it is further enacted that said State shall retain the number of Representatives prescribed by the act of admission thereof into the Union, until a new apportionment; and for this purpose the whole number of Representatives is hereby increased to two hundred and thirty-four, until such apportionment.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if, at any future decennial enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, the census of any district or sub-division in the United States shall have been improperly taken, or if the returns of any district or sub-division shall be accidentally lost or destroyed, the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to order a new enumeration of such district or sub-division.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the twentieth section of the said act be amended by striking out the words "has been" from the last line, and inserting the words "may necessarily be" in lieu thereof.

Mr. BRADBURY. I believe that is very clear.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair, in looking to the proceedings, finds that the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana was an amendment to an amendment offered by the Senator from Maine. The question, therefore, comes up on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, which is to add an additional section.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator can withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT. The vote has been taken on amending it.

Mr. BADGER. True; but it has not been amended, and until it is amended it is under the control of the Senator.

Mr. BRADBURY. I suppose, as I now propose to strike out not only the entire amendment, but also another section of the bill, it is in order.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator must be aware that another amendment, offered by himself, is pending. But he can withdraw that, and offer the present one.

Mr. BRADBURY. I will do so.

The PRESIDENT. It is proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what has just been read.

Mr. BORLAND. I concur in the propriety of the proposed amendment of the Senator from Maine, with one exception. I think that it would be better to omit the reason assigned there for permitting California to retain her present representation in the House—to make the enactment without assigning a reason, I think is sufficient. If the reason be omitted, each Senator, in giving his vote, will be controlled by whatever reason may be present in his own mind. But in assigning a reason, it may require Senators to vote for that which they do not believe to be proper. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator to omit that portion, and let the enactment be, that California shall retain her present representation without assigning any reason for it.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not regard the reason as very important. It is for the Senate to determine whether they will retain it or not. The language to which the Senator from Arkansas refers, giving the reason, is in the beginning of the following:

"And it being made to appear that the returns of the population of California are imperfect and incomplete, it is further enacted that said State shall retain the number of Representatives prescribed by the act of the admission thereof into the Union, until a new apportionment."

I supposed there was a propriety in this case, in suggesting the reason why we introduced an apparent anomaly.

Mr. BORLAND. I consider the effect of the words which I propose to strike out, as they stand in the proposed amendment, as unimportant so far as the meaning and effect of the act is concerned; but I am unwilling to give my vote for a reason which does not control my action, and I apprehend there are others similarly situated. And as the giving of the reason is not necessary to give efficiency to the bill, I think it would be better to strike it out, and let each Senator vote upon the provision which is complete in itself, and be governed by what reason he may. I move to strike from the amendment the words, "it being made to appear that the returns of the population of California are imperfect and incomplete."

Mr. BRADBURY. I apprehend that the difficulty is founded upon an erroneous construction of the Constitution. The Constitution requires that the apportionment shall be made upon the population, and not upon the returns. And we give the reason here, why we allow California to retain her present representation contrary to the returns—because we believe that there are people there who are not returned. I think there is a propriety in retaining the reason.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senator does not seem to understand my view. I do not differ with him at all about what he has just said. The ground upon which I shall vote on this question, for allowing California to retain her present representation, is, that she was not in the Union, and was not contemplated by the act of May 23d, 1850, which requires an enumeration to be made in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution; and that the act which admitted her, dated 9th of September, after this whole transaction had taken place, is a piece of subsequent legislation; and that the provision in that giving her two Representatives, until the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, gives her the right to retain those two Representatives until the next enumeration ordered by an act of Congress. She rightfully holds them, therefore, in my opinion, by the legislation as it now stands. That being the reason which controls my judgment in voting to allow her now to retain them, I cannot properly vote for the proposition assigning a reason which does not control me.

Mr. BADGER. I think my friend from Arkansas will see that, at last, it comes round to precisely the ground which is presented in the words proposed to be stricken out. Assuming what he says to be correct, that the act providing for the taking of the census was passed before California was admitted into the Union, and that it did not strictly and properly apply to California; yet, suppose that, under the law, the returns from California had been complete and perfect, we should undoubtedly have given her a representation according to the returns. Therefore, the real reason, however it originates, whatever might have been the original difficulty in the case, which makes it necessary now to introduce this provision, and which determines as to introduce it, is the fact, that there are no complete returns for California. It seems to me, as the Senator from Maine has said, that as the enactment is anomalous, it is better that the reason for the anomaly should appear on the face of the enactment.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to, and no further amendment being offered, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852.

When this bill was taken up for consideration on the 16th instant, Mr. HUNTER explained its provisions. We are now requested by Mr. HUNTER to state, that in those remarks he made an error of calculation in stating the excess of expenditures, as stated by the Quartermaster General, over that given from the Register's office, as showing a sum of $1,221,856, which was probably derived from military contributions or the California civil fund. The real excess is $241,847. The most material error to which this led was in stating the expenditure for the Army proper in the fiscal year ending June, 1851, at $965 per man. It should have been $875 per man. The error is corrected in the pamphlet edition.

The pending question was now stated to be on the item making additional compensation for the Collins line of steamers.

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to a question of order. It is, that the pending amendment to this bill is not in order under the rule.

Mr. BADGER. I rise to another question of order. It is, whether the Senator from Arkansas can take the floor from my friend from New Jersey? [Mr. MILLER.]

The PRESIDENT. Certainly; he can raise a question of order.

Mr. BADGER. Then I rise to another question of order. It is, whether the Senator can raise the question whether an amendment is in order which has been received by the Senate, and had several speeches made upon it?

The PRESIDENT. The question can be raised. The amendment has been reported by a committee. The question now arises, whether, under the rule, the committee could report such an amendment.

Mr. BADGER. When can that question be raised?

The PRESIDENT. Whenever the subject comes up for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. That is true; but can it be raised after the subject has been debated for two days?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot distinguish, as to that, between different periods.

Mr. BORLAND. My question of order arises under the 30th rule of the Senate, which is:

"No amendment, proposing additional appropriations, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate, during that session, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is fully aware of the rule which has been read. But it is not for the Chair to decide, when an amendment is proposed, whether it is in conformity with a resolution that has been passed, or with an estimate that has been furnished. When objection is made, that fact is to be established; otherwise, according to the rule, it would be considered out of order to make the amendment. The Chair cannot, by intuition, determine that no estimate has been made.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to make a suggestion. In the first place, the rule has nothing to do with this bill. This is not a general appropriation bill. The gentleman must look where we get our idea of general appropriation bills, and he will see that the House of Representatives have a rule which requires that their committees shall prepare their general appropriation bills which are specified. They are the regular general appropriation bills of the year. It is no part of the duty of the committee in the House, under the rule there, to prepare a deficiency bill. It comes up incidentally. It is not a general appropriation bill; and the rule has no application to it. It might as well be said, that, if a bill should be brought here to appropriate a particular sum of money to a particular object or purpose, you could not move an amendment to put in an appropriation. The object of the rule, which was adopted at the instance of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] is to prevent the general appropriation bills of the year from being loaded with all sorts of private or other unascertained claims.

But, in the next place, if my friend from Arkansas had waited until my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MILLER] had made his speech, he would have found that this amendment is proposed in consequence of an estimate from the proper Department.

The PRESIDENT. That being the case, the Chair, of course, retains the amendment, until the Senator produces the evidence.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand the decision of the Chair to be, that the amendment is in order.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina states, that it is in conformity with an estimate which will be shown by the Senator from New Jersey. The Chair states—waiving the question of this bill being a general appropriation bill, which the Chair does not deem it necessary to decide—an estimate being furnished, of course there can be no question as to its being in order.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it would be best to postpone the decision of this question of order, until the Senator from New Jersey makes his speech. I do not think the estimate to which the Senator from North Carolina refers, is such an estimate as brings the amendment within the rule. But that will be for the Senate to determine, and I think it will be better to determine it after the Senator from New Jersey has made his speech.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair must have the evidence before he can decide.

Mr. BORLAND. I am perfectly willing to postpone the decision of the question, until the Senator presents the case.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot decide without the whole evidence.

Mr. BADGER. I do not know what estimate will be satisfactory to my friend from Virginia. We have an estimate from the Department of the sum required, founded upon a recommendation in the report made at the commencement of the session.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I was one of the majority of the Committee on Finance which agreed to report this amendment. The subject had been recommended to Congress by the head of one of the Departments, and a general estimate made; which was produced before the committee by the honorable Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN.] The question presented by the amendment I consider to be one of very high importance to the country; in which not only the parties to this contract, but many of the great interests of the country are concerned. In the year 1849, a contract was entered into by this Government, through the Navy Department, with Mr. Collins, to build a certain number of mail ocean steamers, giving a description of their general power and capacity, and specifying the purposes for which they were to be used. By that contract, the steamers were to perform twenty trips a year—that is, monthly trips during four months of the year, and semi-monthly trips during eight months of the year; and for which service he was to receive the sum of $385,000.

The objects that the Government and Congress had in view in entering into this contract were of a national character. They were, in the first place, to secure the speedy and cheap transportation of letters from Europe to this country, and from this country to Europe. In the second place, the Government desired to have built ocean steamers of sufficient power and capacity, that might, in case of an emergency, be employed by the Government in war. Other collateral and public objects were taken into consideration—such as the transportation of passengers, the transportation of light articles of freight and specie; which at that time were under the control of English steamers. These were the objects which induced Congress to pass the law authorizing the contract.

Now, Mr. President, I intend to show in the few remarks which I shall make on this occasion, that all these national objects have been accomplished; that Collins & Co. have built four ocean steamers of great power, and superior speed; that they are transporting the mails from Europe to this country, and from this country back again, in less time than was ever accomplished before; that the Government may at any time, in case of any emergency, command the service of four of the most splendid steamers that were ever built, surpassing in speed, in power, and in tonnage, any ships of the kind now afloat; that by means of the establishment of the American line we now successfully compete with, and even surpass in speed its great English rival, the Cunard line; that the American people now enjoy all those great advantages which were contemplated by Congress at the time the contract was made, and that every obligation on the part of the contractors has been faithfully performed by them. But, sir, in performing this great enterprise, so advantageous to the country, the contractors have sustained great losses. They state their loss during the last year to be $338,574—in other words, that in every trip which they performed during the last year they lost $16,928 79.

Some time during the last autumn, the Cunard line of steamers having been ordered up to weekly service the year round, the Postmaster General deemed it his duty to direct Mr. Collins to increase the trips of his line from twenty to twenty six per year, and to commence on the first of January last, with assurances of additional compensation, to be made by Congress.

This arrangement appears by the letters of the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Navy, which I will read:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, }
November 15, 1851. }

Sir: By their contract, the proprietors of the Collins line of steamers between New York and Liverpool, as you are aware, are required to perform only twenty voyages per annum—that is, monthly trips during four months, and semi-monthly trips eight months, of each year. In alternating, as at present, with the steamers of the Cunard line, we are informed by Mr. Collins that, by the 1st of January next, his steamers will have made seventeen trips, leaving only three voyages to be performed from the 1st January to the 31st April, the end of the contract year.

The Cunard line has now been ordered up to weekly service the year round; and deeming it highly important, therefore, that the trips on the Collins line should be increased from twenty to twenty-six a year, I have already given Mr. Collins the assurance, that if he shall see fit to run the necessary additional trips, to alternate, as at present with the British lines through the year, and will look to Congress for compensation, I will recommend to Congress the allowance of pro rata, or such additional, pay therefor as shall be considered fair and proper under the circumstances.

It cannot be doubted that it is for the interest of the United States to afford such aid to the Collins line as will enable it to compete successfully with the British lines running in connection therewith; and I beg leave to call your attention to the subject, in the hope that you will unite with me in such recommendation to Congress as will secure the increase of the service of the Collins line from twenty to twenty-six trips a year as a permanent arrangement.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. K. HALL,
Postmaster General.

Hon. W. A. GRAHAM, Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 28, 1851.

SIR: Your letter of the 25th inst., in relation to further mail service for your steamers between New York and Liverpool, has been received.

You are informed, in reply, that this Department concurs with the Postmaster General in his requirements of additional service by the mail steamers from New York to Liverpool, as expressed by him in his letter to this Department, of which you have been furnished with a copy.

You will, therefore, be pleased to furnish a schedule of the days of sailing of the Liverpool mail steamers of your line at as early a day as practicable.

The subject relating to compensation will be referred by the Postmaster General for the consideration of Congress.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. A. GRAHAM.

EDWARD K. COLLINS, Esq., and associates, New York.

The Postmaster General, in his annual report, also expressly refers to this subject, and recommends that an appropriation be made. I will read part of what he says:

"The contract with the Collins line of mail steamers between New York and Liverpool, requires the performance of but twenty trips out and back during the year. For the purpose, however, of arranging weekly trips in American steamers, alternating with those of the Cunard steamers, which depart weekly from this country and England, these steamers have made departures each alternate week, and have thus completed a weekly line of American steamers from New York. If these trips are continued as heretofore, there will have been performed in the present year three more trips than are provided for in the contract, and to continue the weekly trips thereafter will require six additional trips per year.

"As the English Government had made new arrangements, by which the weekly trips of the Cunard steamers were to be continued through the year, it was deemed highly important to continue the weekly trips of the American steamers also. Under these circumstances, Mr. Collins was requested to continue his trips every other week, and was assured that the payment by Congress of a pro rata compensation would be recommended. It is claimed by the contractors, and it is believed justly, that a pro rata compensation for these extra trips, in the winter season, will not fully indemnify them; and if the extra trips are performed, it is earnestly recommended that a pro rata compensation, with such addition, if any, as may be necessary to give the contractors a fair and liberal compensation for the extra service, be authorized by Congress. The unrivaled qualities and speed of the ships of this line, and the very satisfactory manner in which the service has been performed, establishing the superiority of American skill and enterprise in the construction of ocean steamers and in ocean steam navigation, entitle the proprietors of this line to the most favorable consideration, and I cannot doubt that Congress will make the appropriation recommended.

Here is the recommendation from the head of a Department which is called for by Senators. There was also an estimate made by the Department and submitted to the committee. This estimate was confined to the pro rata allowance mentioned by the Postmaster General. No estimate, of course, could be made by the Department for such additional compensation as Congress might think proper to give for the purpose of sustaining this enterprise. I therefore submit, that this amendment is not subject to the technical objection made by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND.] We are not obliged to confine our action to the amount of the estimate. The whole subject is before us.

These additional trips were to be performed in the winter, with but few passengers, at an extraordinary expense; therefore a mere pro rata allowance would be no fair compensation. Collins & Co. have submitted a statement showing the great losses which they have sustained in running their ships under the present contract; that statement has been verified by affidavit; and no Senator who is acquainted with the character and high honor of the persons connected with the Collins line, would hardly require such a verification of their statements. At all events, the committee were entirely satisfied that these losses have been sustained; and I think I can satisfy the Senate that unless the company receives this additional compensation from the Government the enterprise must fail.

I will now state to the Senate what will be the additional compensation proposed by the amendment. Under the original contract, they were to perform twenty trips a year, and receive for them $385,000, or $19,250 per trip. The six additional trips per year, under a pro rata allowance, would be $115,500, making for the year's service the sum of $500,500, under the present contract. The amendment proposes to give them at the rate of $33,000 per trip for twenty-six trips; making $858,000 a year. This increases the compensation on the fifty-two trips, $357,500, or $13,750 on each trip; but from this increase should be deducted the additional costs of running winter trips. In the statement of losses to which I have referred, there is given the cost of their ships, the actual average cost of every voyage, and the amount of capital invested. The cash cost of the steamers ready for sea is stated at $2,948,000, a little less than $3,000,000. The actual average cost of each voyage to England and back is stated at $65,215 64; the average receipts for each voyage at $48,286 85, making a deficiency of $16,928 79, on each voyage, which for twenty trips would amount to $338,575 80, and on twenty-six trips $440,148.

The Senate will perceive by this statement that the amount proposed by the amendment falls a few thousand dollars short of the loss which may be sustained upon the twenty-six trips to be run under the new arrangement.

I now wish to call the attention of the Senate to what I consider to have been the causes of these great losses sustained by the company. It has been asserted that they are owing to extravagance; that the ships are larger and more splendid and costly than the company were bound to build by the contract. It is true that these ships are of a superior character in style, size, and power to those contemplated by the contract; but ought we to complain of this? The company may, in their laudable ambition to surpass their foreign rival, have expended more money than was required by their contract; but surely we ought not to take advantage of this, and object to their doing more for the success of this great enterprise than they were bound by law to do. But, sir, the most of these losses arose from other causes—from circumstances over which they had no control. One great cause of extra expenditure on the part of the company was owing to the fact that the enterprise was an entirely new one in this country—so new that when they commenced building their first ship, it was found that the very machinery and the tools necessary for the construction of their powerful engines were not to be found in the country. These implements of construction had to be either procured from England, or made here at great expense; and large sums of money were necessarily expended in experiments upon this preliminary machinery required in the construction of the ships.

But that is not the principal cause of their losses. By the contract, Collins & Co. were not bound to build ships of the size and power of those they have constructed. They might have merely followed in the wake of the Cunard line; taken their ships as models, and imitated them in size and model, and been contented with their speed. But they felt, as every American citizen felt, that this was a great undertaking—that it was a national contest, and in competing with Great Britain upon this subject of ocean mail steamers, they desired to produce to the country and to the world ocean steamers a little superior to those built by Great Britain, and with which she then commanded the trade of the world. In accomplishing that, they have made great sacrifices; but they have by so doing put afloat ships far superior to those of the Cunard line in power and speed. For this they have expended large sums of money, and sustained great losses upon their capital.

Another cause why they have lost money is, that the moment their ships were put afloat, they met with a fierce and active competition in England, backed by the influence of the English Government. It was not a mere struggle between Mr. Collins and Mr. Cunard; it was not a mere struggle between the enterprise of an American citizen and a subject of Queen Victoria, standing upon their individual capital, talent, and enterprise. No, sir, it became a contest with the English Government. The moment the Collins line was established, it became a national concern with the people and Government of England to put down the Collins line, by extending encouragement to the Cunard line. At the same time, some of the first trips made by our steamers were unfortunate, and immediately the cry was raised in Europe, and especially in Great Britain, that they were not safe, consequently, passengers refused to go in them; and they made many trips in which they sustained great losses, on account of this alarm.

It may be true, as stated by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] that these gentlemen, under such circumstances, expended more money than they ought to have expended. But yet, we all know the feeling which exists in the mind of every American, for Brother Jonathan to beat John Bull in any enterprise of this character. Urged on by that national feeling, and, perhaps, carried to an extravagant extent, these gentlemen may have expended more money than was necessary to fulfill their contract; but surely they are not to be sacrificed on that account.

In accounting for the losses sustained by the Collins line, it is necessary also to compare the ships of his line with those of the Cunard line. By this comparison it will appear that this Government is enjoying the service of ships far superior in size, tonnage, power, and speed to those of the Cunard line, and at a less compensation upon their relative costs and power of service. I have prepared a comparative statement of the two lines, which I here submit to the Senate:

COLLINS STEAM-SHIPS.

Names.	Tonnage.	Horse power.	Capable of working.	Length.
1. Atlantic.....	3,000	1,000	1,500	274
2. Pacific.....	3,000	1,000	1,500	274
3. Baltic.....	3,000	1,000	1,500	280
4. Arctic.....	3,000	1,000	1,500	280
	12,000	4,000	6,000

Days. Hrs. Min's.

Baltic..... 9 13 0 from Liverpool to N. York.
Arctic..... 9 17 10 from N. York to Liverpool.

CUNARD STEAM-SHIPS.

Names.	Tonnage.	Horse power.	Capable of working.	Length.
1. Africa.....	2,266	800	1,000	280
2. America.....	1,832	650	800	249
3. Asia.....	2,266	800	1,000	280
4. Cambria.....	1,423	500	700	217
5. Canada.....	1,832	650	800	249
6. Europa.....	1,832	650	800	249
7. Niagara.....	1,832	650	800	249
	13,382	4,700	5,900

Days. Hrs. Min's.

Asia..... 10 23 30 from Liverpool to N. York.
Asia..... 10 12 15 from N. York to Liverpool.

Asia..... 10 22 30 from Liverpool to N. York.
Baltic..... 9 13 0 " " " " " "

Difference.. 1 9 30 of time.

Asia..... 10 12 15 from N. York to Liverpool.
Arctic..... 9 17 10 " " " " " "

Difference.. 0 19 5 of time.

These are the principal reasons why this company have sustained the loss mentioned. But what has been their loss? has been the country's gain. While they have been losing $16,000 per trip, we have been gaining great national advantages. I will endeavor to show that, in the first place, great advantages have been accomplished for our commerce generally. In order to illustrate this, we must look back to the commencement of the navigation of the ocean by steamships.

England commenced this system in the year 1838. It is true, that, as far back as 1819, an American ship, called the "Savannah," had gone from New York to Liverpool, partly by sail and partly by steam, in twenty-six days. If the American Government, at that time, had taken up the new enterprise with the same energy and force with which the English Government afterwards took it up in 1838, we should have had the honor and the glory of being the first to establish successfully the navigation of the ocean by steamers. In 1838 the "Great Britain" was built. She sailed on the 8th of April of that year from Liverpool, with, in the language of the history of that time, "seven adventurous passengers;" and she arrived in New York after a passage of fifteen days. In the year 1839, the Cunard line was established by a contract made by the British Government with Mr. Cunard, of Halifax, in Nova Scotia, for carrying the mails twice a month from Liverpool via Halifax to Boston, for seven years, for £65,000, or $325,000. Afterwards, the Government increased the compensation to £35,000, or $425,000; the service to be performed by ships of twelve hundred tons and four hundred and fifty horse power. Upon the establishment of the Collins line in 1839-'40, the English Government again increased the compensation to Mr. Cunard to £145,000, or $725,000, and not $697,000, as stated by the Senator from Virginia yesterday.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator from New Jersey refer to the statement which I made, as to what is given by the British Government to the Cunarders?

Mr. MILLER. I do.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I would say to the gentleman, that that statement was obtained from the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, from a statement which was put into his hands by the Postmaster General. I received a letter from the Postmaster General, requesting me to examine the statement, but, somehow, it was lost. But this memorandum was given to me by the Senator from Texas, and it is presumed to be the most authentic account we have of what is given by the British Government to the Cunard steamships. The account was made out, I believe, by the Admiralty itself.

Mr. MILLER. I know there are different statements in regard to what the English Government now pay to Mr. Cunard. I am informed—and I have confidence in the information—that the compensation is higher than I have stated, and that it is now actually over $1,000,000 a year. But I have authority here for the amount which I have stated. It is "Chambers's Papers for the People," a work of great authority, published in Edinburgh, in 1851. It contains a chapter on the English ocean mail routes, giving a full history of the rise, progress, and present state of the English policy upon this important subject. It is full of statistics, which must have been taken from the most authentic sources. I will read to the Senate what is stated to be the compensation received by Mr. Cunard in 1849, and the reason why it was then increased to the sum of £145,000:

"But with the exception of the voyage of the Savannah, in 1819, the citizens of the United States had not hitherto taken any part in conducting the steam navigation of the Atlantic; and it was not until after all but Cunard's ships had been withdrawn, that American-built steamers began to ply between England and New York. The formation of several companies for this purpose made Mr. Cunard anxious to cut out his contract, so as to carry the mails once a week, and thus render him more able to meet the expected competition. Mr. Cunard said before a committee of the House of Commons in July, 1849: 'I was most anxious to have [the extension of the contract] done, because I knew the consequences of having these rival lines of packets running against us, and that it would affect the Government more than it would affect us. I could not increase the number of passengers; but the number of letters would be considerably increased, or doubled, because if one person writes, the whole must write.' The proposal was agreed to; the mails were to be carried from Liverpool every Saturday, and from Boston or New York every Wednesday night, during four winter months, when it was to be fortnightly. Arrangements were made by which the Savannah to Halifax was to be abandoned. To effect this service, the vessel must steam altogether about 272,800 miles every year, and for it Mr. Cunard was to receive £145,000 per annum. This is the contract now in force. Mr. Cunard considered it not a new arrangement, but as an extension of the old; and as the service was doubled, and as the postage received of the steamers had hitherto been equal to the cost of money, he naturally supposed that the payment would not be doubled. But Mr. Goulburn, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, would not give more than £145,000, when Mr. Cunard said was 'a very unjust thing; and grandly added—'I beg to say this not with any disrespect to Mr. Goulburn: he did it to save the money to the country, but he took £25,000 a year from me for the good of the country.'"

This is the last contract that I have any certain information of, although I am informed that the compensation has been increased, in order to pay for the additional trips in winter. Mr. Cunard's "complaint" reply to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, ought to be noticed, and might, with propriety, be used by Mr. Collins in answer to the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] Mr. Goulburn, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, acting in pretty much the same capacity in which my friend from Virginia acts, cut down the compensation to £145,000, on which Mr. Cunard said, "he did it to save the money to the country, but he took £25,000 a year from me for the good of the country." I have shown, therefore, upon what I consider good authority, that the Cunard line is now receiving $725,000 a year instead of $696,000, or $15,000 a trip instead of $13,000, as stated yesterday by my friend from Virginia.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to understand fully the authority upon which the Senator from New Jersey relies in this case. I would ask him if all the information on this subject, as far as it relates to the action of the British Government, is not to be found in the official records of the proceedings of that Government, and whether they are not to be had in this city? I understand that we interchange official records with the British Government, and I apprehend that all their official action in regard to this matter is to be found in these records, which must necessarily be more reliable than a popular publication, made, I do not know whether in this country or in England, and thrown into general circulation—a sort of newspaper publication. I think, in a matter of this importance, involving facts which lie at the bottom of this question, we should have, as authority, official information, which I apprehend our Post Office Department has, and which is probably in the Library of Congress, or in some of the Departments of the Government. I would prefer, for that reason, to rely on official authority rather than on this popular publication.

Mr. HUNTER. The statement of $696,000 a year, which I derived from the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I used because I supposed he had the most authentic information. He derived it from that document, to which my attention was directed by the Postmaster General. I confess that I had supposed, before that, the amount given the Cunard line was about £140,000 sterling per annum. It would not, however, vary it much if you were to take that amount; for the difference between $725,000 and $696,000 is not very great.

Mr. MILLER. I will answer the question of the honorable Senator from Arkansas. I have no knowledge at all of there being any official information in the Departments here such as he speaks of. I think there is none. The author I have quoted, may be relied upon: his statements appear to be taken from the official documents in Great Britain, and if the gentleman will take the trouble of reading the article, I think he will be satisfied of its authenticity.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senator misunderstood me if he supposed I questioned at all the authority. I simply called attention to the character of the work. I said that I would prefer, in the formation of my opinions, to have official information. The Senator says I would find that it contained a good deal of authentic information. I might find a great deal of information in it, but surely, taking it as one of what we may call the "fugitive publications" of the day, I should not know, unless it was from an official source, whether the information was authentic or not. That is the point.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator asked me a question, and I have answered it. The regulation of the Cunard steamers, I understand, is under the control of the Admiralty, and are connected somewhat with the war service; these compensations are increased or diminished without having a special law passed by Parliament for the purpose. I also understand, that since the Cunard line was ordered up to additional weekly service, during the last year the compensation has been again increased. But as I have no information upon this point, other than that which has been stated to me by gentlemen here, I do not rely upon it as a fact in my argument.

The keel of the first steamer on the Collins line was laid in 1844, and their first steamer left New York about the beginning of the year 1850. What was the condition of things at that time? I call the attention of the Senate to it, for the purpose of showing what has been accomplished since by this line. At that time Great Britain had the monopoly of all the foreign postage to this country. She had, also, driven off our sailing-packets from the carrying of passengers. She had beaten them off in the transportation of all light articles of merchandise, and of specie, and of all transportations across the Atlantic which depend upon time, speed, and certainty. Up to 1840, the American sailing-packets had the control of these matters. They had beaten the English packets away from even a competition for the carrying of passengers, specie, and light merchandise. England then resorted to ocean steam-navigation. Her Government, finding that her sailing-vessels were beaten by the Yankee vessels, they resorted to steam, and by a most liberal policy she built up the Cunard line; and such had been the success of this policy that on the day when the keel of the first steamer of the Collins line was laid, England had a complete mastery of the ocean on all these great interests. What has taken place since? It must be recollected, that, in the carrying of letters and passengers, speed and certainty are everything. By the establishment of the Collins line, we have beaten them upon both of these points. By that line we carry letters and passengers in less time than the Cunard line can carry them. By the accounts of the very last arrival of the steamers, we are informed that, although one of the Cunard line left Liverpool four days before the Collins line, yet the mails of the two steamers were delivered simultaneously at the post office here. This is what the Collins line has accomplished in this great race of national steamers.

The carrying of light articles of freight and of specie has become a very important matter in our foreign commerce. Before the establishment of the Collins line, it was altogether under the control of the Cunard line. We may now control it—we ourselves, if we sustain our own people. We beat England with our sailing-vessels, and we will beat her with our steamships, if this Government will only protect our commerce with the same liberality with which the English Government has protected hers. That is the great question in this case.

The English Government and the English people are very wise and very liberal too, with regard to the management of their own great interests. They do not accomplish as many magnificent projects as we do; but they have a keener eye to their own interests. We established a line of mail steam-packets to Havre and Bremen. They bring freight and passengers from the continent, by way of Havre and Bremen, to New York. Now, what do we find the Cunard line doing? Why, in order to cripple our line, and secure to themselves the monopoly of the carrying trade from the continent, the proprietors of the Cunard line have, I understand, established a line of small steamers, running from Liverpool to Havre, by which they carry, free of charge, all goods from that point to Liverpool, intended to be conveyed in their steamers to the United States. This they have done, and are now doing. The very last packet which arrived, brought this piece of foreign news:

"Belgium.—The Belgium papers state that it is the intention of the Cunard line to establish a line of steamers between Antwerp and Liverpool, to connect with the American line."

Is it not evident that England is endeavoring to control the passengers, the freight, and the postage, from the continent to the United States?—and that, unless we sustain our line of steamers, she will control all these great interests?

I desire here to call the attention of the Senate to the effect produced upon the public mind of England, by the establishment of the Collins line. I read from the same authority, (Chambers:)

"The American steamer that first plied regularly on the Atlantic route, were the Washington and Hermann, of about two thousand tons burden. They, however, did not depend entirely on the British traffic, but made the port of Bremen, at the mouth of the river Weser, in Germany, their terminus in Europe, calling at Southampton on their passage up and down the British Channel. The line of vessels that enter into direct competition with Cunard's, was projected by Mr. Collins, of New York, and consisted of two steamers, of the thousand tons burden, three hundred feet long, and propelled by engines of one thousand horse power. They were named after the various corners of the world—the Atlantic, Pacific, Arctic, Baltic, and Adriatic. They are longer and more powerful than any steamer yet built, except the Great Britain, and their competition is not to be treated lightly. The merits of the rival lines will become a national question."

"Thus was commenced that rivalry which has made a gigantic race course of the Atlantic ocean—a race course so long that the difference in the longitude of its termini makes a difference of nearly five hours in the time of day; and thus, while the people at the American end are rising from their beds, those at the European have got through much of their day's work. The flying horse children, and other notions of the turf, have done great deeds in their way, but they shrink into utter insignificance compared with the performances of a steamer, propelled by a power equal to that of a thousand horses, sailing three hundred miles each day, over angry, restless waves, twenty-four, and sometimes forty three feet high, chasing each other at a distance of about five hundred feet, and at a speed of more than thirty miles an hour. All the prizes of the turf are pailry compared with that for which these steamers are contending—the proud distinction of establishing the most speedy and safe communication between two great continents and two mighty nations. Hitherto the superiority has not been distinctly declared on either side, nor can any correct judgment be formed until at least a year has elapsed."

But what is more important in this case is, to show what has been the result of the establishment of the Collins line upon our interests at home. In the first place, its effect upon our Treasury, of which we have heard much: Have we lost money by it? By the statement furnished by the Post Office Department, and laid before the Senate by the Senator from California, it appears that we have not lost a cent; but, on the contrary, gained $58,675 59. That statement shows, that the revenue derived by the United States under the operation of the treaty, and by the Collins steamers, is.....$828,675 59 Of which there had been paid to Collins, for his service for two years.. 770,000 00

$58,675 59

Or nearly $50,000 per annum into the hands of the Government, over and above what they have paid. I do not pretend that all this postage was derived from letters or newspapers carried by the Collins line. No man can understand the account in that way. But it is nevertheless true, that all this postage, whether received from Cunard's line or Collins's line, has been received in consequence of that policy which established the Collins line. There was no postal treaty made between this Government and Great Britain, until the keel of the first steamer of the Collins line was laid; and we should have no control whatever of this postage fund, had not the Collins line been established, and put in competition with the Cunard line. So far, then, as the policy is concerned, and its effect upon the Treasury, the Collins line is entitled to the credit for the money received for postage, against the charge for the money which has been paid for its support.

It is true that the amount received during the last year will not cover the amount proposed to be given by this amendment; yet this does not prove that the receipts of the coming year will not be sufficient to cover the appropriation. There is already an increase of postage this year. The increase in the number of trips by both lines will add to the amount. That has been the result heretofore. As the number of trips and the speed of the steamers have been increased, the postage receipts have advanced, and, therefore, in considering this proposition, we can safely rely, that for the coming year, there will be a considerable increase of the postal revenue. Heretofore the Collins line proposed only monthly trips during the winter, and the Cunard semi-monthly. Now, they alternate weekly during the whole year; and although there are not as many passengers in these winter trips, there are just as many, and perhaps more, letters in the winter season. I shall not go into the estimate of this obvious increase of postage; but it is manifest that by this great increase of this service there will be a corresponding increase in the postages received during the next year. The Postmaster General states that the increase of trans-Atlantic postages in 1851 over 1850 is $197,439 61. It will be much greater in 1852; so that my friend from Virginia need not be afraid of the Treasury being ruined by this appropriation. It must also be recollected, that unless we increase the service of our line, we will not be able to divide the postage with our confederates. England gets much the largest proportion of the postage now; but the moment we put our steamers upon an equality with hers, we shall be entitled to divide the whole postage, and put half of it into our Treasury.

But the advantage to be derived from maintaining this line is not to be confined to a mere calculation of the amount of postage of what may be put into the Treasury. There are other considerations of much higher importance. The great route now from England, and from Western Europe, to the East Indies, is from Southampton, by way of Gibraltar and Alexandria. But who does not perceive that the time is coming, that it is not far distant, when the great mail route to the East Indies, not only from New York, but from London and from Paris, will be over the Atlantic, and by either the Cunard line or the Collins line, under the control either of the English Government or of the American Government. That presents this important question to the Senate and to the country—whether we shall not, at all hazards, sustain this line, in order to preserve for our people, and for our Government, the control of that great world's route which is to pass along the shores of this country, and across the Isthmus of Panama, and thence to the East Indies?

The honorable Senator from Virginia said, that if this line could not sustain itself, let it go down. The Cunard line will not go down. The great West India mail steam route of England will not go down. But if our line alone goes down, what happens? All the communication—the passengers, the letters, and the commerce, passing over the Atlantic, crossing the Isthmus of Panama to the Pacific ocean, and there spreading out to the great East—is under the complete control of the English Government. But if you sustain an American line of steamers—and if that route turns out, as I believe it will, to be the most direct route, even from London, and from Western Europe, to China—our line, having the superiority in speed, and of certainty, will be the grand carrier of letters and of passengers from Europe, through America, to the East Indies.

It is stated, in the book from which I have already quoted, that last year a letter written in the city of New York, passing in the Cunard line to England, and then put on board the steamer at Southampton, thence to go by way of Alexandria to Suez, reached Hong Kong in fifty-five days.

Now, sir, it is reduced to almost a certainty, that a letter written in London, passing with the speed of the Collins line over the Atlantic, and by Panama to the Pacific, will reach the same place in forty days. This route is ours! The great commerce of the world by steam is thus under our control. Yet, the honorable Senator says: Let this line go down; or let it fight its way as best it can under the protection of individual enterprise.

As I said before, our people can contend single-handed with any people on the face of the earth; but they cannot contend with the capitalists of Great Britain, backed by the protection of the English Government. They may contend with them for a short time, but the stubborn endurance of John Bull will break down the enterprise of a Yankee, unless he also is supported by his own Government. Therefore, I say, throwing aside the matter of dollars and cents—whether it costs us a thousand dollars more or less—here are national considerations which should induce us to sustain this line. There are other considerations. By the contract, these ships are to be made war steamers; and I intend to show they are war steamers—the best of the kind in the world for certain purposes of war, and that they can, at small expense, be used as such in any emergency. I have here a letter of Commodore Perry on this subject, dated February 18, 1852, and addressed to the Secretary of the Navy. Speaking of these ships—the Collins line—he says:

"According to my calculations, the cost of the conversion of either the before-mentioned vessels, exclusive of armaments, repair of machinery, &c., would not, or certainly ought not to cost for each steamer over $21,000, and it could readily be done for this at any of our navy-yards. With respect to the description and weight of their respective armaments, I am clearly of the opinion that the first class steamers already named, could easily carry four 10 inch Paixhan guns on pivots, two forward and two aft, of the weight of those in the Mississippi; and ten 8-inch Paixhan guns on the sides; and this armament would not incommode the vessels, and the weight less than the ice, which is usually forty tons, and stowed away in one mass."

Commodore Perry continues, that—

"In the general operations of a maritime war, they could render good service, and especially would they be useful from their great speed as dispatch vessels, and for the transportation of troops, at days capable of attack and defense, and of overhauling or recouping from an enemy."

"The Atlantic, Pacific, Baltic, and Arctic have all been built, inspected, and received by the Navy Department."

Commodore Perry adds to this letter a note, and says "that an ocean steamer of 3,000 tons is 'of the maximum dimension for safety and efficiency, whether for war or commercial purposes.'"

At the time of the construction of these ships, every attention was given to their form, strength, and models, by the contractors, under the special direction of the Navy Department. To show that,

I will merely refer to the communications upon the subject. They are as follows:

E. K. Collins's letter to the Secretary of the Navy, in relation to the side-lever engine, with the Secretary of the Navy's approval.

E. K. Collins's letter to the Secretary of the Navy, asking for consent to modify specifications, with answer of the Secretary of the Navy, that Commodore Skinner, of the Bureau of Construction, had approved of the alteration.

E. K. Collins's letter to the Secretary of the Navy, asking for the appointment of a naval constructor and superintendent, with Secretary of the Navy's answer, appointing Captain S. Skiddy Naval Constructor.

Secretary of the Navy's letter to E. K. Collins, accepting the Arctic, with report of Commodore Perry and Commander Bell to Secretary of the Navy, in reference to the capacity and usefulness of the Arctic for war purposes.

UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD,
PHILADELPHIA, April 14, 1852. }

SIR: In answer to yours of the 13th, I have to state, as chief naval constructor, the specifications for building the Collins line of steamers were submitted to me and approved, as in accordance with the act of 3d of March, 1847.

They can be converted into war steamers, to carry a battery equal to our largest steam-frigates, in a short time, and the necessary alterations to be made to receive such a battery, will not exceed a cost of $20,000 each.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,
FRANCIS GRICE.

To the Hon. WM. M. GWIN,
U. S. Senate, Washington.

It appears by these letters, which are on file in the Navy Department, that the vessels have been constructed with special reference for war service, if necessary; that naval officers of high character and great experience, were not only consulted in their construction, but superintended their building, who all say that they are capable of being used in case of war, at the small expense of about $20,000 each.

I submit to the Senate whether this is not a consideration which should induce us to sustain these ships, and to keep them under the control of the Government, to be used in the case of war. No man who has seen these ships—no man who has heard these evidences—can doubt for a moment but that they would be, at this very hour, if war should break out, the most effective steam-ships now under our control. They may not be as strong as war steamers especially constructed for the purpose. They may not be as powerful as many ships constructed by the English Government; but their great utility would be their speed and their power of action. If we can, by an expenditure of $20,000, put these splendid ships into the war service, that of itself is a sufficient consideration for us to appropriate this money in order to keep them afloat. We cannot maintain or keep up war steamers of equal power at anything like as cheap a rate as we can these steamers.

With regard to the capacity of these ships, and their usefulness in war, my honorable colleague, who has had great experience upon this subject, will, I have no doubt, sustain me in the opinion I have expressed, that these ships will be of great service to the country in time of war. These steamers surpass in speed any vessel which has yet been constructed by the Government, with all the advantages and experience of the Navy in the construction of ships.

I noticed that the United States steam-ship San Jacinto arrived at Cadiz on the 25th of March, having left Norfolk on the third of the month. Twenty-two days steaming only thirty-five hundred miles, or one hundred and fifty-nine miles per day.

Mr. STOCKTON. That ship was built on an entirely different plan.

Mr. MILLER. I intended to compare her speed with the Collins line, and to state that, at this rate of steaming, it would require nineteen days for the passage from New York to Liverpool, instead of nine and a half days. My colleague states, however, that that ship was built upon an entirely different principle, and therefore there cannot be any fair comparison between them.

I have called the attention of the Senate to the speed, the models, and the capacity of these vessels for another purpose—that is, to show that this company have, in executing this enterprise, made experiments, secured information, and given to the country models of steam-ships, with their engines, of great practical value to the public. If we never received a cent of postage, we should be fully compensated, in this way, for the money we have paid, by the increased knowledge we have received with regard to the building of ocean steamers. Collins & Co. have, at an immense expense of time and money, rendered all these services to the country, and we have reaped all the advantage of their enterprise. They have sustained all the loss. I say, therefore, that these considerations ought to enter into the minds of Senators when they vote on this proposition.

Again: the building of them and running of these ships have produced to the country a class of practical engineers that it would not have had without that undertaking. It has been a school for our young engineers. These vessels are now every year training up engineers, who are to take charge of our steam-ships of war, to be employed in the commercial marine. Thus the country is acquiring knowledge at the expense of the owners of the Collins line. This, also, ought to be taken into consideration. So great has been the skill, and so perfect the skill, in the construction of these ships and of their machinery, that no accident, of any moment, has happened to them.

Mr. HALE. The Atlantic broke her shaft.
Mr. MILLER. True; but it was one which was made in England!

In advocating the policy of our Government sustaining these steamers, I wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to what Great Britain is doing upon this subject of ocean mail steamers, not only with regard to the Cunard line, but in regard to many other lines. She has established five great routes of ocean mail steamers, every one of which may be converted into war steamers. The aggregate power of these steamers is twenty-nine thousand six hundred and twenty horse power—their tonnage is sixty-one thousand three hundred and forty eight—they annually steam one million five hundred and seventy-five thousand miles. These routes are, in the first place, the Atlantic route, from Liverpool to New York. The second is the route to the West Indies and the eastern coast of South America. That route has its depot at St. Thomas, from which they branch out with about twenty steamers, to the various West India Islands—to the coast of South America, and to Mexico. I have prepared a statement of the different minor routes connected with this line, showing their destination, the amount of tonnage, and the number of miles they steam. Then there is the great East India line, which sails twice a month from Southampton, in England, touching at Gibraltar, and then to Alexandria, thence taking the overland route for a short distance, take steam again at Suez to Calcutta, and Bombay, and China. Then there is also the route by way of the Cape of Good Hope; also, the Pacific route from Valparaiso to Panama. There are several other proposed routes, and which I understand have been contracted for, to Australia and other portions of the East. I have prepared tabular statements of these different routes, showing the number of steamers, tonnage, power, and the miles steamed.

No. 1.

Names of Steamers.	Length.	Horse power.	Tonnage.
From Southampton to West Indies and South America.
Avon.....	216	430	1,881
Clyde.....	213	430	1,841
Conway.....	186	300	929
Dee.....	214	410	1,818
Eagle.....	164	250	501
Great Western.....	207	400	1,467
Medway.....	212	420	1,666
Reindeer.....	155	260	554
Severn.....	215	430	1,886
Tay.....	214	430	1,858
Teviot.....	214	430	1,793
Thames.....	215	420	1,676
Trent.....	215	420	1,666

Miles steamed annually, 684,816.

Six hundred and eighty-four thousand eight hundred and sixteen (684,816) miles, or not much less than thirty times the circumference of the globe.

The steamships of this company traverse routes twenty-seven degrees north of the tropic of Cancer, to twelve degrees south of the tropic of Capricorn—embracing in their circuit every island of importance in the West Indies, or the West coast of Africa—seaports round the Gulf of Mexico, the great cities of South America, and bestows the blessings of a postal communication for every civilized nation.

	Horse power.	Ton'ge.	Miles an'y steamed.
Pacific Company from Panama to Valparaiso—this company possesses five steamers, average tonnage.....	995	3,000	110,887
Cape of Good Hope Company—just commenced monthly in vessels of not less than (each). 200			80,400

ROUTE TO THE EAST INDIES.

- 1st. From Falmouth to Gibraltar.
  - 2d. From Gibraltar to Alexandria.
  - 3d. From Suez to Bombay.
  - 4th. From Bombay to Calcutta.
  - 5th. From Calcutta to Madras, Ceylon, and China.
- All of these routes are now formed under one company, called the "Peninsular and Oriental Company."

No. 2.

MEDITERRANEAN AND PENINSULAR SERVICE.

Names of Steam-ships.	Length.	Horse power.	Tonnage.
Erin.....	199	280	797
Euxine.....	222	400	1,165
Ganges.....	237	500	1,200
Iberia.....	155	190	515
Jupiter.....	158	210	543
Madrid.....	163	140	478
Montrose.....	166	240	606
Pasha.....	160	210	548
Singapore.....	237	500	1,200
Sultan.....	224	420	1,490
Tagus.....	182	286	782

Between Southampton and Alexandria.

Hindustan.....	217	620	2,017
Indus.....	208	450	1,782
Ripon.....	231	450	1,925

Between Suez and Calcutta, via Ceylon and Madras.

Bentlnck.....	217	520	1,974
Huddington.....	217	450	1,647
Oriental.....	230	430	1,787
Precursor.....	239	460	1,817

Between Ceylon and Hong Kong, via Singapore.

Achilles.....	205	420	992
Braganza.....	188	264	655
Lady Mary Wood.....	160	260	553
Mulla.....	205	460	1,217
Pekin.....	214	400	1,182
Pottinger.....	220	450	1,350

Between Hong Kong and Canton.

Canton.....	172	150	348
-------------	-----	-----	-----

All of these vessels with their contract with the Admiralty, "Are to be good, substantial (and efficient) steam-vessels, of such construction and strength as to be fit and able to carry guns of the largest calibre now used on board of her Majesty's steam-vessels of war."

Number of miles steamed annually by this company, three hundred and eighty-one thousand nine hundred and sixty, (381,960.)

No. 3.

PROPOSED ROUTES BY GREAT BRITAIN.

- 1st. From Panama, (?) across the Pacific, to the Gallapagos Islands, thence to Sydney.
- 2d. From Cape of Good Hope, across the Indian Ocean, to Western Australia.
- 3d. From Singapore, via East India Islands, to Eastern Australia.

Recapitulation.

No. Steam-ships.	Horse power.	Ton'ge.	Miles an'y steamed.
Pacific and Cape of Good Hope line.. { 45	28,625	56,348	1,571,063
Cape of Good Hope vessels..... { 15	995	3,000
		2,000
	60	29,620	61,348

I will also read to the Senate a description of this great Oriental route. Its extent and magnitude are astonishing:

"At Suez, at the head of the Red Sea, two steamers are in waiting for the passengers and mails conveyed from Alexandria in small steamers up the Nile, and in vans across the desert. One of the steamers at Suez belongs to the East India Company, and has Bombay for its destination; the other is the property of the Oriental Company. The tenth of the month is fixed as the day of departure; and all persons and things having been shipped, the vessels steam down the Red Sea to Aden, distant from Suez 1,308 miles. Here they part company; the Oriental steamer pursues a course almost due east, across the Indian ocean, to Point de Galle, in the Island of Ceylon, a distance of 2,134 miles. Having exchanged mails with the vessel for China, she steams up the Coromandel coast to Madras, and on to Calcutta, where she arrives in about twenty-eight days from Suez, after traversing 4,757 miles, and spending in stoppages about five days.

"The vessel in waiting at Point de Galle, as soon as she receives what the other has brought her starts eastward, and after traversing 1,286 miles, arrives at Penang, in the peninsula of Malacca; from thence, steaming down between Sumatra and the mainland, she arrives at the little Island of Singapore, almost under the line, and then up the Chinese sea, terrible for its typhoons, to Hong Kong, where the little steamer in No. 5 is ready to continue the line of communication to Canton.

"The number of miles steamed by the vessels of this company, under contract, is 381,960, and the payment £204,500 per annum. The company makes an annual dividend of eight per cent. on a capital of about £1,000,000; and supposing that the same fleet was kept up, and the revenue reduced to that derived from passengers and merchandise alone, not only could no dividend be paid, but an actual loss sustained every year of more than £120,000—another striking illustration of a fact already adverted to, that, without a post office contract such schemes of regular and efficient ocean steam navigation could not be maintained."

This shows that, although the proprietors of this Oriental line now divide eight per cent. dividend per annum, yet if the contract under which they carry the mails were taken away, it could not be sustained, but that there would be a loss of £126,000 per annum.

There is no doubt about it, that that is the policy of England. She looks to the great return, to her commerce and to her manufactures, and, as this writer states, if not a cent of money is added to her revenue, by means of her postal contracts, yet she would be the gainer by establishing and keeping up these immense lines of steam navigation. These sixty-three ocean steamers, with a tonnage of 65,348, steaming 1,575,000 miles per annum, are under the control of the Admiralty, and are capable of being converted, at any time, into war steamers. Now, Senators, look at the policy of England. By her lines of steamers she has surrounded the world. We all remember that striking simile of England's power, "that the roll of her drum is heard from the rising to the setting of the sun." That figure will be changed. War will give way to peace, and the merry ring of the ocean steamer's bell will be heard, bell sounding to bell, the world round.

With these facts before us—with this mighty demonstration made and making by the English Government for the commerce of the world—are we to stand still and to doubt about keeping up the most important line of war steamers that we have afloat? No, sir. While gentlemen alarm themselves about him whom they call the Bear of Russia, and are terrified lest he may march an army across Asia—"dragging its slow length along," with all its cumbersome and costly appendages—and thereby control the destinies of the world!—yes, sir, while we are dreaming of transcendental ideas about the trodden down nations of Europe, England is plowing the oceans from pole to pole with her mighty fleet of steamers, and sowing the seeds of a commerce and of trade from which she will hereafter reap a harvest such as no nation on this earth ever garnered before. That is her policy. It should be ours. It is our mission. It is the mission of commerce to civilize the world. It is commerce, aided by steam, that is to carry those principles of liberty and enterprise which have given to this country its prominence and its glory throughout the world to the other races and nations of mankind. I am for sustaining this policy. I am for keeping up these lines. I am for increasing them. And as soon as a communication is opened between the Atlantic and the Pacific—as soon as the dream of the old Spaniard shall be fully realized, when the two oceans shall unite—I am for continuing these great lines of steam commercial navigation across the Pacific, and to meet England there with her great line which passes from Southampton to Alexandria, to the Indian seas, and to China. Then the two great nations of the world—one blood, descending from the same great stock—will, by means of the enterprise of their citizens, protected and defended by their Governments, carry commerce and civilization round the world.

* "The Indian mail which left Southampton in August last filled 157 chests, each capable of holding 10,000 letters, and at Malta 120 smaller chests were added that had been brought through France. Making allowance for the newspapers contained in these, the number of letters must still have been enormous. All this writing and transmission of intelligence necessarily increase trade, and consequently bring additional supplies of articles to this country, the duties on which must more than make up the difference between the payments to the companies and the revenues of the post office. But on higher considerations than those of mere profit and loss, we have no hesitation in saying that the blessings to the country of these lines of speedy communication would not be purchased dearly if not one farthing of the contract money were returned."

An honorable Senator suggests that we will have to fight for it. That may be; but I think the fight is going on now. That fight is between Collins and Cunard. The English Government stands by her man. He failed once, and broke down; but the Government put him on his feet again. Collins says he is now in the same position; that he wants a little of the sinews of war, $14,000 more per trip, in order to sustain the contest. The question is, whether this Government will do for him what the English Government have done for Cunard—sustain our man in this fight. I much prefer this war of steam and commerce to any other war. No blood will be spilt in it. The "sinews of war" employed are only a little money; and if the Government will only stand by its citizens in the contest, the victory is won.

But the honorable Senator from Virginia says, that this would be encouraging a monopoly. My object is directly the contrary. We established this line for the purpose of putting down the monopoly which England had over our commerce. Let me say to the honorable Senator, that if the Collins line goes down, or is withdrawn, then there will be a monopoly over which we will have no control. The English Government will have the control of the transportation of every letter, and every pound of specie, of passengers, and of most of the freights from and to Europe. Then, indeed, we shall be subject to a complete monopoly.

Again: it is said that if we protect this branch of business, we should protect other branches. Sir, I am willing to protect every branch of American labor and American enterprise which needs protection against English capital and English combination. Whenever we find England, by means of Government patronage, building up and protecting her manufactures, I say we are bound to give the like protection to the same kind of manufactures in this country, unless we intend to yield entirely to her. The gentleman referred to the iron manufactures of the country. I know that they need protection. Every man who has examined their prostrate condition, must admit that they require protection at once, by some modification of the present tariff laws. While I give my vote for the purpose of protecting this branch of American enterprise and labor, I am also ready and anxious to give proper protection to the manufacturers of iron, and other manufacturers in this country. I go for the principle, and will stand by one and all of the great American interests, to sustain them against the overbearing competition of England.

Again, it is said that if we grant the favor to New York, other cities will be coming in and asking similar favors. Now, in the first place, I do not consider this is a favor granted to the city of New York. I look upon it as a national question, in which we are all concerned. I look upon it as a matter of policy for the whole country, and that every city in the Union is as much interested in that policy as New York itself. But if the gentleman will bring forward for any city a case like this, where there is competition between an American and an English line of steamers, I will go for sustaining the American line. For instance, we have now established, or are about to establish, a line from New Orleans to Mexico. If England establishes a line along side of it, I am ready to protect our line against any competition that England may bring against it.

But I know of no such case. It is easy to defeat an application of this kind, by saying that if you grant this, you may grant others. Wait till they come, and let us judge of every case upon its own merits. It turns out, upon examination of the petitions sent here, that twenty-one cities of this Union have petitioned in favor of this appropriation; and I have not heard of more than one remonstrance against it; and that is from the city of New York. I have not heard the slightest objection to this allowance from any other city of the Union. I have no doubt that there is some opposition to it in the city of New York; but that opposition is confined to a very few.

I have thus presented my views with regard to this subject. I have done so at much length, for I consider it to be one of high importance to the country. I must beg pardon of the Senate for having trespassed so long upon its attention.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to submit some considerations in favor of the passage of this amendment, but as it is too late to proceed to-day, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from New York that, if he is not ready to go on with the discussion of this amendment, it can be laid over until to-morrow. There are some other amendments of the Committee on Finance, on which we might act, and of which we might dispose, during the next half hour, if this amendment is laid over. I hope that I shall have unanimous consent to pursue this course.

Mr. SEWARD. I have no objection to that course, if it be understood that I am to have the floor. I therefore withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT. It will require unanimous consent to pass over the amendment reported by the committee, to take up any other subject, while it is under consideration; but, if there be no objection, the Chair will pursue that course.

There was no objection.

The next amendment of the committee was a verbal one, to strike out "hereafter," after the word "Government," in the 3d section of the bill, and insert the words "hereafter made" after the word "contract," so that the 3d section should read:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no part of the appropriations herein made for the benefit of any tribe, or part of a tribe of Indians, shall be paid to any attorney or agent of such tribe, or part of a tribe; but shall, in every case, be paid directly to the Indians themselves, to whom it shall be due, or to the tribe or part of a tribe, per capita, unless the imperious interest of the Indians shall require the payment to be made collectively. Nor shall the Executive branch of the Government recognize any contract hereafter made between any tribe or part of a tribe, and any attorney or agent, for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, or under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have several amendments to offer, under instructions from the Committee on Finance. The first is to insert this clause:

For the pasting, in books prepared for the purpose, canceled certificates of the registry and enrollments of vessels returned by the several collectors of the customs, $500.

This is according to estimate. The work is very necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I am also directed by the Committee on Finance to move to amend by inserting the following:

For the reappropriation of $10,000 for the redemption of outstanding loan office and final settlement certificates; this being a portion of the sum of $37,589 59 heretofore appropriated for that purpose, and carried to the surplus fund on the 31st day of December, 1843: Provided, That hereafter all claims on account of such loan office and final settlement certificate, unless presented at the Treasury of the United States within two years from the date of the passage of this act, shall be considered as barred, and not hereafter payable.

This is in pursuance of estimate. There was an outstanding appropriation of $37,589 59 for the payment of these loan office certificates. It was carried to the surplus fund. Since then, certificates have been presented to the amount of $5,000; and the Secretary estimates that an appropriation of $10,000 will probably cover those that are to be brought in. The Committee on Finance propose to add the proviso contained in the amendment. As this is a very old transaction—as the certificates were issued in 1793 and 1795, the committee thought it better to provide that they should be closed within two years.

Mr. WALKER. I simply wish to remark, in regard to this matter, that there has been a bill, during the present session, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, making provision for the payment of these outstanding loan office and final settlement certificates. The bill has been reported upon by the committee. If I remember the bill correctly, it proposes to reappropriate the sum of $70,000, which was once appropriated for this purpose, and which had reverted to the surplus fund. I do not very well understand why this appropriation should now be made for such a small amount, when there seems to be a necessity for the reappropriation of the sum of $70,000, which has reverted to the surplus fund, for the purpose of meeting these outstanding certificates. I do not know but there may be something to which the mind of the chairman of the Committee on Finance has not been called in regard to this matter.

Mr. HUNTER. This is strictly in pursuance of estimate. I have no other knowledge of the matter than that furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury. He informed the committee, in a letter, that certificates to the amount of $5,000 had been presented, and he asked for an appropriation of $10,000. There were outstanding certificates to the amount of something like $133,000; and that amount was appropriated some years ago for their payment. A part of this amount has since passed to the surplus fund. The Secretary now asks for an appropriation of $10,000; and the committee proposed to insert the proviso, that all these certificates should be barred, unless presented within two years. The residue of the amendment is strictly in accordance with the estimate.

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection to the amendment, but I want to suggest to my friend from Virginia, a modification of the phraseology of part of it. In the limitation of time, I observe the phrase "from the date of the passage of this act." Now, there are two considerations which I think would suggest the omission of the words "the date of," so as to leave it "from the passage of this act." The first is, that there can be no conceivable difference between the passing of the act, and the date of passing the act; and the second consideration which I suggest to the Senator from Virginia, as he is an advocate for reform and economy, is, that it would save so much in the printing of the law by leaving out the words "the date of." [Laughter.] I therefore move to strike out those words.

Mr. HUNTER. This is rather a small beginning, to be sure, but as it is the first effort at economy which the Senator from North Carolina was ever known to make, I am disposed to indulge him. [Renewed Laughter.]

Mr. CASS. Allow me to add, that as this is the first evidence of progress I have seen on the part of the honorable Senator, [continued laughter.] I accord it to him.

Mr. HALE. I wish to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, that, like all new converts, his zeal has carried him too far. He has moved to strike out too much. The word "from" should be left in.

Mr. BADGER. I have left it in.

Mr. HALE. Then it is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. I have another amendment to offer from the Committee on Finance. It is to insert—

For payment to Augustus Humbert of the balance of his salary as United States assayer of gold, in California, under the act of 30th of September, 1850, $1,250.

This is in accordance with estimates for the balance of a salary due according to law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance have also instructed me to move to insert the following item:

To enable the Secretary of State to pay William E. Anderson, for the loss of time and expenses incurred in coming from Rio Janeiro to New York, under the direction of the American Minister at the Brazilian Court, to testify against certain persons alleged to have been engaged in the slave-trade, $250.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to suggest that this amendment certainly provides for a private claim, and is therefore excluded by the rule, as I understand it.

Mr. HUNTER. This is not, I think, a private claim. This man was a witness, who was sent home by our Minister at Brazil, to appear at a trial in this country. There happened to be no appropriation applicable to this purpose, and therefore it is necessary to put it in this bill. This individual, with his family, is now in New York in great distress. I have a letter from him on the subject, which I will read if any Senator desires it.

Several Senators. It is not necessary.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not object to the allowance at all. I do not know but that it is entirely right. I would merely suggest that, in my opinion, the rule excludes it.

Mr. HUNTER. It is for the service of the current year.

Mr. BADGER. It is a public claim.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator makes no question for the Chair to decide.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I present another amendment under the direction of the committee. It is to insert—

For the contingent expenses of the Library of Congress, $800.

This is in pursuance of an estimate of the Committee on the Library.

Mr. PEARCE. I will explain to the Senate that that appropriation was rendered necessary, in great part, by the late fire. We were obliged to purchase a great many new books, the transportation of which has cost a large sum of money. On this account, and because of the incidental expenses attending the transportation, this amendment is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I now offer the last amendment which I have in charge. It is to strike out $20,650, in the appropriation for surveys in the mineral region of Michigan, and insert in place of it $24,780. This is rendered necessary by a previous amendment, which the Senate has adopted, raising the price of those surveys from five to six dollars per mile. That amendment was reported by the committee, and adopted by the Senate, on the recommendation of the Department, and because of that amendment, this alteration becomes necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I offer the following amendment:

For the payment of James W. Hale, of the city of New York, in full for discharging the duties of dispatch agent, from September, 1849, to June, 1850, inclusive, the sum of $800.

I desire to say, that I am directed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to offer this amendment, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State, who has furnished me with an estimate, which I hold in my hand, and it can be read, if required. The duties of the office were discharged by Mr. Hale, for the time mentioned in the amendment, during the indisposition of Matthew L. Davis.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKTON. I desire to give notice to the Senate that on Tuesday next, during the morning hour, I shall ask of it the favor to permit a bill that is on the table, for the construction of a war steamer, to be taken up.

Mr. BORLAND. I have an amendment to offer to the bill. As this seems to be a sort of omnibus, I suppose there will be no objection to the amendment on the score of irrelevancy. The amendment is to add—

That the selection of newspapers for the publication of the laws of the United States shall, after the passage of this act, be made by the Secretary of State, as follows: The number selected shall be one in each Congressional district in each State—one in each Territory—and four in the District of Columbia. And the preference shall be given, in all cases, to the papers which at the time of selection shall have in the States or Territories respectively in which they are printed, the largest number of weekly subscribers; and to those in the District of Columbia which shall have at the time of selection the largest number of weekly subscribers in the United States; the amount of such number of subscribers to be ascertained by the affidavit of the publishers respectively, and by such additional evidence as may be requisite to establish the facts in each case to the satisfaction of the postmaster at whose office such papers respectively commence their circulation.

And be it further enacted, That when it shall be necessary to publish any public advertisements, except advertisements of letters in any State, they shall be published in the two papers in said State having the largest number of subscribers, as provided in the preceding section of this act, for the publication of the laws, the amount of circulation to be ascertained in the same manner as provided in the preceding section aforesaid.

And be it further enacted, That said public advertisements shall be published in the newspapers having the publication of the laws as aforesaid in the District of Columbia, and in the papers having the publication of said laws in the Territories, when and as often as may be deemed necessary.

And be it further enacted, That as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and at the beginning of the first session of every succeeding Congress, a copy of the list of newspapers selected, according to the terms of this act, for the publication of the laws of the United States, shall be communicated by the Secretary of State to the heads of the several Executive Departments, and to the Senate and House of Representatives respectively.

And be it further enacted, That the President shall cause to be communicated to the Senate and House of Representatives, annually a list of all newspapers that shall have published by authority, during the next preceding year, any advertisement as aforesaid, with the names of the publishers, the place of publication, the nature of the work performed, and the amount paid to each publisher.

And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and they are hereby repealed.

I do not think this amendment will require much explanation. The object of it obviously is to secure a thorough publication, or a thorough distribution of the publication of the laws passed by Congress, among the different States and Territories. I think the number of newspapers to be selected, according to the amendment, will be sufficient for that purpose. The amendment will secure the publication of the laws in a paper in each Congressional district, in a paper having the largest weekly circulation within that district, that is, the circulation which throws the paper generally among the people of the country. It is not necessary to publish the laws in the other editions of the paper, because the publication once in the weekly edition will be sufficient to carry them before the readers of the paper. One paper in each Congressional district, one in each Territory, and four in the District of Columbia, I take to be a sufficient number.

With regard to the public advertisements, I did not suppose that so many papers would be necessary, and therefore I have provided in the amendment for their publication in the two papers in each State of the largest circulation. The amendment provides that here, at the seat of Government, both the laws and the public advertisements shall be published in the four papers having the largest circulation.

The object of this amendment is, as I suppose every one will perceive, to take out of the hands of any and every Administration the use of a kind of patronage, the tendency of which is to subsidize the newspaper press of the country, particularly the small local press scattered all over the country, which we know has a very considerable influence upon public sentiment. I cannot be supposed to be actuated by any party considerations in this matter, because whatever others may think, I do conscientiously believe that the party to which I belong will very speedily be in power.

Mr. HALE. What party is that?

Mr. BORLAND. The great Democratic party of the nation, without division. For that reason I had no hesitation in offering this amendment. I would be unwilling to put myself in the attitude of offering a proposition, the sole effect of which would be to throw obstacles in the way of, or take power from an Administration to which I was politically opposed. This provision is to be prospective. I presume that very little effect will be produced by it during the few months that the present Administration will remain in power.

At the suggestion of a Senator, who wishes to look into the matter a little more closely, I will not press the adoption of this amendment now; but as I suppose it can be printed by to-morrow morning, I move that it be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to say, that I think the general purpose of this amendment is very correct, but the details of it, perhaps, require a little examination; and I was about to suggest to the honorable Senator from Arkansas, that he should permit this amendment to lie over. I wish to say, also, that as I do not concur in the opinion which he has so confidently expressed, that the great Democratic party to which he belongs is soon to be in power, and as I am afraid that this amendment is looking forward to some very irregular restrictions upon the succeeding Whig Administration, I wish to have a very full opportunity for its examination, and therefore I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY RESERVATION IN ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of House bill No. 238, being an act to release from reservation certain lands for military purposes, in the State of Arkansas. The question pending is to recommit the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] if he pleases, to state to the House the objects of this bill. As I have looked at the matter, however, I will also make a statement, and then give up the floor, and let the House do with it what it pleases. There are three propositions in this bill, which are distinct. One is to restore these lands, now reserved from sale, to the mass of the public lands, so that they may be subjected to sale, and entered as any other lands. I ask for that, on the part of my State, because it operates oppressively not to permit the public lands in Arkansas to be sold, as any where else.

Another provision is, that where the land offices have suffered these lands to be sold, or, in other words, have sold portions of them, to the people of Arkansas, in despite of the act of reservation, that the titles and patents which have been issued therefor by the Government of the United States shall be confirmed and made valid—the Government having received the money, and there being nothing objectionable in the matter, and the only peculiarity being that they were among the mass of reserved lands, and were allowed to be entered by the land officers through mistake.

Another proposition is, that those who have settled upon these reserved lands in that State, and made bona fide improvements, shall, upon paying the Government price, be allowed the same privilege of preemption which is granted in respect to all other public lands of the United States.

These are the propositions. It is for the interest of the Government that this bill should be passed. It grants nothing to the State of Arkansas. Under these circumstances, I ask that, as it has now come to a final vote, it shall be permitted to pass. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to explain the matter, if he pleases, should there be anything different from what I have stated.

Mr. ROBBINS. For what purpose were these lands reserved?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state the purpose for which they were reserved. Gentlemen will recollect, that just after the war of 1812, military bounty lands were set apart for the satisfaction of the military land warrants provided to be allowed at that time. Amongst these tracts of country set apart, was a large tract of country in the then Territory of Arkansas. Those warrants and claims, or very nearly all, have long since been satisfied. That was the reason of this reservation being made, which is no longer of any use.

Mr. HALL. I believe that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] describes the bill correctly; but, as the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] on yesterday suggested that some of the warrants for the satisfaction of which the lands in Arkansas were reserved might remain unsatisfied, and the holders of these warrants might, therefore, be deprived of some rights which they already possessed under existing laws, I will propose, for the purpose of removing that objection, to amend the bill by adding the following—

The SPEAKER. This can only be done by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the amendment was then read, as follows:

And that the said warrants which have not been satisfied, may be located upon any of the public lands subject to private entry at the time of the location of the same.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the recommitment of the bill.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw the motion to recommit.

Mr. STANLY. I have no disposition further to postpone the bill. I only desired an opportunity to examine it, and to call the attention of the House to it.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine, made an inquiry, which was entirely inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. JOHNSON demanded the previous question; which was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question being, "Shall the bill pass?" it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. OLDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 144; which is a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1st Session.

MONDAY, APRIL 26, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No. 74.

and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes." It is a bill merely affecting newspaper postage. It is desirable that this House should pass it at once, that it may take effect from the thirtieth of June next.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. ROBBINS. called for the regular order of business.

CONTESTED ELECTION FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. ASHE, from the Committee on Elections, made a report in the case of H. B. WRIGHT, contesting the seat of H. M. FULLER, as a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, accompanied by the following resolution:

Resolved, That the election at the Danville precinct, county of Montour, eleventh Congressional district, in the State of Pennsylvania, was illegally and irregularly conducted, and the seat of the member is vacant, and that the Speaker inform the Governor of that State of the decision of this House, that a new election may be ordered.

Mr. ASHE moved that the report and resolution be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If this report be now ordered to be printed, and the House shall pass over it informally, cannot the chairman of the committee call it up at any time?

The SPEAKER. It will go to the Speaker's table, but a motion to take it up will be a privileged motion.

The question was then taken upon the motion to print the report, and it was agreed to.

Mr. FREEMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of the Board of Trustees of the State University of Indiana, reported a bill to supply the deficiency to the State of Indiana, in a township of land granted to said State for the use of said University, by act of Congress, approved 19th of April, 1816; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. F. said: I have been requested by the committee on Public Lands to ask that this bill may be put upon its passage immediately.

Mr. VENABLE. What is the bill?

Mr. FREEMAN. I will state to the House what is the object of the bill. There was a grant of lands made by the Government of the United States to the State of Indiana for a State University. It was subsequently ascertained that about four thousand acres of the land so granted had previously been sold by the United States, and disposed of in such a manner that the State of Indiana could not acquire a title to the land. This fact being made clear to the Committee on Public Lands, they have introduced this bill for the purpose of granting to the State of Indiana the right to locate these four thousand acres at some other point in the State. I trust, therefore, that the House will pass the bill, and pass it forthwith.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I do not know that I have any objection to the passage of the bill; but this habit of moving to put bills upon their passage when reported from the committee, has kept the Committee on Public Lands reporting for the last three months. I therefore move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I ask for the previous question on that motion.

Mr. FREEMAN. What is the gentleman's objection to the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I have none at all; but I desire that other committees shall have an opportunity to report.

Mr. GORMAN. I appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee to let this bill pass.

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. GORMAN. It will not take a minute to pass the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. That is invariably the argument.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put; and the question being put on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on a division there were—ayes 67, noes 48; no quorum voting.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. GORMAN, and HARRIS of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then again put, and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 64, noes 63.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

SCHOOL LANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. FREEMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back a bill "authorizing the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to sell the 'sixteenth sections heretofore reserved from sale for the use of schools in that State, and to ratify and approve the sales already made," with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill having been read through, and the question being upon its engrossment,

Mr. FREEMAN said: I desire to state the object of the bill, and I hope the House will grant me its ear for a moment, for there is nothing in the bill save what every member can understand by a moment's attention.

The House is aware that in the survey which has been made of the public lands, the sixteenth sections have been granted to the States for school purposes. In the State of Mississippi, a large portion of the public lands have been reserved, under the Indian treaties, from sales for the purpose of settling with the Indians, and a portion of the sixteenth sections are upon those lands. They have, however, been disposed of, to a considerable extent, by the State of Mississippi. They have been leased for ninety-nine years. Now, suits have been brought upon notes payable in one, two, three, and four years, against the purchasers, and those who have leased these lands, and the judicial tribunals of the State of Mississippi have decided that the school commissioners cannot recover those notes, because the purchasers have obtained no title. Why? Simply because the title still remains in the United States, and is not in the school commissioners or in the State of Mississippi. And why? Because the only title conferred by the United States was a simple reservation of the sixteenth sections for school purposes. The United States, therefore, it has been decided, have not conferred any title upon the State of Mississippi which that State could confer upon the vendees.

In consequence of this decision of the courts of the State of Mississippi, and to prevent further litigation, and to quiet agitation—and I know there are a great many gentlemen in this House who are opposed to agitation—we desire this bill to pass.

Mr. SWEETSER. I would inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi—as the decision of the courts of his State are at variance with the decisions in all the other States of the Union, as far as I am acquainted with them—whether he concurs in the decisions of the courts of Mississippi, that their State has no such title to these lands as it can make legal titles to the vendees? It seems to me that such a decision is quite contrary to the decisions of the courts of all the other States on the subject, and I ask the gentleman whether he, as a lawyer, concurs in that decision?

Mr. FREEMAN. The State of Mississippi has not made me a supreme court, or even elected me a judge of that tribunal, and it is not in my power to reverse the decisions of the courts. The decisions of State courts in matters pertaining to State policy, as the gentleman well knows, are always respected in the Supreme Court of the United States. It is therefore, I think, unbecoming in gentlemen of the profession, even upon this floor, to get up and repudiate the judgment of the supreme court of Mississippi. I know the gentleman from Ohio is too good a State-Rights man to do it, and I shall not interfere with the judgments of the supreme court of his State.

Mr. SWEETSER. The gentleman is really making a serious matter of what I did not so intend. I intended merely to maintain a legal principle, which I believe to be correct. I am not making any reflection on the judicial tribunals of Mississippi. That State comes here through her Representatives, and asks Congress to pass a law ratifying the title which the United States have heretofore conferred upon the State, to the sixteenth sections; and inasmuch as she is asking what has never been done before, I am opposed to raising any doubts by our legislation here in regard to the titles of other States, that have received and sold their school lands, under the authority conferred by their respective legislatures. It seems to me, upon the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi, that the proposed legislation is entirely unnecessary, and it is for that reason that I make the inquiry.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. If my colleague will allow me, I will correct the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman is mistaken when he says that the State of Mississippi is asking Congress to do what has not been done heretofore. This precise thing was done for the State of Ohio.

Mr. SWEETSER. I was not aware of it.

Mr. BROWN. It was also done for the State of Indiana.

Mr. HOUSTON. It was done for all the new States.

Mr. BROWN. Yes. It has been done for all the new States, and it has not been done for Mississippi, simply because our delegation in Congress have heretofore overlooked it, until finally, for want of this very legislation, the purchasers of the sixteenth sections have got into difficulties. No matter whether the judgment of the judicial tribunals of Mississippi be correct or not—and, as a lawyer, I think it is correct—the Department here has sustained it, in a written communication to me, which I submitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

There is an absolute necessity for the passage of this bill, and for its passage immediately, in order to protect innocent parties from the severest kind of suffering, growing out of a transaction which they could not by any possibility control. The legislation proposed in this bill, is just such as has been applied to other States, and such as Congress would have applied to the State of Mississippi if she had ever asked for it. The Government of the United States has no interest in these lands, and I trust there will be no difficulty in passing the bill.

Mr. SWEETSER. I beg to say that so far as Ohio is concerned, she has always exercised jurisdiction over these lands, both in leasing and selling them; and I am not aware that Congress has ever before been asked to ratify any title which has been conferred upon a State by the compact, under which their sixteenth sections were granted; neither do I believe that any act of Congress is necessary to confirm the title of the vendees, who hold their titles under the State legislature.

Mr. BROWN. I did not mean to say, that Congress had ratified the title. But Congress authorized the State of Ohio to sell the lands before she made the sales, and therefore it was not necessary.

Mr. SWEETSER. That power was given in the original grant.

Mr. BROWN. No, it was by a separate act.

Mr. FREEMAN. I believe that the gentleman from Ohio is right in the legal principle, but mistaken in the facts. What our courts decided was, that a simple reservation in the survey did not confer a title on the State of Mississippi.

Mr. SWEETSER. I agree with them on that point.

Mr. FREEMAN. Then we do not disagree at all. That is what our courts decided.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, moved the previous question.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order during the pending of the demand for the previous question.

Mr. FREEMAN demanded tellers on seconding the demand for the previous question; which were ordered, and Messrs. TAYLOR, and BROWN of Mississippi, appointed; and the question being put, the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 45.

So the previous question received a second.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, was read a third time and passed.

Mr. STANLY gave notice of his intention to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill in relation to the lands for the University of the State of Indiana was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of Union.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, moved that the vote just taken, by which the bill passed, be reconsidered, and that the motion do lie upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

PRE-EMPTIONS TO CERTAIN SETTLERS.

Mr. FREEMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back without amendment and with a recommendation that it do pass, House bill for the protection of actual settlers occupying land upon the line of the Chicago and Mobile Railroad and branches, by granting to them preemption rights.

Mr. F. I hope the bill will be read for information, and then I will state the reasons why I think it ought to pass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That each and every person who, on the twentieth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty, was the owner of any improvement made previous to that date on any tract of land now owned by the United States, and situated within the limits reserved from sale by order of the Government, because of the grant of alternate sections to the States of Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama, in aid of the construction of the Chicago and Mobile Railroad and branches, by virtue of an act of Congress, approved September twentieth, eighteen hundred and fifty, entitled "An act granting the right of way, and making a grant of land to the States of Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama, in aid of the construction of a railroad from Chicago to Mobile," and who became such owner with a view to a residence on, or occupation of, such tract of land for agricultural purposes, shall have the right to purchase, at the price established by law in regulating the sales of said lands, a quantity of the tract so improved not less than forty, nor more than one hundred and sixty acres, in legal subdivisions, on which said improvement may be situated: Provided, That any person claiming the right to purchase under any provision of this act, shall, within three months from the date hereof, file with the register of the proper land office a notice describing the land by its numbers, accompanied with an affidavit stating the date and object of the improvement, the time and manner, when and how, he, she, or they, became the owner thereof, and also the affidavits of at least two residents of the county in which such improvement is situated, proving that said improvement was made with a view to residence, or for agricultural purposes: And provided, further, That the right of way upon and across any tract of land claimed under the provisions of this act, not exceeding two hundred feet in width, shall be reserved and retained for the said railroad and branches, as the same may be located and constructed; and any person claiming the right to purchase as aforesaid, shall, within twelve months from the passage of this act, pay to the receiver of the proper land office, the sum of money so established by law to be paid as aforesaid; and on failure of said actual settler either to prove his right of preemption within three months, or to pay for the land within twelve months after the passage of this act, as herein required, the said land containing the improvements as aforesaid, shall be subject to entry by any other person making application therefor.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That when two or more persons claim the right to purchase the same tract of land, and file proof of ownership as herein required, the person proving the first residence by himself, or by those with whom he claims the improvement, shall have the right to make the purchase, but no sale or conveyance of any tract of land under the provisions of this act shall affect the rights or equities of parties claiming the same as between each other.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FREEMAN. I have not yielded the floor. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Mississippi to make his motion.

Mr. FREEMAN. That bill, I think, explains itself, and I also think commends itself to the immediate attention of the members of this House. It is just as easy to act upon it now as it will be at any future time.

A railroad has already been chartered, and is in process of construction, from Chicago, Illinois, to Mobile, Alabama. The public lands for fifteen miles on either side of the road, have been reserved from sale for eighteen months, and are now to be re-exposed for sale. Upon those lands the hardy pioneers of the forest have already acquired by their actual settlement, a claim to the rights of pre-emption.

The object of this bill is simply to enable these men, who have gone to the wilderness and erected their homes upon the public lands, to complete their titles. That is simply and substantially the nature, and the only object of the bill. I am sure no man within the sound of my voice needs any further argument upon this point. Now, I ask gentlemen if they will vote to send this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it will sleep the sleep of death for the balance of the session? I appeal to the House in behalf of the hardy pioneer of the forest. I appeal in behalf of the man whose axe cuts down the first tree in the forest, and whose plow first turns the virgin earth to the sun. I appeal to the members of this House to come forward and give these log-cabin men a vote in this, their hour of need. I call for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi what need there is for any other provision than that contained in the general pre-emption law for these people?

Mr. FREEMAN. Because, by the act of the Government, they have been prevented from complying with the general preemption laws.

Mr. HUNTER. Had they settled upon the land at the time the act passed reserving it from sale?

Mr. FREEMAN. They had. The time of settlement is a matter which each individual will have to prove for himself. That is not for this House to decide. This bill applies only to such as have a legal preemption right.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. Discussion is out of order.

Mr. FREEMAN. I have called the previous question, and I hope it will receive a second.

The House was divided upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and 49 gentlemen rose in the affirmative.

Mr. FICKLIN demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. FREEMAN and MEACHAM were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 45; no quorum voting.

Mr. FICKLIN. I ask for a recount.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move a call of the House, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. There is evidently a quorum present. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his motion for a call of the House. It is simply a waste of time.

Mr. JONES. I have no disposition to impede the business of the House. I will withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will again take their places.

Mr. STANLY. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I should like to know upon what ground the gentleman from North Carolina has the right to object to having a recount?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that he has a right to divide the House again for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is a quorum of the House present.

Mr. STANLY. I hope the Chair will not depart from his own decision which he has heretofore adopted when there is no necessity for it. I move that there be a call of the House, and upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays. That is the proper way to ascertain whether there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit this suggestion to the Chair: Suppose we have a call of the House, and ascertain that there is a quorum present. If the Chair then doubt whether a majority voted for or against seconding the demand for the previous question, has he not a right to divide the House, or has not any member the right to call for a division or for tellers?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has before decided that he has a right to recount the House; but that is not a question to be decided now. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] moves that there be a call of the House, and upon that motion demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 62, nays 89; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, John Appleton, William Appleton, Ashe, Barrere, Bartlett, Bo-cock, Bragg, Briggs, Lewis D. Campbell, Chapman, Chastain, Churchwell, Cobb, Doty, Eastman, Edgerton, Faulkner, Fitch, Floyd, Fowler, Gentry, Giddings, Goodenow, Green, Grey, Harper, Hart, Haven, Hebard, Horsford,
Howard, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ivcs, Jackson, Jenkins,
James Johnson, George G. King, Mace, Martin, McDonald,
Miller, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Pennington, Phelps, Scudder, Skelton, Smith, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Tuck, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Alexander White, and Williams—62.

NAYS.—Messrs. Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bowie, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Clingman, Conger, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Durkee, Fiekin, Florence, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Goodrich, Gorman, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Ben-drieks, Hilbard, Hillyer, Houston, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J.
Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letch-er, Lockhart, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McMullin, Mc-Nair, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Millson, Minor, Mo-lony, John Moore, Morrison, Murray, Nabers, Ods, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Perkins, Polk, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Ross, Sackett, Savage, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stone, St. Martin, Stunt, Taylor, Thurston, Townshend, Ward, Watkins, Wells, Addison
White, Wilcox, and Yates—89.

So the call of the House was not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will again resume their places.

Mr. STANLY. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. STANLY. I move that the House do now proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The House was being divided upon the motion, when

Mr. STANLY withdrew the motion, and moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. I ask the Chair if the gentleman holds the floor to make two motions?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to withdraw one motion and make another.

Mr. PHELPS. I submit whether the gentleman from North Carolina could get the floor to make the motion while the House was in the act of dividing?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdrew the motion upon which the House was dividing.

Mr. PHELPS. Then the question is now in the state in which it was before the first motion was made. Now, I submit that the House was then in the act of dividing, and that the gentleman had no right to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The previous question had been demanded, upon which tellers had been ordered, but the question had not been taken.

Mr. PHELPS. I was under the impression that a division was being made.

The question was then put, and carried in the affirmative.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the business before the committee, the consideration of House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and for other purposes, on which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mo-lony] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. MOLONY addressed the House an hour.
He alluded to the present condition of parties in view of the approaching canvass, and expressed his belief that the Democratic party would triumphantly elect the nominees of its convention for the Presidency and Vice Presidency, whoever they might be—whether Cass, Buchanan, Douglas, or Butler. He then entered into an argument in favor of the homestead policy, maintaining that grants of lands from the public domain to actual settlers thereon was not a Western measure merely, but was one which affected favorably every interest in every section of the country, and added to the national wealth. He further maintained that the argument of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] was unsound, that the policy of the bill would injuriously affect the old States, by draining them of their population; and quoted from the census statistics to show that in the last ten years, embracing the period of the greatest increase of population and settlement in the West, that there had been an almost corresponding increase in some of the Eastern States. Hence he argued that, if the bill should pass, it would not diminish the population in the old States, but drain them of their surplus agricultural labor, and place it in a condition where it would become productive, and thus create a market for the products of the Eastern manufactures. [Mr. M.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND next obtained the floor, and occupied it an hour in opposition of the policy of the bill. He maintained that it was unjust, because it took the public domain, which belonged to all the people of the country, and bestowed it as gratuitous upon certain classes or portions of the people; and that being thus unjust, it was unconstitutional. He maintained that it involved a departure from the Democratic policy, which was, that these lands should be held as a source of revenue. The consequence of such a departure would be an increase of taxation in the indirect mode to support the Government. [The speech of Mr. S. will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. YATES obtained the floor, but gave way to

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was put, and carried in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 7, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Upon motion by Mr. EDGERTON, the House then adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. LOCKHART gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day of the session, he will ask permission to introduce a joint resolution, explanatory of the act of 22d March, 1852, entitled "An act making land warrants assignable, and for other purposes."

PETITIONS, &c.,

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. STANTON, of Ohio: The petition of 114 citizens of the city of New York, for Whitney's railroad to the Pacific.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of the heirs of William Young, deceased, praying Congress to grant them compensation for services rendered the Government during his lifetime.

By Mr. LOCKHART: The petition of Samuel Hall, Robert Stockwell, Richard Skinner, and others, asking for a grant of lands in aid of the construction of the Evansville and Illinois railroad, from Evansville to Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana.

By Mr. GOODENOW: The memorial of John M. Marston, for relief.

Also, the memorial of John A. Bates, for relief.

By Mr. MCNAIR: The memorial of the members of the congregations of the Presbyterian Church in the District of Columbia, praying the grant of a lot of ground for a cemetery.

By Mr. DUNCAN: The petition of Samuel Webber and other citizens of Lawrence, Massachusetts, for an appropriation in aid of American contributors to the "London Industrial Exhibition."

Also, the petition of Nathaniel Webster and 51 other citizens of Salisbury and Amesbury, Massachusetts, for alterations in the present tariff.

Also, the petition of Micajah Lunt and 45 other merchants and ship-owners, of Newburyport, Massachusetts, for the passage of an act prohibiting the carriage of freight and passengers for hire in Government steam-vessels.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of Hon. Charles H. Dougherty, and a number of other citizens of New York, recommending to Congress the propriety of extending letters patent to the heirs of Uri Emmons for his invention of a planting machine.

Also, a resolution passed by the Board of Commissioners of the Northern Liberties, Philadelphia county, requesting the Representatives in Congress to oppose the appropriation of money prayed for to endow the Collins line of steamers of New York, and urging them to cause the money to be spent in aiding to build the Sumbury and Erie railroad, connecting the Lakes with the Atlantic.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 23, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is, the passage of the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the Monroe Railroad Company, and their sureties."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BROOKS. I find a long article in the Congressional Globe, which, undoubtedly, has reference to me, and I rise to ask the indulgence of the House to make a personal explanation.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. STANLY. I object, unless the understanding is, that members of the House involved in this explanation shall have the same privilege in reply. I want a fair field.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman from North Carolina, I trust, will not object. I would not request this indulgence of the House, if it were possible for me, elsewhere than in this House, to make an official record of my explanation in reference to the speech I have alluded to.

Mr. STANLY. If it is the understanding that members of this House implicated in the gentleman's explanation, shall have also the opportunity of explaining, I do not object.

[Cries of "Certainly!" "Certainly!"]

Mr. STANLY. Very well; with that understanding, I have no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I did not believe that the time would ever arrive when I should be called upon to exhibit the bad example of rising, so to interrupt the ordinary course of business, as to ask, in a personal explanation, to refer to my own private affairs, or to speak of matters, which, if they interest members of the House, can have no immediate influence upon public affairs, or with the business before it. It has been my pride and ambition, while I have been a member of Congress, to devote myself exclusively to public business, and upon all occasions, and at all times, whenever a topic was before the House, to confine myself and my attention, if I had anything to say upon it, to the discussion of that topic, and that topic only. My excuse now for this deviation in this House from the proper practice, and my excuse to my constituents is what I said before—that here, in this "Congressional Globe," to go down to posterity, are recorded statements against me, which, if I make an appeal through a newspaper in the form of a card or otherwise, save at the bar of this House, it is impossible for me to send a like record of, down to those who may possibly be interested in my humble reputation, or who may wish hereafter to be accurately informed of what led to this attack upon me.

Before I go further, I will say that I have taken occasion in this House before, to remark that I have but little respect for that chivalry which, before it assaults a member of Congress, carefully consults the lines of latitude and longitude, in order to direct its assaults, and which has billing, cooing tones for every man south of the Potomac, but rough and rugged bluster for every man north. I need not, however, have made this remark, in this case, because the speaker of this article before me, is of an age, and in a position to protect him from any personal assault of mine—from any assault here or elsewhere—for I should as soon think of vindicating myself in that way, from his remarks, as if I were assaulted by my own grandfather.

There are in this article, Mr. Speaker, various allegations, and the first one which I propose to notice, but which I have before noticed in this House, is, that a certain letter which appeared in the New York Express, was written or indited by me. That, in the most solemn manner, I have already denied upon the floor of this House, and any further contradiction would be unavailing.

My position here as an editor of a public newspaper at home, and, as a member of Congress, has often embarrassed me; and upon becoming a member of the last Congress, I took occasion then publicly to say, that in political or personal matters, or in anything appertaining to persons, I would have no concern whatsoever, and be in no degree responsible for what was in my paper; because I foresaw, if I did not adopt that course, I should be holding personal relations with gentlemen of opposite politics, or political relations, which, from the greater freedom of newspaper discussion than that which exists upon the floor of this House, would very often pain and embarrass me.

That course I have faithfully kept, and former correspondents, who have been writing for the

New York Express, some of whom may be now in the sound of my voice, if called upon here or elsewhere, will, under solemn oath, testify, that to them, upon all occasions, I have said, "Show me none of your letters; let me hear nothing of them—tell me nothing; you may write, for I do not wish to know anything of the record you make of the proceedings in Congress." That order which had previously been given, embarrassed me in the previous sessions of Congress exceedingly, because there were often personal attacks—I, perhaps, use a harsh expression in saying personal attacks—but personal comments upon members of the House, which, in my own heart, I did not approve, and which I would wish to correct if I had been at home. On account of this, I felt it necessary to say to the correspondents of that paper, at the opening of this Congress, whenever there is anything in your letters in the nature of personal attacks or assaults upon members of Congress, before your letters go to New York, at least bring them to me, and while I will not be responsible for what you say, or a single sentiment you may utter, yet I will not approve of anything which may embarrass my social relations by attacks in the newspaper with which I am supposed to be connected. This letter, to which the honorable gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] alluded the other day, was brought to me. No inconsiderable portion of that letter I struck out. Indeed, all the personal matters I wished to strike out; but remonstrance was made to me, that the rumors which were put forth in that paper were rumors which were in the mouth of almost every man—rumors, of course, but the existence of which I could not deny in the form they were stated. The letter went before the public; and but yesterday, or the day before yesterday, I disclaimed all personal responsibility for its statements, facts, or allegations.

There is also connected with this letter an editorial article, said to have been written by me. This editorial article bears evidence upon its face, in mislocating the homes of members of Congress, that it could not have been written by me. And, to add to the strength of this statement, before God, I say in the presence of you all, that I never saw one word or one item of that editorial article, until it reached me in the New York Express, and I never read it in full until I first read it in the "Congressional Globe," reported here in the paper before me. These are the facts of the case, which I state fully and frankly. But it is said, that there is a remarkable similarity of language between that letter and the language which I used in the caucus in the Senate Chamber the other evening. Having seen the letter, and having been fired by such of its sentiments as I felt to be just and true, it is but natural that in the warmth and excitement of controversy I should have given utterance to the same thoughts in the same style; for the earnest, energetic language and indignant thoughts were such as deeply impressed me when written—and they were the language and thoughts of many others associated with me. Amazement, wonder, astonishment, and passion have one common language, and like "thoughts that breathe, and words that burn," spring from the tongue of every man when astonishing events occur. Hence this similarity of language. Hence this identity of thought. This accounts for it, and nothing more.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are other insinuations in this article of the Congressional Globe in the main amusing, though enough insulting; and the first is, that I am no gentleman. No gentleman! Well, that would indeed be a severe verdict against my reputation if the person who renders it, was some Beau Brummel, the head of some fashionably-constituted board which had a right to pass upon what constitutes gentility, and to adjust the qualities and character of a gentleman. There is nothing on earth more difficult to describe—though every one has the idea in his mind—the beau ideal of what constitutes a gentleman; but when you approach the language of definition, of what constitutes gentility, there is nothing upon which mankind will more disagree. But as to what constitutes not a gentleman, there is really very little difference of opinion among mankind; and all the world will agree in saying, that he who comes fresh from the purlieus of Billingsgate, or from the bacchanalian orgies of some midnight revel, and vomits forth his bile in an American Senate against an associate member of Congress in another House, is no gentleman.

And there is yet another allegation against me, Mr. Speaker, which descends, indeed, to low-water mark, and becomes amusing enough, if for nothing else, at least for its originality. I have had during a long political life many, very many, astonishing insinuations directed against me, both in my public and my private relations; but this I am about to state bears off the palm, in freshness and novelty. It has been alleged that much of my political action has been affected by the fact, that in my more youthful days, it was my misfortune (or fortune, rather,) to suffer from that common frailty of youth—the loss of my heart, but, alas! on the wrong side of the Potomac, and so have become allied to the South by matrimonial connection. That certainly was a very grave crime, and I plead guilty to the charge uttered against me, and which continues to be uttered against me in the Northern States. But a charge of far higher importance is made against me now, that I am the owner of a carriage, or that I or my family roll in luxury, with liveried servants, in the streets of the metropolis. The author of this charge has undoubtedly mistaken the carriage of another member of Congress, who sometimes kindly gives me a ride, for mine, for his imagination has invested a common-clad driver with a livery. Such are my simple habits and tastes, that I have never been in the carriage to which he alludes but two or three times in my life; for I much prefer, when I can get the time, walking to riding to the Capitol. But what if I had liveried servants, and own up to the mighty fact? Well, sir, I had rather be driven by a negro in livery, than, a Southern man, be the liveried coachman of Northern Abolitionists driving an Abolition team for the Presidency. [Applause.]

Such trifles as these, however, Mr. Speaker, could not have strung into print such a jewelry of words as I have before me. There must have been some other provocation than what appears here in this letter of the New York Express, or its editorial article. I know full well what it was. It was the remarks which I made in the other end of the Capitol, a few evenings since—remarks which could have no effect out of that place, and were, therefore, innoxious, because no reporters were present, and because they could not go forth to the country from the secrecy of that Chamber. But when like sentiments and similar ideas were published elsewhere, naturally enough those who felt themselves hurt within doors, became outrageous when these ideas got out, and they felt it necessary to rise up, and, if possible, to overawe me and break me down as a public man. Sir, it will require much more than this fulmination, to overawe me in the discharge of my public duties, or to make me neglect, at all times, and upon all occasions, fearlessly to utter my sentiments of public measures and public men. But the great cause of this onset upon me, comes, I repeat, from what I said in the other wing of the Capitol. I, then and there, implored the presiding officer of that convocation—if he was about to surrender me, to surrender me and such as act with me, as prisoners of war—that we should have the soldier's honor of being shot, and not be strung up on a gallows erected by executioners educated at Christiana or Syracuse—that when the halter was about my neck, I should be taken by white men to the execution ground, and not be dragged there by ropes in African hands. Thus much in reply to what I believe really prompts this assault upon me.

One word more, before I sit down, in justice to my Southern Whig associates, who may have misunderstood what I said here the other day in the House, amid numerous interruptions, to the effect that the Southern Whig column faltered or wavered, and that was the reason why Whig Northern national men were depressed, and why they staggered, and why there was an apparent change from the action of the old Whig caucus, to the record of the votes made in this House. I did not mean that the whole column faltered or wavered, or any part of it, beyond the first shock felt when its chosen head gave himself up, and us Northern national Whigs, without stipulation or condition, as set forth in a certain speech in the United States Senate. He has been captured and taken by the enemy, and is now in their possession; but—and I say it with delight—so far as I know now, no Southern Whig of the column wavers, but all are true and faithful to the Constitution, and to the Northern men who were connected with them in the hour of trial. If there has been any misconstruction as regards that sentiment, I withdraw it freely as to all of them. After that trying scene which occurred the other night, in the other wing of the Capitol, when the great body of the South felt it necessary to separate from us Northern Whigs, the sentiment of every Southern Whig who remained behind, and opened his mouth to speak, was, that Northern men should be protected, and that the pledges of the compromise should be fully sustained, and that no candidate for the Presidency should be put forth who would not come out for the finality of these measures, and who would not stand recorded for their finality, too.

Am I not right in this announcement of a general Southern Whig public sentiment? It was due to us, Northern men, that we should have such support from them; for in that terrible hour of trial here, two sessions ago, our services were necessary for them, and they were given to them freely, with the implied, if not expressed understanding, that they would protect us to the extent of their ability. Ever since that, we have been hunted down in the North, as the Missouri compromise men were, who acted with the South in 1820, under the lead of Mr. Clay, as we Northern Whigs acted under his lead in 1850. But one or two Northern members of Congress who voted for that compromise, survived the political shock of that day; nay, almost the whole of them were buried in their political graves. If, therefore, we feel unusually sensitive now, amidst the adverse public opinion about us in the North, we must be pardoned for our anxiety, as again and again we demand countenance and protection, in carrying out what a great mass of our people deem to be an odious provision of the Constitution, or in creating a sounder sentiment of respect for the execution of that instrument in its very spirit and letter. In demanding all this, with sincerity and energy, we demand but what is our right, and what it is your duty to give us. And if we can have it cheerfully, unitedly, we can support ourselves and our common Union upon the basis of the Constitution. Without it, we must all become the miserable victims of fanaticism and political fury.

Mr. SACKETT. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. SMART. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, upon the special order.

Mr. STANLY. I desire to make a single remark. I have not seen the article in the Globe. Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is too late for gentlemen to object now. There was an understanding that this matter should be permitted to proceed.

Mr. STANLY. Gentlemen have not a right to object. I will leave it to the Speaker of the House. I have only a word to say.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] asked leave of the House to make a personal explanation, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] arose and said that he had no objection, provided if the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] alluded to any member upon this floor, that that member should also have the privilege of responding. The Chair certainly thought that there was a tacit assent upon the part of the House to that proposition. The question arises now whether or not the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] has been so alluded to in the speech of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks.]

Mr. SWEETSER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANTOUL] the other day proposed to make a personal explanation, but the gentleman from North Carolina persisted in objecting.

Mr. STANLY. I would rather have the gentleman from Ohio object to anything I may wish, than not. I hope that gentleman will never approve of any effort of mine to do or to undo anything. Have I the leave of the House to go on or not?

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot decide.

Mr. STANLY. With all respect, I insist that the Chair must decide.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot decide, if the gentleman will allow him, that there was—
Mr. STANLY. I beg pardon of the Chair, but I insist most respectfully, that it is the duty of the Chair to decide.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not intend to say that he could not decide, but the gentleman would not allow the Chair to say what his decision was. The Chair intended to say that he could not decide whether it was the order of the House, by unanimous consent, that the gentleman from North Carolina should be allowed to make a speech.

Mr. STANLY. Will the Chair state, then, what was the understanding of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state, that when the gentleman from New York rose and asked the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation, the gentleman from North Carolina rose and said he must object, unless it was the understanding that if the gentleman from New York referred to any gentleman on this floor—the Chair thinks that was the expression—that that gentleman should have a right to respond. There was a general expression—perhaps not universal—of assent to that proposition, and the Chair is free to say that the gentleman from North Carolina might well come to the conclusion that he had, under these circumstances, a right to make a speech.

Mr. SWEETSER. If the gentleman from North Carolina will confine his remarks to the allusion which was made to him, I certainly will make no objection. He is, perhaps, entitled to that. But I shall object if he travels into a defense of a certain gentleman at the other end of the Capitol, who has been alluded to.

Mr. STANLY. I would rather the gentleman should object than not.

Mr. SWEETSER. If the gentleman from North Carolina invites me to object, I will do it. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. STANLY. I shall not trespass long upon the attention of the House. I regret exceedingly the appearance of the speech in the Globe, which has been referred to by the gentleman from New York. I have not seen it or read it. The gentleman from New York has said nothing at all which calls for any personal reply on my part, and I leave it to the gentleman who has been assailed to take care of himself as he thinks proper, and as he can, if he pleases. He does not ask or need any defense. He would not thank me for attempting it, for that would imply he needed it. He has spoken in the Senate, to my regret, for I deprecate all personal matters, both there and here. If he needs any defense here—as I have been sitting behind the gentleman from New York, and could not hear him distinctly—I call upon my colleague, [Mr. VENABLE,] who represents his district, to do it, or another colleague, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] who sat immediately in front of the gentleman from New York, and who, I suppose, is on as friendly relations with that honorable Senator as myself.

Both these gentlemen [VENABLE and CLINGMAN] have heard what was said. I only want to say this, that I deplore the existing state of things, and these charges and counter-charges against gentlemen in the Senate and in the House. I do not know where we shall stop, if we begin to reply to newspapers. I wish to say but one single word, in all calmness, and without reflecting upon anybody. The only point in the speech of the gentleman from New York, which touched me, the other day—and which he generously withdrew this morning, if I understood him aright—was the idea that Southern gentlemen "wavered" upon this question of the compromise acts. I felt hurt at what I thought was a charge of infidelity to the people who have honored me with their confidence; and, as the gentleman from New York has referred to a remark he made in the last Congress, of "cooling" tones towards Southern men, and fierce tones towards Northern men, I will say, that several gentlemen were restrained from replying to him in harsh terms, for the consideration that their previous relations had been friendly with the gentleman from New York, and that it was improper to indulge in the "fiercer" tones towards gentlemen from his "latitude."

The feelings I speak of animated me. To accuse a Southern man of wavering in that respect, is to say that he is destitute of patriotism, personal honor, and regard for the rights and interests of his constituents. No Southern gentleman could bear a remark of that sort without feeling his heart burn with indignation, as did the hearts of every Southern gentleman the other day. He has, however, made the amende honorable this morning, as I understand him; and on that point, therefore, I have no more to say.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for one moment? I know he does not mean to say that I made that amende upon the suggestion, advice, or insinuation of anybody from the South. I do not want the idea to go forth that I was intimidated into it. I know the gentleman will do me justice on that point.

Mr. STANLY. I intimated no such thing as intimidation—not by any means.

Mr. BROOKS. I would not make even a just qualification, under intimidation.

Mr. STANLY. I did not intend to intimate such a thing.

Now, sir, a word in reference to one remark made by the gentleman from New York, and that was, that the "large body" of the Southern gentlemen left the caucus. If the gentleman had counted the Southern gentlemen who were present and those who left, he would have found that he was mistaken in point of fact. I think a majority of Southern members remained—that is my impression. I beg pardon of the House for having trespassed on its time even for these four and a half minutes.

MONROE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. This being private bill day, the Chair announced that the bill upon the Speaker's table "for the relief of the Monroe Railroad Company and their sureties," was the first business in order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] moves that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. SMART] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. That bill upon the Speaker's table will give rise to no debate. It is merely to relieve some sureties for a considerable amount of money. It has been lying over since last private bill day, and gentlemen who wished to examine it have had an opportunity of doing so. It will take no time, and therefore I hope it will be taken up.

Mr. SACKETT. That bill is a private bill, and one which has been partly considered by the House. I will, therefore, waive my motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House, in order that it may be first disposed of.

Mr. SMART. I will also withdraw my motion if the bill is going to lead to no debate.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is not the first business in order the call of committees for reports?

The SPEAKER. This is private bill day, and the first business in order is the consideration of the private bill upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair decide that on private bill days, there is no morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that if there is private business on the Speaker's table, it is his duty to take up that business. In the absence of any business on the Speaker's table, there would be a morning hour.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will let us have the call of committees for one hour.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. GORMAN. I would inquire of the Chair whether the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] to reconsider the vote by which the bill in relation to the State University of Indiana was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, does not take precedence during the morning?

The SPEAKER. It is not the duty of the Chair to call up the consideration of that motion.

Mr. GORMAN. The subject will not take more than three minutes, and I ask that it may be called up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that is a question which belongs more appropriately to the morning hour, it being a report from a committee.

Mr. STANLY. I will call it up at a very early day. It shall not be lost by my neglect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion to reconsider is not one which can be considered now. This day is set apart for private bills, and we are considering a private bill, on which the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. BRIGGS demanded tellers on the second; which were ordered; and Messrs. VENABLE, and STEPHENS of Georgia, were appointed.

The question was then put, and the tellers reported—80 in the affirmative.

A further count not being demanded, the previous question received a second.

The main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. SKELTON demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, but they were not ordered.

And the question being put, the bill passed.

Mr. STEPHENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SACKETT moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SMART moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not in order now to refer the private bills from the Senate upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, because that business has not been taken up.

CLOSE OF DEBATE ON HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the House shall vote down the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, I shall take it as a determination on the part of the House to proceed with the special order, and I shall then offer a resolution to close the debate on the special order on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the question will be first taken upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order. That motion will have the precedence, because it is the special order.

Mr. JOHNSON. By the permission of the House, I wish to say a single word. Usually on Fridays and Saturdays we do but little; and the chances are that if we do not go into committee on the special order, we will adjourn over to-morrow. Now, I wish to say to the House, that it is the determination of many of the friends of the homestead bill to bring the debate upon it to a close; and if the House will devote to-day and to-morrow to the special order, we can close the debate on Tuesday at one o'clock.

I offer the usual resolution to close debate on the special order, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on Tuesday next, two hours after the committee shall have resumed the consideration of the same.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out "Tuesday," and insert "Thursday, in lieu thereof."

Mr. DEAN. Before voting upon this question, I desire to ask a question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am disposed to accept of whatever is agreeable to the House.

Mr. DEAN. If we pass this resolution, to close the debate on Tuesday next, and the House then refuses to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, gentlemen will have no opportunity of being heard.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no danger of the House refusing to go into committee if we close the debate.

Mr. VENABLE. I would suggest to my friend from New York, [Mr. DEAN,] that there are a number of gentlemen who desire to speak upon this subject, and I hope, if debate is closed upon this bill, that we shall have night sessions, and allow them to make their speeches.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let us stop debate, and then agree upon the night sessions afterwards.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If it is the pleasure of the House, I will accept of the modification proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] and leave the resolution so as to provide for closing debate upon Thursday next.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will allow his proposition to remain as originally made, so as to enable the House to decide between them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly; I will allow both to come before the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am anxious that debate shall be closed, and that the bill shall be disposed of as soon as possible. There is much other important business which is suffering from neglect. I hope the earliest day will be adopted.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to substitute "Thursday" instead of "Tuesday;" and it was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. CARTTER moved that the vote just taken, by which the resolution passed, be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion to suspend the rules, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SACKETT. I rise to a point of order. My point is, that as the business upon the Private Calendar has preference over other business on Fridays and Saturdays of each week, the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar takes precedence to that to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union takes precedence, for the reason that the special order takes precedence of all other business from day to day—Fridays and Saturdays not excepted. Ordinarily, the gentleman would be correct in his point of order; but inasmuch as a special order is now pending, the Chair has no doubt in the correctness of his decision.

Mr. SACKETT. Well, if the motion is voted down, will it then be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It will then be in order.

The question was then put upon the motion to suspend the rules and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and carried in the affirmative. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the Chair.)

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the business before the committee, the consideration of House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and for other purposes, on which the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. YATES,] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. YATES occupied the floor an hour in favor of the policy of the bill, arguing that it would result beneficially to the new States, the General Government, and to the people of the country at large. He advocated the policy of liberal grants to the new States for the purpose of constructing railroads, and especially grants for the benefit of the indigent insane in all the States. He maintained that the giving of lands to actual settlers, whilst it would provide homes for the poor laborers of the old States, would destroy the tenantry system of the new States, and give to the thousands of tenants these lands to cultivate for themselves, instead of cultivating those of their landlords. [Mr. Y.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SMART addressed the committee in defence of the North, and to show that there was no substantial foundation for the charges repeatedly made of wholesale wrongs, aggressions, exactions, and oppression by that section upon the South. [Mr. S.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. DEAN spoke of the state of parties in New York, claiming that State as Democratic, and asserting that her electoral vote will be given to the nominee of the Baltimore Convention. He utterly repudiated the doctrine of "claims" on the Democratic party. He said that the Democrats would go into the canvass on principles, while the Whigs would "go it blind" for the spoils. [Mr. D.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. EWING next obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. OUTLAW, who moved that the committee do rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the homestead bill, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, by unanimous consent, reported the following bills, which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, viz:

A bill making appropriation for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1853;

A bill making appropriation for the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853; and

A bill making appropriation for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers, or otherwise, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853.

Mr. PRICE. I move that when this House adjourns it adjourn to meet again on Monday next. The question being put, it was disagreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MEADE. Will the gentleman withdraw his motion for a moment?

Mr. ROBBINS. I will.

Mr. MEADE. I wished the motion to be withdrawn, that I might ask for the State of Alabama the special favor of introducing a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, with the view of having it passed by the House, authorizing a change in the time of holding the courts in that State.

Mr. HOUSTON. The bill involves no appropriation. It simply provides for changing the time of holding the courts.

No objection being made—

Mr. MEADE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 209, entitled "An act to change the time of holding the United States district courts in Alabama, and for other purposes."

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and, having been read a third time, it was passed.

On motion by Mr. MEADE, the House then adjourned to meet to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, gave notice that, on to-morrow or some subsequent day of the session, he would ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "A bill to surrender to the State of Ohio the unfinished portion of the Cumberland road in said State."

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BOYD, of Kentucky: The petition of John G. Ramsey, praying that a patent may issue in lieu of the one heretofore issued James Ramsey, son and the other heirs-at-law of John Ramsey.

By Mr. LANDRY: The petition of A. B. Roman, of Louisiana, praying the confirmation of his title to a tract of land in said State.

By Mr. CHANDLER: The memorial of Messrs. Robert & Kneeland, Benjamin L. Swan, and the executors of Thaddeus Phelps, of New York, and Jacob Idler, of Philadelphia, asking Congress to interpose in behalf of their claim upon the Government of Venezuela.

By Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi: The petition of E. Douglass and 36 others, citizens of Mississippi, praying a grant of land for the benefit of the Franklin Institute, a literary and scientific school, in Copiah county, Mississippi.

By Mr. ALLEN, of Illinois: The petition of S. W. McChell and 86 others, citizens of Williamson county, Illinois, praying the establishment of a post route from Raleigh, in Saline county, to Marion, in Williamson county, Illinois.

Also, the petition of L. M. Riley and 89 others, citizens of Saline county, Illinois, praying the establishment of the same route.

By Mr. MACE: The memorial of Joseph E. McDonald, Isaac C. Elston, Henry S. Lane, Jacob Winn, John Wilson, Alex. Thomson, and William Swining, committee in behalf of the people of Fountain, Montgomery, and Boone counties, asking a grant of lands to aid in constructing a railroad from Springfield, Illinois, via Danville, to Covington, Crawfordsville, and Andersonstown, Indiana.

By Mr. SIBLEY: The petition of George W. Campbell and 101 others, citizens of Minnesota, praying that the engineer in charge of the Government roads in that Territory be authorized to change the route of the road from Point Douglas to the Falls of the St. Louis river, so that it shall pass by Bowles's Mills, instead of by Cottage Grove.

By Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee: The petition of Geo. Hickman, of Tennessee, praying Congress to grant him a pension for services rendered in the war of 1812 with Great Britain.

By Mr. APPLETON, of Maine: The petition of John Starling and others, of Portland, Maine, praying that the fishing bounty may be allowed to the owners of the schooner Elizabeth, lost at sea.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 23, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Patents, submitting the annual agricultural report of that office.

A motion by Mr. HAMLIN, to print the report, and also to print 30,000 additional copies thereof for the use of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to suspend all the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the deficiency bill; and, before the vote is taken on that motion, I should like to have read a letter which I have received from the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator must make another motion, and that is, to suspend the order requiring private bills to be taken up to-day.

Mr. HUNTER. I make that motion. Before the question is taken, I ask for the reading of the letter which I have received from the Secretary of War.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, }
WASHINGTON, April 15, 1852.

SIR: I take the liberty of informing you that I am apprehensive that serious injury will result to the service if the passage of the "deficiency bill," now pending in the Senate, should be much longer delayed. The movements of troops, so far as it depends on orders from this Department, are entirely arrested by the want of funds to pay for transportation. It is considered highly important to march several companies of mounted men along the route to Oregon, during the next summer, for the protection of the north-western frontier, and of emigrants to the Pacific coast; but there are no horses for this purpose and no means to purchase them, and it is feared that, before the necessary arrangements can be made, the season will be too far advanced to carry this plan into execution.

For these reasons I respectfully urge an early consideration of the bill in question.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. M. CONRAD,
Secretary of War.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER,
Chairman of the Committee on Finance,
United States Senate.

Mr. CLEMENS. I hope that course will not be pursued. The deficiency bill has occupied the attention of the Senate to the exclusion of all other business for several days. I have no objection to considering it at the proper time, and in its proper place, but we have for two weeks postponed the consideration of private bills. The private claimants who have been here waiting on the justice of Congress, have been delayed for two weeks. This day was specially set apart for the consideration of their claims, and I do object to thrusting in other business to take precedence of them. Besides, there are other reasons why the deficiency bill should not be taken up to-day. It is well known that the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] who is prevented by indisposition from being here to-day, is exceedingly anxious to address the Senate on that bill. We would owe it to him, if it came up properly, to postpone it, in order to give him an opportunity of doing so. I hope we will proceed to the consideration of private business to-day, and take up the deficiency bill at a proper time and in its proper place. As to these contracts for the transportation of troops mentioned in the letter of the Secretary of War, we all know better than that. We all know that the law authorizes the Secretary to contract for the transportation of supplies, without any appropriation.

Mr. HUNTER. I can only say, so far as the Senator from Texas is concerned, that I called to see him this morning, and told him that if the question was likely to come to a vote, in the event of the Senate taking up the deficiency bill, I would send for him, and let him know. But I told him that I also understood that there were several speeches to be made on the subject, and that I did not suppose we would be able to get to a vote to-day. But even supposing that we should be able to get a vote on the amendment giving additional compensation to Collins's line of steamers, when we got to that point, the amendment might be laid aside by general consent, and we might go on with other amendments.

As to the propriety of attending to the consideration of private bills, or taking up this measure, the Senate can judge as well as I can. I leave it to them to say.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from Texas, who is chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, is very desirous of submitting some remarks on the amendment pending to the deficiency bill. As it is one connected directly with the administration of the Post Office Department, his indisposition is, I think, a full justification why we should not proceed with that bill to-day. But the other reasons which the Senator from Alabama has stated, certainly will induce me to vote to adhere this day to private bills. I hope the Senate will do so.

Mr. CASS. I saw the Senator from Texas about half an hour ago. He desired me to say that he would not oppose the consideration of this bill to-day; but considering his relation as chairman of the Post Office Committee, and the inquiries which he has made into this matter, and knowing that he is very anxious to address the Senate on the subject, I hope we will not take up the bill to-day.

Mr. DOWNS. I hope that the private bills will not longer be delayed. They have already been delayed, not only for two weeks, but for two or three weeks previously nothing was done except to discuss some particular private bills. I take it that this rule, setting apart to-day for private bills, meant something. If we are constantly to dispense with it, it would be better to abrogate it at once. I see no pressing necessity for acting on the deficiency bill to-day. It cannot be disposed of to-day; and for the mere gain of one day I think it will be better not to take it up, but go on with the Private Calendar.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the rule will not be dispensed with. I am at the head of one of the committees from which private bills come. That committee has reported bills of an important character. If we are to have those bills considered at all, I hope the Senate will bestow the one day allotted to them to their consideration. I hope their consideration will not be longer postponed. I make this appeal to the Senate, as I am at the head of one of the committees from which private bills come.

Mr. ADAMS. I beg leave to suggest that there are evident indications of the public requiring the attention of this body; and as it is desirable to act upon the deficiency bill, I suggest that to-morrow, by common consent, and without any motion, be set apart for the consideration of that bill. It is a leisure day—a day on which we are in the habit of taking holiday. Now, if the public business requires the action of the body, I hope that to-morrow will be set apart as a day for its consideration; and that we shall proceed to-day with the regular order of business.

Mr. HUNTER'S motion was not agreed to.

THE CARMELITE NUNNERY—ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT. The first question before the Senate will be on the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the bill from the House of Representatives for the benefit of the Carmelite Nunnery of Baltimore.

Mr. DOWNS. I would suggest that this is a bill in which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Pratt] takes a deep interest. He is absent to-day; and, therefore, I move that its further consideration be postponed until next Friday.

Mr. DAWSON. I hope that this bill will not be postponed. I presume that there will be no difficulty about passing it now. It is for a very small amount, and I do not think there can be any difficulty about passing it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Georgia is very much mistaken.

Mr. DAWSON. If it be not desired by the Senator from Louisiana that the bill should lie over, I would be very much pleased to have the vote taken on it now.

Mr. DOWNS. I do not object to that course, and therefore I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it would be better to lay over that bill. The Senator from Maryland, who takes a deep interest in it, is absent, and I apprehend that it will not pass without opposition. It is the same bill which has been debated here before.

Mr. DAWSON. I did not know that the bill was to be re-debated. I thought that the debate before had covered the whole ground. And I was under the impression that the vote could be taken at once.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not know that we shall have more time, or that we could adopt a better rule with regard to the Private Calendar than to dispose of the business as it comes up. For two weeks we have not considered the Private Calendar; and I hope that we will now dispose of this bill and go on with bills on the Private Calendar in their regular order.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to suggest that it would be better to take up and adopt a resolution offered some time since by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. NORRIS.] It is a resolution proposing that private bills to which there is no objection should be considered immediately; and that those which are objected to shall go over till the next Friday.

The PRESIDENT. That cannot be taken up without a motion to suspend the order for the purpose.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not object to taking up the Carmelite Nunnery bill in its order. I merely made a suggestion that it was probable the bill would be debated, in order that the Senate might consent to lay it over, and get along faster with other business.

Mr. GWIN. Is it not in order to move to take up the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDENT. Not without a suspension of the order setting apart this day for the consideration of private bills.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that course will be pursued. The resolution relates exclusively to private business, and I move to suspend the execution of the order for the purpose of taking it up.

Mr. BORLAND. I would suggest that the motion of the Senator from California belongs to private bills. All the action that he asks for is in reference to private bills, and in order to facilitate their passage.

The PRESIDENT. It is a resolution; not a private bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I trust there will be no objection to taking up the resolution.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. GWIN, and the PRESIDENT announced that it was not agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that before the Chair decides whether the motion is agreed to, or not, the resolution will be read. I do not think the Senate understands it. It pertains exclusively to private business, and its object is to accelerate private bills.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has decided that the motion is not agreed to; and there was no division called for.

Mr. MANGUM. Will the Chair be so kind as to inform me what the resolution is?

The PRESIDENT. It will be read, if desired. The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Friday next, and every succeeding third Friday thereafter, shall be devoted to the consideration of such private bills upon the Calendar as shall not give rise to debate; and whenever debate shall arise upon a bill, or any Senator shall express a desire to debate the same, it shall go over to the following Friday."

Mr. SEWARD. I understood the resolution perfectly. It was because I did not see that it was a practicable or just mode of proceeding, that I voted against suspending the order.

Mr. HALE. Is it in order to make a motion to suspend the consideration of private bills?

The PRESIDENT. It is not, because that motion has just been decided, and no question has since been taken.

Mr. HALE. Then I will make a motion. I move that the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the bill for the benefit of the Carmelite Nunnery of Baltimore be laid on the table.

Mr. DOWNS. By laying the bill on the table, it will be taken off the Calendar. I object to that course; but I have no objection to its postponement.

Mr. HALE. I would suggest to the Senator from Louisiana, that if it is laid upon the table, a majority can take it up at any time.

The PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. CLEMENS. I do not wish to debate it; I want to know whether, if the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the effect of it will not be to preclude a reconsideration hereafter?

The PRESIDENT. Not at all. If the motion to reconsider is laid upon the table, it can be taken up at any time hereafter. The regulation of the House of Representatives on this point is different from that of the Senate.

There was a division, and sixteen were in favor of the motion, and fourteen against it—no quorum voting.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the motion, and move to postpone the further consideration of the motion to reconsider until to-morrow.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. HALE. I now renew the motion made by the Senator from California, to postpone the order of the Senate in relation to taking up private bills, for the purpose of taking up the resolution introduced by my colleague. And I want to say to my friend from New York, that he is altogether mistaken in supposing that this would be an impracticable rule. There has been such a rule in the House of Representatives for years, and its operation is exceedingly just and equitable. Under the present rule of the Senate, if you get a Carmelite Nunnery bill, or something of that sort, at the head of the Calendar, it blocks up all other private bills; and all those bills, the justice of which is manifest to the whole Senate, are delayed. Whereas, if we were to go over the Calendar once, and take up the bills to which there is no objection, we can dispose of them, and then go back and take up the disputed ones. I hope this resolution will commend itself to the good sense of the Senate.

Mr. SEWARD. I understand it perfectly. Its effect will be this: When you get a Carmelite Nunnery bill before the Senate, or something of that sort, it can never pass, because any Senator will be able to prevent its passage by saying that he intends to discuss it; that is to say, the effect of the resolution will be to give priority to those who can get their bills through without discussion, and prevent relief to those parties who have meritorious claims which require to be discussed.

Mr. GWIN. I appeal to the Senate if that is any argument against this resolution. The amount of the Senator from New York's position is, that because a portion of the Senate are opposed to a bill, therefore we shall not pass any private bill to which they are not opposed. That is the whole point of the case. There are a vast number of bills on the Private Calendar to which nobody objects, and shall they be kept behind those bills, which are constantly being contested? I think that it is due to those claimants who have claims reported upon favorably, which are on the Calendar, and cannot be reached except through this rule, that they should have some opportunity of knowing whether any member of the Senate objects to them. These disputed claims should not always have preference. There are two or three claims which have occupied the attention of the Senate for two or three private bill days, and we have not made any progress on the Private Calendar for a month past. I say it is unjust and unfair to those claimants, to whose claims there is no objection, that they should be thus postponed, and that doubtful claims should occupy the whole time of the Senate.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

The Senate proceeded accordingly to consider the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I have modified the resolution so as to read:

Resolved, That to-day, and every fourth Friday hereafter, shall be devoted to the consideration of such private bills upon the Calendar as shall not give rise to debate; and whenever debate shall arise upon a bill, or any Senator shall express a desire to debate the same, it shall go over to the following Friday.

The resolution as modified was adopted.

THOMAS H. LEGGET.

The PRESIDENT announced that the bill for the relief of Thomas H. Legget was the first on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HUNTER expressing a desire to debate it, it was laid over.

IRA DAY.

The PRESIDENT announced the next bill to be one for the relief of Ira Day, of Vermont.

Mr. BAYARD expressing a desire to debate it, it was laid over.

ALEXANDER Y. P. GARNETT.

The joint resolution for the relief of Alexander Y. P. Garnett was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to cause to be paid to Alexander Y. P. Garnett the sum of $166 10 for his services as Surgeon on board the ship "Cyane," from March 1, 1843, to August 6, of the same year.

It was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

EXTENSION OF PATENTS.

The bill for the relief of George G. Bishop and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the letters-patent granted to John Arnold, dated July 15, 1829, for a new and useful improvement in the machine for forming the web of cloth, of wool, hair, or other suitable substances, without spinning, or weaving; and also the letters-patent granted to John Arnold and George G. Bishop, dated October 20, 1836, for a new and useful improvement in the same machine be renewed, revived, and extended for the term of fourteen years from and after the passage of the act. That the patents so revived, renewed, and extended shall have the same effect as if they were originally granted for a term of years extending to fourteen years after the passage of the act: Provided, Such renewed and extended patents shall be open to legal inquiry and decision in the same manner as if they were issued under the general laws regulating the renewal of patents: And provided, further, That all persons now enjoying the lawful use of the machines so patented, and the purchase of any such machine so in use, or lawfully constructed, shall continue to use the same notwithstanding the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

HARRIET F. FISHER.

The PRESIDENT announced that the bill next in order, was a bill for the relief of Harriet F. Fisher, widow of Marvin W. Fisher.

Mr. BORLAND. Before the bill is read a second time, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs have reported a bill, which they offer and insist on, as a substitute for this one. I think, therefore, it had better be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over under the rule.

ALBRA TRIPP.

The bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Albra Tripp, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the name of Albra Tripp, a soldier in the service of the United States in the late war with Great Britain, be placed on the roll of invalid pensions, at the rate of $4 per month, commencing the first day of December, 1851; to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, read a third time, and passed.

JOSEPH JOHNSTON.

The bill for the relief of Joseph Johnston was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior place the name of Joseph Johnston, of Addison county, Vermont, on the pension roll, at the rate of $8 per month; said allowance commencing on the first day of January, 1850, and continuing during his natural life.

There being no amendment offered, the bill was reported to the Senate, read a third time, and passed.

SYLVANUS BLODGET.

The House bill for the relief of Sylvanus Blodget was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior place the name of Sylvanus Blodget upon the pension roll, at $8 per month, commencing on the seventh day of January, 1846.

Mr. DAWSON. If there is a report in this case I wish it may be read.

The report was accordingly read.

The petitioner was a private in the company of volunteers from the town of Jericho, in the county of Chittenden, State of Vermont, commanded by Captain Peter L. Allen, of that town. On hearing that the British forces were advancing upon Plattsburg, in the State of New York, early in September, 1814, that militia company marched to Lake Champlain, which they crossed, and were actually engaged in the battle of Plattsburg. The petitioner, while in the line of his duty, by reason of fatigue and exposure, lying out on the ground in cold rainy nights without covering, took a severe cold, and was subsequently carried home sick, with severe pain in his head, back, and hips, and also a very sore throat and mouth. He was then confined by sickness, rheumatism, and inflammation in his eyes, which rendered them weak and sore, gradually growing worse ever since; and has been able, but a small portion of the time, to perform manual labor. He has lost the use of one of his eyes, and can see but dimly with the other. Before he went to Plattsburg he was in good health, but since his return his health has been very poor, and he is fully satisfied that his afflictions came upon him in consequence of going to Plattsburg. He is poor, and now about sixty-five years of age. The facts of the petitioner's service, and faithful performance of his duty, are sworn to by his Captain and Colonel, and the fact of his being healthy and robust previous to his service, is sworn to by his Captain, and several of his neighbors. There is also the testimony of two physicians, who certify that the petitioner is in the condition set forth by him, and that it is their opinion that the cause of his complaint was the exposures at the battle of Plattsburg.

Mr. DAWSON. I should be pleased to have the chairman of the Committee on Pensions explain to the Senate the principle upon which the committee base the report in favor of placing this individual upon the pension roll. It is nearly forty years since the battle was fought, and his claim seems to be urged in consequence of his sufferings from a cold that he took, and not from wounds received in battle. I think it is a new principle.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. There is no new principle in this case. If he had made his application before, he would have received his pension. There is no reason for refusing to grant it now, except that it has remained so long.

Mr. HALE. I object to this.

The PRESIDENT. Then it must pass over.

Mr. HALE. I do not mean to object to the bill, but to the debate. I will, however, move to amend the bill, by striking out "1846," and inserting "1852."

Mr. DAWSON. That does not change the principle.

Mr. HALE. Then let it pass over.
So the bill was passed over.

ARTEMAS CONANT.

The Senate next proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of House bill for payment of arrears of pension to the guardian of Artemas Conant.

The bill provides that the arrears of pension now due to Artemas Conant, an invalid pensioner, by an act passed July 6th, 1815, be paid to his guardian, at the rate of \$5 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  per month, from March 4th, 1830, to April, 1846.

Mr. FELCH. I desire that the report, if there is one in that case, may be read.

The report states that Artemas Conant, while in the service, in the line of his duty, as a soldier in the Army of the United States, during the late war, received a wound in the hip which disabled him, and for which disability he was inscribed on the pension list, at the rate of \$5 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  per month, to commence on the 6th day of July, 1815; that in 1821 he became deranged in mind, in consequence of sufferings occasioned by his wound, and other injuries received while in the service in the line of his duty; and that his pension was paid to his guardian up to the 4th of March, 1830. The act of the 3d of March, 1819, required all invalid pensioners, who were not disabled by the loss of a limb, to be examined biennially by two respectable surgeons or physicians, before receiving their pensions. In consequence of Conant's insanity, he was not examined from 1830, to April, 1846. On the 19th day of May, 1846, the renewal of his pension took effect. In a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions, dated July 3d, 1846, he says:

"My opinion is, that he (Artemas Conant) is justly entitled to the pension from the 4th of March, 1830, when it was stopped, to the 9th of May, 1846. The law, however, gives the Department no such power, and it is because we cannot afford relief that the guardian now petitions Congress for the pension."

The bill was reported to the Senate, read a third time, and passed.

ROBERT ARMSTRONG.

The bill for the relief of Robert Armstrong was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Robert Armstrong, of Tennessee, on the roll of invalid pensioners, and to pay him a pension, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, during his life, to commence on the 14th day of May, 1845.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask for the reading of the report of the Committee on Pensions, to which the bill was referred.

The report was accordingly read; by which it appeared that the memorial of Robert Armstrong, the petitioner, was first presented to the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions, on the 18th December, 1845; that on the 3d February, 1847, Mr. Crittenden obtained leave to bring in a bill founded on the petition; that it was referred to a select committee, and thence reported without amendment on the 12th of the same month.

It further appeared that the Committee on Pensions, on the 11th August, 1848, were discharged from the further consideration of the case. The bill reported from the select committee on the 12th February, 1847, directed the Secretary of War "to place the name of General Robert Armstrong, of Tennessee, on the roll of invalid pensioners, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $17 a month, from the 23d day of January, 1814, during 'his natural life.'"

On a careful examination of the proofs filed with the memorial, the committee consider Robert Armstrong's claim to the bounty of the Government to be well established, and highly meritorious; and they state that they can only account for the delay in extending to him the benefits of existing laws, by supposing that it was occasioned by a disagreement among the members of the Committee on Pensions, touching that provision of the bill, which relates to the period when the pension shall commence.

On the 23d of January, 1814, the memorialist, then a lieutenant, in command of a company of volunteers called the "Artillery Guards," under General Jackson, was severely wounded at the battle of Enotchopee Creek, in which battle he and his company behaved in the most brave and gallant manner. General Jackson, in a certificate written with his own hand, dated 16th of May, 1845, says that—"In the battle of the 23d of January, 1814, known by the name of Enotchopee Creek, the shameful flight of my rear guard, producing flight and confusion in my whole army, it was the undiminished bravery of Lieutenant Armstrong, acting as captain of the volunteer artillery guards, that saved my army from total and shameful defeat, and all my wounded from horrid massacre. 'This little spartan band, about twenty-five in number, met, and bravely faced, upwards of five hundred of the bravest Creek warriors—checked them in their desperate onset, and at one fire of the savage host I saw seven of this little heroic band fall—among them was Lieutenant Robert Armstrong, severely wounded. He fell by the side of his cannon, exclaiming, 'Some of you, my brave fellows, must perish, but save the cannon!' They did save the cannon, and my whole army from shameful and total defeat, and my brave wounded from barbarous massacre."

From the testimony of two surgeons, it is shown that Armstrong was wounded by a ball in his left hip, which penetrated deep into the muscles, and lodged near the spine, where it now remains, rendering his degree of disability total.

The committee, in consideration of the gallantry of the memorialist, and the important service rendered by him at the time he received his wound, were unanimously of opinion that he should be placed on the list of pensioners, at a rate exceeding that usually allowed under the existing general laws. The committee could not, in any case, find a sound reason for departing from the principle established by the act of 10th April, 1806, and, in the case of the memorialist, do not deem it expedient to extend his pension back to the period when he was wounded; and, therefore, recommend that it should commence at the time when he completed his proof of a claim to a pension.

Mr. HALE. The principle involved is the same as in the bill already passed over, in consequence of objection being made. I am opposed to the payment of these long arrears of pension.

If the committee pass a bill for the grant of a pension commencing with the present year, I have no objection; but I do object to the principle contained in these bills. I move to strike out the year "1845," and insert "1852" instead.

Mr. CASS. What will be the effect of that amendment?

The PRESIDENT. The pension will commence from 1852, instead of from 1845.

Mr. CASS. I object to the amendment.

Mr. BADGER. I hope it will not pass. If the principle is right in one case, it is right in all.

The question was then taken on the proposed amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Then, I propose to debate the bill: let it lie over.

Mr. CASS. I very much regret that it cannot be passed now. If there is any bill that should be acted on instantly, it is this. The case which it proposes to relieve is one of the most extreme hardship and daring courage ever recorded.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. The honorable Senator from New Hampshire himself reported the bill from the committee last year.

Mr. HALE. You are greatly deceived.

The PRESIDENT. If there is any intention to debate the bill, it must be passed over, in accordance with the rule.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope, under the circumstances, that the Senate will agree to the amendment, in order to secure the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT. No amendment can be offered now. The Senator from New Hampshire has given notice of his intention to debate the bill, and it must, therefore, be passed over.

It was passed over accordingly.

Mr. HALE subsequently rose and said: Upon my objection, a bill for the relief of General Armstrong was laid over. I wish to say, that I do not want to stand in the way as an objector to a bill for a meritorious old officer. I think the principle involved in that bill is wrong; but I am willing to leave that to be passed upon by the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I cannot consent to that; because I am utterly opposed to placing any one officer on a better footing than all the rest. Let all fare alike.

JACOB YOUNG.

The Senate next proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of Jacob Young. The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Jacob Young upon the pension roll, and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, during his life, said pension to commence on the 8th day of December, 1851.

Mr. DAWSON. Let the report be read.

The report was accordingly read; from which it appears that the petitioner was a soldier in the war of 1812, and that he received a wound at the battle of Maguago, in the vicinity of Detroit, on account of which he asks a pension. He belonged to a company of Ohio volunteers, attached to Colonel McArthur's command; and omitted to make application for a pension till this late period, because he has been able to support himself. He now, in consequence of increasing disability from his wound and age, asks the aid from Government to which he deems himself entitled. He was wounded in the shoulder by a rifle ball, which has never been extracted. The committee deemed the evidence, both in regard to his service and the nature of the wound, satisfactory, and such as would justify the passage of an act for his relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MARGARET FARRAR.

The Senate next proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of a bill for the relief of Margaret Farrar.

It provides that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be authorized and required to ascertain the amount of interest, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, due and unpaid to Margaret Farrar, a half-breed Indian, under the treaty of 1836, with the Sac and Fox Indians, and that said Commissioner cause such sum of money as he may find due, if any, to be paid to said Margaret Farrar; and that the sum of $400 be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose aforesaid.

Mr. BAYARD. As there is no report accompanying the bill, and as I do not understand the facts in this case, I move that it be passed over.

It was accordingly passed over.

Subsequently, the consideration of the bill was resumed.

Mr. ATCHISON. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] objected to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Margaret Farrar for the want of an explanation. There is no report accompanying the bill. It was so small a matter, and so clear a case that I did not deem it necessary to make a written report. The claim arises under a treaty with the Sac and Fox Indians in 1836. As I have shown the treaty to the Senator from Delaware, he tells me he withdraws his objection.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator has shown me the treaty, and I have no doubt that the bill should pass. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ATCHISON. The treaty ordered the sum of $1,000 to be invested for the use and benefit of this half-breed Indian girl, to be loaned out, and the interest applied for her benefit. The agent who had charge of the money did loan it, and when she reached the age of twenty years, the principal was paid. There were, perhaps, one or two years when the interest was not paid. This bill requires the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to inquire into the matter, and ascertain the amount of interest due, if any, and pay it. That is the sum and substance of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

VASQUEZ AND COLLIGAN.

The Senate then considered, as in Committee of the Whole, a bill authorizing the legal representatives of Antoine Vasquez, Hypolite Vasquez, Joseph Vasquez, and John Colligan to enter certain lands in Missouri.

The bill provides that the legal representatives of the parties aforesaid may enter, without payment, at any land office in the State of Missouri, in such quantities, agreeably to the United States surveys, as the claimants may desire, a quantity of land subject to private entry, not exceeding eight hundred arpents for each of the three persons first above named, and twelve hundred arpents for said Colligan, in lieu of and in compensation for a claim of that quantity allowed to them by the Board of Commissioners appointed for the final adjustment of private land claims in Missouri, and confirmed to them by "An act confirming claims to land in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes," approved July 4th, 1836, the register or registers of the land offices aforesaid to receive the proper application and proofs, and to issue the necessary certificates, on return of which to the General Land Office, with proofs sufficient, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, to establish the right of the claimants as such legal representatives, a patent or patents shall issue as in other cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. I would like to have one question answered. Is this giving away lands for which no consideration at all has been paid?

Mr. DOWNS. Land was given to these persons; and before they located it, it was sold by the United States. This is to grant them land in place of that which was allowed them by the Board of Commissioners.

Mr. DAWSON. By what power was it confirmed?

Mr. DOWNS. The title was incomplete as given by the United States, if I recollect right. There is a report, however.

Mr. DAWSON. I am satisfied.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MARTIN FENWICK.

The Senate then considered, as in Committee of the Whole, a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Martin Fenwick.

The bill provides that the claim of Martin Fenwick to five hundred arpents, which is entered as number one hundred and fifty-one in the second class of the decisions of the late Board in Missouri, be confirmed against any claim on the part of the United States to the said Martin Fenwick, or his legal representatives; and that upon the rendition to the General Land Office of an approved plat of the location a patent shall issue, which shall operate only as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States; which claim shall be located according to the lines of the public surveys, and so as to embrace the ancient original settlement and improvement—the location to be made as near the aforesaid area of five hundred arpents as may be consistent with the legal subdivision, and shall not interfere with any sale which may have been made by the United States, nor with any claim which may have been confirmed by or pursuant to any law of the United States.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish the report may be read.

The report sets forth that the claim is demanded on the ground, that an alteration had been made in a grant made by a former Spanish Governor. The petitioner represents that the application for an alteration in the grant was not made either by him or his legal representatives, nor by his authority.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THOMAS PEMBER.

The Senate next took up the bill for the relief of Thomas Pember; which was read a second time.

The bill provides that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and directed to audit and adjust the account of Thomas Pember, and to pay to him the difference between the compensation of a captain's clerk and a purser on board the United States steamer Vixen, from the 23d October, 1848, to the 20th day of June, 1850, and the difference between the compensation of a captain's clerk and a purser, on board the ship Electra, from the first day of July, 1847, to the 28th day of February, 1848, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DAWSON. I must object to that.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

DAVID P. WEEKS.

The Senate then proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, a bill for the relief of David P. Weeks. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior be required to pay to David P. Weeks the amount of his pension for and during the time said pension was discontinued, and while he was employed in the Ordnance Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to ask one question of the chairman of the committee. It is stated that this person is to be paid while he was employed in the Ordnance Department. I want to know why his pension was suspended while he was in the Ordnance Department?

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. There is a report, I believe. I ask that it may be read.

From the reading of the report, it appears that the petitioner lost his left arm in the war with the Florida Indians, and was in consequence placed on the pension list, at $8 per month. On the 4th of September, 1846, he was employed in the Ordnance Department, and continued thus employed until the 4th of March, 1850, during which time his pension was stopped by the Commissioner of Pensions, who deemed himself authorized to do so by the act of the 30th of April, 1844; which provides that "no person in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, shall be allowed to draw both a pension as an invalid and the pay of his rank or station in the service, unless the alleged disability for which the pension was granted be such as to have occasioned his employment in a lower grade, or in some civil branch of the service."

In a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions to the chairman of the committee, dated December 30, 1851, it was stated that when employed in the Ordnance Department, "Weeks was not an enlisted soldier," "but held his appointment" by "authority vested in the Secretary of War;" and in reply to further inquiries made by the chairman of the committee, the Commissioner of Pensions, in a letter dated February 6, 1852, refers to the act of the 5th of April, 1832, for the organization of the Ordnance Department, as furnishing some portion of the authority by which the pension of the petitioner was suspended.

But neither of the acts above referred to, in the opinion of the committee, conveys the authority to suspend the pension of any person employed in the Ordnance Department, unless the pensioner belongs to the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps. The petitioner was neither an officer, non-commissioned officer, nor private in the Army when employed, nor did he enlist during his employment. The Commissioner of Pensions states that the petitioner held the appointment of Ordnance Sergeant during his employment, by authority vested in the Secretary of War.

The act of April 5, 1832, authorizes the Secretary of War "to select from the sergeants of the line of the Army," &c., "as many ordnance sergeants as the service may require;" but that act conveys no authority to the Secretary to appoint any citizen, not belonging to "the line of the Army," to the station or office of ordnance sergeant; and if the petitioner was required, during the time he was employed in the Ordnance Department, to perform the duties of sergeant, that fact furnishes no legitimate reason for suspending his pension.

The committee believe that the petitioner was engaged under the authority given to employ citizens to labor in the Ordnance Department who do not belong to the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and therefore the construction given to the acts alluded to, by which his pension was discontinued, is erroneous. By no existing law can a citizen, not enlisted and employed in the Ordnance Department, claim a pension for a hurt received while thus employed. Neither by any existing law can a person, not belonging to the Army, &c., entitled to and receiving a pension, be deprived thereof on obtaining employment in said department. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

GUION AND McLAUGHLIN.

A bill for the relief of Guion and McLaughlin was then read a second time.

The bill directs the Postmaster General to pay to E. P. Guion and Benjamin McLaughlin the sum of $1,640, from the appropriation for mail transportation, being the amount due them, under the equitable terms of their contract with the Postmaster General, for two months' extra pay, upon the discontinuance of the transportation of the Southern mail, on route 2,802, from Raleigh to Fayetteville; on route 2,811, from Fayetteville to Cheraw; and on route 3,111, from Cheraw to Columbia, South Carolina, on the 6th of February, 1845; the Postmaster General having only paid the allowance for two months' extra service upon the amount dispensed with, when it should have been upon the whole amount of the contract.

Mr. BAYARD. I would rather prefer to have that bill go over for the present. It involves a question of some importance, in respect to which I cannot at present agree with the committee. I may change my opinion. My objection is to the propriety of admitting evidence to change the construction of a contract with the Postmaster General; or in other words, of allowing a clerk in the Post Office Department to show by deposition that the intent of a contract is different from that which would be drawn from the written language. I doubt the propriety of passing it.

It was passed over.

ELIZABETH V. LOMAX.

The next bill upon the Calendar was the bill for the relief of Elizabeth V. Lomax, reported from the Committee on Pensions, which was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Elizabeth V. Lomax, widow of Mann Page Lomax, deceased, late a Major of the Ordnance Corps in the United States Army, on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month from the 27th of March, 1842, for and during her natural life.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out "1842," and insert "1852."

Mr. BORLAND. Will the Senator permit the report made in that case to be read. This bill has been twice reported. Last year I reported it from the Committee on Pensions. I hope that report will be read. No report was made this year.

Mr. HALE. If the Senate will allow me two minutes, by unanimous consent, I desire to make a single statement. I do not desire to be placed in the attitude of pressing captious objections to these bills, and therefore I desire to make a remark to the Senate. About four and a half years ago, the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] stated to the Senate that the Committee on Pensions had selected the strongest case they could find asking for arrearages of pension, and they reported a bill giving arrearages. The Senator stated at the time that the committee would be thereafter governed by the action of the Senate upon that case, which was the strongest—asking for arrearages of pension. The Senate, by a very decided vote, as will be seen in Houston's report, voted against paying the arrearages of pension in the strongest case which could be presented.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. At that time.

Mr. HALE. For that reason I have thought it my duty to interpose these objections, and must do so until a decided vote be taken upon the question.

Mr. CASS. Is that bill up for consideration?

The PRESIDENT. It is. A proposition is made to insert "52" in place of "42."

Mr. CASS. I hope and trust—

The PRESIDENT. If the question be debated, the bill will have to go over.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let it go over.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection, and let action be taken upon the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I cannot. I want to know why we make a different rule here from that which prevails in the Pension Department.

Mr. BORLAND. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that this is a case precisely like one which he introduced into the Senate, which was reported upon by the Committee on Pensions, and passed in favor of a lady in Kentucky.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

THEODORE E. ELLIOTT.

The bill for the relief of Theodore E. Elliott, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It enacts that the sum of $300 be appropriated to pay to Theodore E. Elliott, in satisfaction of his claim for a keel-boat furnished to P. M. Butler, late agent for the Cherokees, for transporting supplies under the treaty to the Indian Territory, to be paid as other moneys disbursed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

At the request of Mr. BAYARD the report was read, from which it appears that, in 1842, Elliott was the owner of the steamer Effort, then running on the Arkansas river, having in tow a keel-boat for P. M. Butler, Cherokee agent; that Butler proposed to buy the boat for the use of the agency, at the price of $300, for the purpose of transporting iron, agricultural implements, and other supplies for the Cherokees, as the river was too low to enable the steamer to ascend above Webster's Falls. The proposition was accepted to by Captain Elliott. The contract is fully proven by credible witnesses, one of whom was the pilot on board the steamer. It further appears, by a communication from the Indian Office, and from the Second Auditor, that nothing was ever paid for the boat, nor is there any charge for the same in the accounts of Mr. Butler, as agent.

Mr. BAYARD. I would ask of the Senator who reported this bill, whether there is any evidence of the contract being recognized by the Department in any mode? I am not altogether satisfied in relation to it myself, and therefore should prefer to pass over the bill that I may look into it.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I reported the bill from the committee, and would merely say that the evidence as to the contract was plenary, full, to the satisfaction of the committee. They called upon the Department to know whether the contract had ever been complied with and the debt discharged. Upon an inspection of Governor Butler's accounts, as Cherokee agent, it was found that he had given no credit for it, and that the debt had never been discharged. The committee, therefore, reported the bill.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

BARBARA REILY.

The bill for the relief of Barbara Reily, reported from the Committee on Pensions, was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It enacts that the Secretary of the Interior be required to pay to Barbara Reily, widow of Captain Reily, an officer in the Army of the Revolution, the amount of pension due her husband from the time he was last paid, to March 4, 1820.

Mr. FELCH objected to the consideration of the bill, and it was passed over.

ROBERT MILLIGAN.

The next was House bill for the relief of Robert Milligan, reported from the Committee on Pensions, which the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to take into consideration.

It enacts that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Robert Milligan upon the invalid pension roll, at the rate of $4 per month, in addition to the sum of $4 to which he was entitled under the law of Congress, approved June 25, 1834, to commence on the 1st of January, 1852.

At the request of Mr. DAWSON, the report was read, from which it appears that the petitioner states, in his petition, that on the 27th of January, 1812, he enlisted in the Army of the United States, and served in the third regiment of infantry, and was honorably discharged at Washington, Pennsylvania, by General Macomb, on — day of —, 1817, having served out his full time. It further appears that, while in the service, he was employed as an artificer in the construction of Fort Wayne, and while there received an injury in his left knee from a broad-axe with which he was working. He also had an arm crushed and dislocated from the elbow joint, besides contracting asthma, and becoming deaf in one ear, caused by exposure while on duty as a soldier. Of these facts, however, he could procure no certificate of a surgeon, as there was no such officer stationed at the fort. At the expiration of his term of service, upon a petition and a representation of these facts to Congress, a law was passed and approved in June, 1844, to allow him $4 a month pension, commencing January, 1833. The petitioner now prays for arrearages of pension from the time of his discharge, at the rate of $4 a month, up to the first of January, 1833, when his name was first put on the pension roll. In support of the petition, he produces the certificate of two surgeons, whose respectability is certified by a justice of the peace. They certify that in consequence of the injuries set forth, the petitioner is laboring under total disability.

The committee state that they are averse to granting back pensions, as in almost every instance where they are applied for, it is at the solicitation of speculators, whose greediness prompts the pensioner to suffer himself to be made the means of a fraud upon the Treasury; but from the facts disclosed in this case, and in view of the age of the petitioner, and his inability to perform any labor by which he can procure for himself a comfortable subsistence, and in view of the fact that Congress has heretofore recognized his case as a meritorious one, they are of opinion that the additional sum of $4 a month should be allowed, to commence from the first of January, 1852.

Mr. DAWSON. I object to the consideration of that bill now. I want to see the general principle settled.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

MARK BEAN AND RICHARD H. BEAN.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of Mark Bean and Richard H. Bean, reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

It enacts that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay to Mark and Richard H. Bean, of Arkansas, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, as compensation and indemnity, in full, for losses sustained by them in their removal under the third article of the treaty with the Cherokee Indians, of May 16, 1823, by which they were compelled to abandon not only lands they had settled, cultivated, and improved, but an extensive manufactory of salt, warehouses, dwelling-houses, and other large improvements, of which, and the prospective advantages therefrom, they were thus deprived by the act of the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. UNDERWOOD subsequently rose and said: I was called out a little while ago, and while I was absent a bill was called up for the relief of Mark Bean and Richard H. Bean. I was opposed to the passage of that bill, and I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to some facts in connection with it.

Mr. ATCHISON. To accommodate the Senator from Kentucky, I move to reconsider the vote ordering that bill to be engrossed.

Mr. BORLAND. I presume that, upon that motion, the merits of the bill will come up. I am prepared to explain the bill.

Mr. BADGER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. That will get rid of it for the present.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DAVID CORDEROY.

The joint resolution for the relief of the heirs of David Corderoy, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the proper officers of the Treasury shall ascertain and pay to the legal representatives of David Corderoy, deceased, the value of a certain reservation of six hundred and forty acres, as unimproved land at the date of the treaty of 1835, which reservation was allowed under the eighth article of the treaty of 1817, and the thirteenth article of the treaty of 1835, made with the Cherokee Indians; and that the amount so ascertained, without interest, be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

At the request of Mr. FELCH, the report was read, from which it appears, that by the treaty of 1817, David Corderoy, as the head of an Indian family, was entitled to a "life estate" in a reservation of six hundred and forty acres, with reversion to his widow and children. That treaty ceded to the United States a portion of the country of the Cherokees, east of the Mississippi, for a like quantity west of that river in the then Territory of Arkansas. It allowed such reservation to each head of an Indian family, who resided upon territory then or thereafter to be ceded to the United States, who might wish to become a citizen of the United States; and provided that the register of the names of such reserves should be filed in the office of the Cherokee agent. By the treaty of 1819, a further tract of country was ceded, and the same provision as to reservations extended to those heads of families who resided within the ceded territory, those enrolled for emigration to Arkansas excepted. Corderoy registered his name for reservation under the treaty of 1817, but was not embraced within the territory ceded in 1819. By the thirteenth article of the treaty of 1835, which ceded the remaining territory of the Cherokees, reservations were to be allowed to the heads of families who were entitled under the treaty of 1817, who had complied with its stipulations, notwithstanding the lands were not included within the lands ceded by the treaty of 1819. The right of Corderoy was thus revived and provided for. A supplemental article of the last-named treaty, adopted in 1836, extinguished all reservations and substituted a compensation in lieu thereof. The proof is clear that Corderoy was a Cherokee, with a white woman as a wife; that he resided upon his reservation until forcibly dispossessed by the State of Georgia, in 1833 or 1834, and soon after the treaty died, leaving a wife and children. A commission was authorized by the treaty to adjudicate all claims under the treaty, and their decision was to be final. Several commissions successively rejected the claim of Corderoy.

The ground upon which his claim was rejected was that stated by the first board—that the register showed that he was not the head of an Indian family, within the meaning of the treaty, because the figure "one" stood, in the column which indicated the No. of the family, opposite the name of Corderoy, and they held that "one" could not constitute a family. The committee do not concur in this conclusion, upon these premises. The legal effect of a registration under this treaty has become a subject of judicial decision; and received a consideration different from that of the commissioners; and a registration is deemed an expression of a desire to become a citizen of the United States, and entitles the party to a reservation. The committee, therefore, are of opinion that Corderoy is entitled to compensation for his reservation as unimproved land; and they report the joint resolution directing the proper officers to pay the value of said reservation, at the date of the treaty, as unimproved land.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

NOAH MILLER.

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Noah Miller, of Lincolnville, in the State of Maine, and for the relief of other persons, was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It enacts that there shall be paid out of the Treasury, from any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to the legal representatives of Noah Miller, and such other persons, or their legal representatives, who aided either as boats' crew or pilot, in making prize of the British schooner Mary, and taking her into port in the year 1814, in Penobscot Bay, in such proportions to each as the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine—which vessel and cargo, after having been taken into port, was libeled, condemned, and sold, and one half of the proceeds, amounting to more than $32,000, paid into the Treasury of the United States, said vessel and cargo having been surrendered to the collector of the customs for that district.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall have to object to the consideration of that bill to-day.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator allow me to say that it has passed the Senate three times and the House twice? I hope he will not object to it.

Mr. BAYARD. I have read over the report, which is very long. It seems to me that it involves the question as to the extent to which we should go in authorizing, or rather in sanctioning and encouraging, a system of private warfare during a public war, which, I think, is a very doubtful policy as it regards a nation like the United States. Having some doubts about the propriety of the bill, I should prefer to read the report a little more carefully. I should be unwilling to vote for the bill as at present advised.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

MARTHA L. DOWNES.

The bill for the relief Martha L. Downes was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the widows, if any such there be, and in case there is no widow, the child or children, and if there be no child, then the parent or parents, or if no parents, then the brothers and sisters of the officers, seamen, and marines who were in the service of the United States and lost in the United States schooners Grampus and Seagull, shall receive out of the Treasury a sum equal to six months' pay of their relatives in addition to the pay due to said relatives when the vessels were lost.

At the request of Mr. DAWSON, the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs was read; from which it appears that the petition of Martha L. Downes, widow of Lieutenant Downes, commander of the United States schooner Grampus at the time it was lost, praying that the same allowance may be made to the widows and officers of the men of said vessel as has been made in similar cases, was referred to them. They find that in several cases laws have been passed granting to the widows and orphans of the officers, seamen, and marines of various vessels which were lost the extra allowance. The act of June 15, 1834, directed that the widows and orphans of those on board the schooner Grampus should receive the compensation which was due them at the time of their loss, but made no provision for the extra pay as in other cases. The act of August 14, 1848, grants to the widows, children, parents, or minor brothers and sisters of the officers, seamen, and marines, lost in the brig Somers, twelve months' pay in addition to what was due. No reason is known to exist for the discrimination against the widows and children of the officers, seamen, and marines lost in the Grampus and Seagull; and without such reason the discrimination must be deemed unjust; and the committee, therefore, report a bill to supply the omission in the act of June, 1844, and place those persons on a footing of equality with others for whom provision has been made.

Mr. DAWSON. Let the bill go over. I wish to give it some examination.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

ROBERT T. NORRIS.

The bill for the relief of Robert T. Norris was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that there shall be paid to Robert T. Norris, in consideration of injuries received by him while acting as pilot under the direction of the collector of customs at New York, the sum of —, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DAWSON. Let it lie over.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

LEWIS H. BATES AND WILLIAM LACON.

The bill for the relief of Lewis H. Bates and William Lacon was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, to audit and allow the claim of Lewis H. Bates and William Lacon, or either of them, for losses and damages sustained by them in consequence of the proceedings of custom-house officers at New York, in exacting from them for certain importations of iron into that port, made between June 15th, 1829, and January 1st, 1832, higher duties than were required by law; and in seizing and libeling some of said goods, upon the refusal of Bates & Lacon to enter the same, as subject to the said higher duty; and for certain costs of court paid by them, and not reimbursed. There is a proviso in the bill, that no greater sum shall be allowed than will reimburse the parties for the costs and expenses actually paid by them, and not repaid to them, in the various suits touching said importations; and certain sums paid by them for the storage of said goods, while kept out of their possession; and such sum also as will pay them for the damage they sustained by the detention of the money exacted from them by the collector, and allow for said detention a damage not exceeding the rate of six per centum per annum, from the time the moneys were paid, to the time they were refunded.

Mr. HUNTER. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator propose to discuss it?

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot tell until I have examined it.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution provides, that when debate arises, or when a Senator says he intends to discuss a bill, it shall be passed over.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the objection is sufficient.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair must follow the resolution of the Senate. Does the Senator from Virginia propose to discuss the bill?

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot tell until I examine it. I want time to examine it.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that bill very well; and, in my judgment, it requires some modification. I think it ought to be passed over.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

RICHARD MACKALL.

The bill for the relief of Richard Mackall was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to audit the claim of Richard Mackall, for the destruction of his tobacco house, wheat, and tobacco, by the British, in June, 1814; and to ascertain the losses sustained by him by reason of the destruction of that property. It also provides, that if the amount of damage, as ascertained, shall not exceed $5,000, it shall be paid to the claimant.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall certainly discuss that bill. I have a very decided opinion that it ought not to pass. The Committee on Claims were divided in opinion in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

ROBERT SEWALL.

The bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of the late Robert Sewall, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Third Auditor of the Treasury to audit the claim of the heirs and representatives of the late Robert Sewall, and to determine the amount that may be due to them; and that when he shall report that amount to the Secretary of the Treasury, that officer be authorized and required to cause the same to be paid.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know that I shall oppose that claim; for I do not know the facts on which it was founded, though it was once in my hands. I shall, however, certainly move to amend the bill so as to limit the amount which is to be paid, and that proposition will probably give rise to debate. I should be unwilling to pass any bill of this kind, in reference to a transaction which occurred forty years ago, without fixing some limit to the sum to be paid. The Senator who reported the bill is not in his seat. I shall move that amendment, which will probably lead to discussion, and therefore I suppose it would be as well to lay it over.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

URSULA E. COBB.

The bill for the relief of Ursula E. Cobb, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ursula E. Cobb, widow of the late Charles Cobb, a gunner in the naval service of the United States, upon the list of those pensioners who were allowed pensions by the act approved March 3, 1837, entitled "An act for the more equitable administration of the naval pension fund," and to allow her, as the widow of said Cobb, a pension agreeably to the provisions of that act.

Mr. DAWSON called for the reading of the report of the Committee on Pensions, and it was read.

From the report, it appears that the husband of the pensioner died in the naval service May 9, 1848, from illness produced by exposure and fatigue on board the ship "Plymouth," during severe, cold, and stormy weather, while on the passage from Brooklyn to Norfolk. He served the country during the war of 1812, with bravery and efficiency, having assisted in taking many prizes from the enemy, and receiving two wounds while boarding hostile vessels. The petitioner applied to the Pension Office for a pension, but was unsuccessful, for the reason that the Commissioner of Pensions was not furnished with the proof required by the regulations of the office. There is, however, a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions accompanying the report, which states that, although there was not sufficient technical evidence to justify the allowance of the pension, yet he had no doubt that the case was a meritorious one, and deserving the favorable consideration of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

WILLIAM BEDIENT.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the bill for the relief of William Bedient, late a sergeant of the 4th regiment of artillery, on which the Committee on Pensions had made an adverse report. The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William Bedient, at present of Newark, in the State of New Jersey, and late a sergeant of the 4th regiment of artillery, on the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of $8 per month.

Mr. ATCHISON. I suppose the question is upon concurring with the report of the committee adverse to the bill.

The PRESIDENT. This is a bill. It can be indefinitely postponed, or the Senate can refuse to order it to be engrossed.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move to postpone indefinitely the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. If the bill be postponed indefinitely, will it not be liable to be again referred to the committee at the next session?

The PRESIDENT. This vote rejects the bill. The motion to postpone indefinitely was agreed to.

JAMES GLYNN.

The bill for the relief of James Glynn was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that James Glynn, a commander in the United States Navy, shall be entitled to a credit in the settlement of his accounts at the Treasury as acting purser of the sloop-of-war "Preble," while cruising on the western coast of Mexico, in the year 1850, of the sum of $1,338 70, the said allowance to be in full for losses of public money and other property stolen or embezzled from the vessel during his temporary absence therefrom on official duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

HENRY KING.

The bill for the relief of the representative of Henry King was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representative of Henry King, the sum of $8,140, it being for the service of said Henry King, as sergeant of the 3d Maryland regiment, and in the Commissary's Department during the revolutionary war.

Mr. DAWSON. I should like to hear the report of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims in that case.

The report was read accordingly; from which it appears that the claim was presented in the form of an account showing that Henry King served as a sergeant in the third Maryland regiment, from May 30, to October 20, 1778, at $10 per month; as Commissary's clerk from October 21, to December 31, 1778, at $35 per month; as same from January 1, 1779, to April 19, 1780, at $50 per month; as Assistant Commissary of Issues, from May 10, 1780, to September 10, 1781, at $75 a month, and for a retained ration during a small part of the above period, which item is £8 15s. The total is £862 10s. The United States are credited with various payments during that time, amounting to £180 18s. 6½d., leaving a balance to King of £681 10s. 3½d. The petitioner, it seems, had a claim against the United States, but not having made a timely presentation of it, the act of Congress of July 23, 1787, barred its admission. The claim was first presented in 1794. At that time the committee lamented that there was any obstacle to prevent the immediate adjustment of a claim so just and equitable; but they hesitated to record it, as it would lead to the necessity of making provision for all demands similarly situated. Henry King, living in Kentucky, at a distance from the seat of Government, did not again present his claim until 1817. His original papers were destroyed when the capital was taken in 1814. The statement of Mr. Hagner, of January 8, 1842, states that all the papers connected with the settlement of such accounts as King's were no doubt destroyed in burning the Treasury buildings. There is, accompanying the report, a certificate from the register of the land office in Maryland, dated January 25, 1841, stating that the office of auditor-general of that State had been abolished a few years before, and that the records and papers of the Revolution were under his charge. He has carefully examined them, and found certificates of the enlistment of Henry King, of the date of 25th May, 1778, as sergeant in the third Maryland regiment, and a certificate that he was transferred to the Commissary's Department, in October, 1778. There were several depositions of his fellow soldiers filed with the petition of Henry King originally. The House of Representatives, in April, 1818, when acting upon the subject, reversed an unfavorable report of one of its committees on this claim, and passed a bill directing its payment; but from the lateness of the session, it was left among the unfinished business. King died in Kentucky in 1820, and no execution of his will was had until 1835, when the claim was again presented. In consideration of these facts, the committee think it proper that the claim should be allowed. As to the question of interest, the committee think that the claim should bear interest from the time of its presentation in 1794.

Mr. BAYARD. Although on the face of this bill it would seem that it proposes nothing but an appropriation of the sum of $8,140 for the payment of the services of Henry King during the war of the Revolution, yet I judge from the report that the bill includes also interest from the year 1794. I suppose the interest is on the sum of £681 10s. 3½d. Maryland currency. That seems to be the sum which is due. It will be necessary to reduce it into dollars and cents. When that is done, I wish to move to insert it in place of the $8,140 allowed by the bill. I suppose the calculation will have to be made in Maryland currency at the rate of 7s. 6d. to the dollar.

Mr. ATCHISON. Let the bill go over; I think it needs looking into.

The PRESIDENT. It will be passed over, as Senators manifest a disposition to discuss it.

JOHN W. ROBINSON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of John W. Robinson. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John W. Robinson, of the State of Maryland, a soldier in the late war with Great Britain, on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of $8 per month—to commence from June 1st, 1850, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out "1850," and insert "1852."

Mr. BADGER. Let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina propose to discuss it?

Mr. BADGER. My disposition is to find out why "1850" should be stricken out, and "1852" inserted. I cannot find that out without discussion.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN McVEY.

The bill for the relief of John McVey was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John McVey, of the State of Arkansas, a soldier in the late war with Great Britain, upon the pension roll, at the rate of $8 per month—to commence on the first day of April, 1850, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out "1850," and insert "1852."

Mr. BORLAND. There is no report in this case; but I can state the merits of it in a very few words. I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky as far as I am concerned, and I suppose I am the principal one concerned.

Mr. BADGER. Is it right to accept it? I do not think the Senator from Arkansas should be forced to accept it. I wish to know why this amendment should be made, and therefore I propose that the bill should lie over, as I wish to discuss it.

It lies over accordingly.

THOMPSON HUTCHINSON.

The bill for the relief of Thompson Hutchinson was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Thompson Hutchinson, son of Thomas Hutchinson, who was late a revolutionary pensioner, and whose name was erroneously stricken off the pension roll in 1818, the amount of pension which would have been due to him at his death, in February, 1835, if he had not been erroneously deprived of it. The amount so to be paid to be computed from July 24, 1818, the date of his pension certificate, to February 1, 1835, at the rate of $8 per month.

Mr. FELCH. Is there a report in this case?

The PRESIDENT. There is.

Mr. FELCH. I would like to hear it read.

The report of the Committee on Pensions on the claim was accordingly read.

From the report of the committee it appears that the name of Thomas Hutchinson was placed on the pension roll on the 24th of July, 1818, in consideration of his services as a private in the regiment of Colonel George Gibson. In pursuance of a decision of the then Secretary of War, that Gibson's was not a Continental regiment, and therefore not embraced in the act of March 18, 1818, his name was stricken from the pension roll. That the decision of the Secretary of War was erroneous, is distinctly established by the fact that the act of May 15, 1828, induced a full examination of the claim of Gibson's regiment to the benefit of that act, which, in the exact language of the act of March 18, 1818, allowed pensions to such officers and soldiers as had served a specific time upon the Continental establishment. There was a decision under that act to allow its benefits to Gibson's regiment, which, though not a continental regiment by its original organization, was by an act of the Virginia Assembly of October, 1787, transferred to service on the Continental establishment, in lieu of and as a substitute for the 9th Virginia Continental regiment, which had then recently been annihilated at the battle of Germantown, and in that service it continued more than a year, under the immediate command of the Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army. Such being the character and the actual service of Gibson's regiment on the Continental establishment, the Secretary of War has ever since decided that those who served in Gibson's regiment were entitled to pensions under the act of 18th March, 1818.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ELIZABETH JONES AND OTHERS.

The bill for the relief of Elizabeth Jones and the other children, if any, of John Carr, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Elizabeth Jones and the other children, if any, of John Carr, late a revolutionary pensioner of the United States, the amount of pension ascertained to have been due to him at the time of his death; the amount so paid to be computed at the rate of $8 a month, from the 18th day of May, 1818, to June 7, 1831.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not wish to be captious; but it is manifest that the Senate is determined to decide the question of the retrospective operation of these pension laws.

Mr. BORLAND. I can relieve the Senate of all difficulty on that point. This bill is not to allow arrearages of pension, but it is simply to pay a pension already ascertained to be due under a preceding law.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. This case is precisely similar to that of Thompson Hutchinson, in favor of which we have just decided.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I have nothing to say.

The bill was reported to the Senate, without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

PAYMENT OF WITNESSES.

The bill for the relief of John Jackson, Joseph Pineau, and Louis A. S. Smith, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John Jackson, Joseph Pineau, and Louis A. S. Smith, the mileage allowed by law to witnesses attending the courts of the United States, for their attendance from Port-au-Prince, in the Island of St. Domingo, to the city of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. BAYARD. I object to the principle of this bill. It proposes to extend the allowance of mileage to witnesses who were attending from a distance, beyond where the process of the United States courts would reach, at the same rate of compensation that is given to witnesses who attend from a short distance. I do not like to have the principle extended so far; and, therefore, I would prefer that the bill should be passed over. I do not object to making some allowance; but I object to giving the same rate of allowance to witnesses who come a great distance, as to those who come but a short distance.

The bill was passed over.

HEIRS OF JOHN JACKSON.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill of the House of Representatives for the relief of the heirs of John Jackson. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs and legal representatives of John Jackson deceased, the pilot on board the "Bon Homme Richard," during her brilliant engagement with the British frigate "Serapis," in which action Jackson lost an arm, such a sum as would be equal to a pension at the rate of $6 a month, from November 15th, 1779, to the day of his death, agreeably to the pledge given by the Captain of the "Bon Homme Richard," and the report of the committee of the Continental Congress made September 28th, 1785.

Mr. FELCH. I hope that the bill will be passed over. I wish to discuss it.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

THOMAS NOEL.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of the late Major Thomas Noel, of the United States Army, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It enacts that in the settlement of the accounts of the late Major Thomas Noel, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall pass to his credit all payments and disbursements which were honestly and faithfully made by him while acting as a disbursing officer, any irregularity or informality in the vouchers by him filed to the contrary notwithstanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

DON B. JUAN DOMERCQ.

The bill for the relief of Don B. Juan Domercq, a Spanish subject, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to examine and investigate the claim of Don B. Juan Domercq, a Spanish subject, for a quantity of tobacco belonging to him, which was taken and used for the purposes of defense, by order of Colonel Childs, at the siege of Puebla, in Mexico, in the year 1847, and to allow and pay him for so much of said tobacco, not exceeding in quantity 721 bales, at a price not exceeding $24 a bale, as shall be proved, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, to have been destroyed or lost in consequence of said tobacco having been taken and used as aforesaid. It also provides that the Secretary of War shall allow to the said Domercq for the injury done to 823 bales of tobacco returned to him after being used in barricading the streets of Puebla, at the rate of one dollar per bale, provided that the said damage shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary. It also directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Domercq such sum as shall be allowed him upon such investigation.

Mr. GEYER called for the reading of the report of the Committee on Claims; and it was accordingly read.

It appears from the reports that General Worth, commanding the advance of the army under General Scott, entered Puebla, in Mexico, in May, 1848, and finding a quantity of tobacco stored in that city belonging to the Mexican Government, caused it to be seized and sold for the benefit of the United States. The whole quantity, 2,081 bales, was accordingly sold at public auction by Major Allen, of the Quartermaster's Department, to Mr. L. S. Hargous, at $10 a bale, amounting to $20,810. On the 16th of June following, Mr. Hargous sold the 2,081 bales of tobacco to Don B. Juan Domercq, the claimant, at $20 a bale, amounting to $41,620. One thousand three hundred and twenty-five bales of this tobacco were, at the time of the sales, deposited in the quartel, or public barracks of San José, occupied by the American troops, and the remainder in other places in the city. It appears, also, that 219 bales of the tobacco, deposited in other places than the quartel, were, some time in August following, deposited by the claimant, in house No. 6, Second street, of San José, near the quarters of Colonel Childs. The whole quantity of tobacco deposited in each of these places remained there till seized by order of Colonel Childs at the time of the siege of Puebla by the guerrillas in September following. At that time, Colonel Childs being informed that the tobacco deposited at No. 6, Second street, San José, was Mexican property, ordered it, as well as that deposited in the quartel, which he supposed belonged to the United States, to be taken and used in constructing parapets on houses, and in protecting the streets, and in fortifying the quartel. There is a statement from Colonel Childs corroborating these facts. There is also a statement of Mr. William Spencer, the agent and interpreter of Captain Webster, testifying as to the use that was made of the tobacco. Soon after the siege, Colonel Childs directed Quartermaster Webster to advertise and sell the tobacco remaining, and 500 bales were accordingly sold at $22 a bale; which were again sold by the purchaser for $24 a bale. Colonel Childs, being informed by Doctor Schadler and the Spanish vice consul of Mr. Domercq's claim to the tobacco, he ordered the sale to be stopped, and all that remained on hand to be delivered to the claimant. Under this order, 323 bales were delivered. Soon afterwards, the 500 bales which had been sold, were recovered and delivered—making in all 823 bales of the 1,544 originally deposited in the quartel, and house No. 6—leaving a deficiency of 721 bales. Under these circumstances, the committee report in favor of allowing, for these bales, at the rate of $24 per bale—that being the highest wholesale price at which any of the sales were made.

Mr. HALE. As there are a great many facts in this case, which it is not in order to debate, I will move, in order to get time to understand them, that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

CHARLES G. HUNTER.

Mr. CLEMENS. I must throw myself upon the indulgence of the Senate, to ask that the bill for the relief of Charles G. Hunter, may now be considered. I hope there will be no objection to it. I move to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up that bill.

Mr. BADGER. That is a very strong, pressing, and urgent case.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to allow to Charles G. Hunter credit for the sum of $7,949 88, being the amount of losses sustained by him while commanding and acting as purser of the steamer "Scourge," and the schooner "Taney."

Mr. CLEMENS. That bill has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Naval Affairs. They have made no written report; and, therefore, I think it necessary to state the grounds upon which the claim for relief is urged. This is not a payment of money. The gentleman asks no payment of money. He simply wishes to have his accounts settled. He was appointed to the command of two different war vessels, and connected with that was the inconsistent duty of acting as purser. He failed to take such vouchers as the Department require, in order to enable them to settle his accounts. But we all know that a steamer must have coal; and that is the chief item, I believe, in the account. He bought coal for the steamers. His vouchers were informal and such as would not enable the Department to settle with him. He lost his pay during the whole of that time, and for a long time previous, because it has all been absorbed by the order of the Department requiring him to perform the inconsistent duties of commander and purser of a vessel at the same time.

I suppose every member of the Senate understands who this gentleman is. He is Charles G. Hunter, who has acquired the name of "Alvarado Hunter," from the fact of having taken, with one vessel, the town of Alvarado, which the whole Army and Navy had been deployed to capture. The bill has been reported unanimously by the Naval Committee, after a full examination of the facts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion, the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 24, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. MARTIN asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a joint resolution, passed by the Legislature of New York, relative to an appropriation by the General Government for a canal around the Falls of St. Ste. Marie; which was read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

APPOINTMENT OF MIDSHIPMEN.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit a resolution; which was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency of modifying the existing laws in relation to the appointment of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy, so that when a vacancy occurs, the member of Congress representing the district entitled to the appointment shall be authorized to make the nomination, and that they report to this House.

Mr. STANLY. I think there will be no objection, if the word "instructed" be inserted instead of "requested."

Mr. ROBBINS. I consent to the modification. The resolution, as modified, was then adopted.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given, "to surrender to the State of Ohio the unfinished portion of the Cumberland road, in said State;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the bill from the table for the relief of Lieutenant Speedwell, that it may be considered. He is desirous of going with the fleet about leaving the country, but his accounts are now unsettled. We know how much complaint has been made with regard to the leaving of accounts unsettled. He only asks that they may be settled. The bill is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not wish to object, but there are a great many bills upon the Speaker's table which have been there for nearly two months waiting a reference. I suggest that the House proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to taking any bill from the Speaker's table, unless it be regularly reached.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask leave to present a memorial, containing about seven yards of good names, praying for the passage of the homestead bill.

Unanimous consent was accorded, and the memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCCORKLE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to introduce a resolution.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of directing the Clerk of the House to purchase for the use of members—copies of the memoir and maps of the waters of the Bay of San Francisco, and of the rivers Sacramento and San Joaquin, by Commander C. Ringgold, of the United States Navy.

Mr. FICKLIN objected.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given, for the purpose of reference.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. HOWARD. I insist upon proceeding to the regular order of business.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BRENTON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion for a moment, as a matter of courtesy. In consequence of my ill health I will be compelled to leave the city, and before leaving I am desirous of presenting a resolution of inquiry.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Whereas, the Postmaster General, in his last annual report, has shown, that in consequence of the present reduced rates of postage there is a large deficit in the receipts of that Department, which must be met by further aid from the Treasury; and that "the practical extension of the franking privilege to the Senators and Representatives elected to the present Congress, aided slightly in producing this reduction;"

And whereas it is further stated, that "if all the free matter now carried in the mails was charged with postage, even at the present rates, from one to two millions of dollars would be added annually to our receipts from postage;" And whereas it is stated further, that "the increased abuses of the franking privilege render desirable some further legislation thereon;" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be, and they are hereby instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the correction of said abuses, and of repealing all laws now in force granting the franking privilege to Senators and Representatives in Congress.

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!" all over the House.]

Mr. FREEMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the petition of certain citizens of Mississippi, praying for the establishment of a certain mail route in that State, in order that it may be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FOWLER. I object.

The question was then put upon the motion to suspend the rules and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and carried in the affirmative. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HISSARD in the Chair.)

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the business before the committee, the consideration of House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and for other purposes, on which the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EWING,] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. EWING addressed the committee. After expressing himself in favor of the bill, he entered at some length upon the subject of American progression, in which he repudiated the policy of forcing the United States, at this time, to intervene in the affairs of Europe. He, however, was in favor of that conservative progression, which, while it did not trench upon the rights of other nations, would tend to develop the physical and intellectual resources of this nation, and give it a commanding influence in the affairs of the world. He viewed, as in consonance with such a progression, the policy of opening up the avenues of commerce with Japan; which would doubtless enlighten, civilize, and christianize that distant people.

Mr. SIBLEY next addressed the committee. He expressed himself in favor of making grants to actual settlers upon the public domain; but was opposed to the policy of making large grants of lands to the States for the benefit of the insane, and for other purposes, to be located by them, and to be held by them, in the several Territories. He believed that grants of that character would retard the settlement, and prevent the growth of those Territories.

[These speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. FICKLIN said: I am gratified, Mr. Chairman, that I have obtained the floor for the purpose of giving my views upon the homestead bill; and as I do not intend to indulge in any remarks upon politics, or any irrelevant matter, I may be permitted, before entering into the discussion of this bill, to say a word in reference to a kindred measure, which was before the House a few days ago, and which was left in somewhat an equivocal position by the House going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I refer to the bill granting preemption rights to persons who have made improvements along the line of the Chicago and Mobile Railroad, and propose, in a very few words, and in a very brief manner, to submit my views upon the provisions of that bill, and then to pass on to the discussion of the homestead bill.

Mr. Chairman, the last Congress (as is well known to the members of this House) passed an act granting alternate sections of land for the construction of the Chicago and Mobile Railroad and branches, which act was approved by President Fillmore on the 20th day of September, 1850. By virtue of the provisions of this act, the States through which this road was located owning public lands are entitled to the alternate sections near the line. Prior to the passage of the act granting these lands to the States to aid in the construction of the Chicago and Mobile Railroad, and without any reference whatever to the action of the General Government in making such grant, many individuals had become actual settlers on and adjacent to the lines of said roads, upon the public lands of the General Government. These persons belong, if you please, to that class which in times past were most unjustly branded as "squatters," but who are, in point of fact, meritorious and deserving citizens. They located upon those lands, supposing that they would be able to pay for them, and their great sin consists in not having had the money to do so.

The State of Illinois, understanding the condition of things, and the merits of this class of actual settlers located on that portion of the public lands to which the State was entitled, passed an act, which was approved February 10th, 1851, granting a preemption right to actual settlers, and allowing them three months to prove their preemption, and twelve months to make the payment. I give the following extract from the twenty-fifth section of the act of the Illinois Legislature:

SEC. 25. That each and every person who, on the twentieth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and fifty, was the owner of any improvements made previous to that date, or any lot of land conveyed to the said company, and who became such owner with a view to a residence on, or occupation of such lot of land for agricultural purposes, shall have the right to purchase, at not exceeding $2 50 per acre, a quantity of the lot so owned, to be bounded by the legal subdivisions, not exceeding one quarter section, to consist of the quarter quarter, half quarter, or quarter section, which will include the improvement aforesaid: Provided, That any person claiming the right to purchase under the provisions of this act, shall, within three months from the date of selecting the lands, file in the clerk's office of the circuit court of the county in which the land claimed is situated, a notice to the said trustees and corporation, of his, her, or their claims, describing the land by its numbers, accompanied with an affidavit, stating the date and object of the improvement, the time and manner when and how he, she, or they became the owner thereof, and also the affidavits of at least two residents of the county, proving the facts in relation to such claim: And provided further, That the right of way upon and across any lot of land sold under the provisions of this section, not exceeding two hundred feet in width, shall be reserved and retained for the passage of the road, as the same may be located and constructed, and any person claiming the right to purchase as aforesaid, shall, within twelve months from the date of commencing work on the road within the county in which the land is situated, pay the said trustees or the corporation, the consideration money for the land claimed; which payment shall entitle him, her, or them, to a deed conveying an estate in fee; but in case of failure to make such payment, the right to make the purchase shall cease. When two or more persons claim the right to purchase the same lot of land, and file the proof of ownership as herein required, the person proving the first residence by himself, or those under whom he claims the improvement, shall have the right to make the purchase, but no sale or conveyance of any lot of land under the provisions of this section shall affect the rights or equities of parties claiming the same, as between each other.

This proves to you what Illinois believed to be right, in regard to this meritorious class of citizens. She has protected such of them as were on her side of the line, on the sections falling to that State; and now we ask that the General Government shall do likewise, in regard to those who are on her side of the line, by passing a bill similar in its provisions to the law of Illinois.

Within a few days of the commencement of this session, I introduced a bill to accomplish that object. It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and met their approval. A few days since it was reported to the House by the Hon. Mr. FREEMAN, of Mississippi, and owing partly to the indisposition of members to having the great number of bills reported by the Committee on Public Lands, and partly to a misapprehension of its provisions, growing out of the hasty reading of the bill, some opposition was manifested to its immediate passage, and the bill now remains on the Speaker's table.

The following is a copy of the bill:

Be it enacted, &c., That each and every person who, on the twentieth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty, was owner of any improvement made previous to that date on any tract of land now owned by the United States, and situated within the limits reserved from sale by order of the Government, because of the grant of alternate sections to the States of Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama, in aid of the construction of the Chicago and Mobile Railroad and branches, by virtue of an act of Congress, approved September twentieth, eighteen hundred and fifty, entitled "An act granting the right of way, and making a grant of land to the States of Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama, in aid of the construction of a railroad from Chicago to Mobile," and who became such owner with a view to a residence on, or occupation of, such tract of land for agricultural purposes, shall have the right to purchase, at the price established by law in regulating the sales of said lands, a quantity of the tract so improved not less than forty, nor more than one hundred and sixty acres, in legal subdivisions, on which said improvement may be situated: Provided, That any person claiming the right to purchase under any provision of this act, shall, within three months from the date hereof, file with the register of the proper land office a notice describing the land by its numbers, accompanied with an affidavit stating the date and object of the improvement, the time and manner, when and how, he, she, or they, became the owner thereof, and also the affidavits of at least two residents of the county in which such improvement is situated, proving that said improvement was made with a view to residence, or for agricultural purposes: And provided, further, That the right of way upon and across any tract of land claimed under the provisions of this act, not exceeding two hundred feet in width, shall be reserved and retained for the said railroad and branches, as the same may be located and constructed; and any person claiming the right to purchase as aforesaid, shall, within twelve months from the passage of this act, pay to the receiver of the proper land office, the sum of money so established by law to be paid as aforesaid; and on failure of said actual settler either to prove his right of preemption within three months, or to pay for the land within twelve months after the passage of this act, as herein required, the said land containing the improvements as aforesaid, shall be subject to entry by any other person making application therefor.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That when two or more persons claim the right to purchase the same tract of land, and file proof of ownership as herein required, the person proving the first residence by himself, or by those with whom he claims the improvement, shall have the right to make the purchase, but no sale or conveyance of any tract of land under the provisions of this act, shall affect the rights or equities of parties claiming the same as between each other.

That road, so far as it relates to Illinois, has now been located. We know where it goes, and through what country it passes, and whose rights and interests are affected by it.

It will be recollected, sir, by those who are familiar with the preemption bill which was passed in the year 1841, that by the provisions of that act an individual, wishing to obtain the benefit of a preemption, was required within thirty days, I believe the time is, after he first made his location and selection of land, to make an application at the proper land office, designating the tract of land on which he had located, and signifying his intention to claim his preemption, and he was also required, within twelve months of that time, to enter and pay for the land at the Government price.

Within a short time after the passage of the act granting alternate sections of land to the Chicago and Mobile road, there was issued an Executive order to the officers of the several land offices for the withdrawing and withholding from sale those lands. They were taken out of market for the purpose of permitting the railroad to be located, and the alternate sections granted to the State to be selected. The road has now been located, and the alternate sections have been selected, and consequently the offices will be opened for the sale of the remaining lands as usual. Notice has already been given by the proper officer, that the land offices will be opened in July next for the sale of these lands. What, then, is the result, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee? Persons who had made improvements, and who then were, and now are, actual settlers along the line of that road, have been unable to enter their land, because it was reserved from sale for more than twelve months; consequently they are not protected by any preemption law now in force, and additional legislation is necessary if he would save them from the speculator. It is a question, when these lands shall come into market in July next, whether the provisions of the bill which is upon the Speaker's table shall be passed, so as to protect the actual settler against the speculator, and to give the man, the sweat of whose brow, and the labor of whose hands, have made the improvement, the first right to purchase the land from the Government at $2 50 per acre? or whether the land shall be thrown open to a scramble between the man who made the improvement and the swarm of speculators who wish to avail themselves of the benefit of the labor of another? The question is distinctly made between the actual settler, who has erected his cabin upon the land, fenced in and cultivated it, and the speculator, who seeks to wrest it from him. That bill was published the morning after its presentation, by my honorable friend from Mississippi, [Mr. FREEMAN,] in the "Globe," and is open to the inspection and examination of all who desire to examine it. I trust it has been, or will be, so examined, and so considered, that when it shall again be called up there will be no objection to its passage. If these people shall not be protected in the improvements which they have made when the land offices shall be opened, any person will have a right to enter those lands; and he who can reach the office first, having the money to pay for them, will be the successful applicant. In this way those whose labor has imparted value to the land, are liable to be turned out of doors, without shelter from the heat of a summer's sun, or the pitiless peltings of a winter's storm. I cannot believe that Congress will either refuse or neglect to pass a bill so salutary in its operation.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact, that the law making this grant of lands, in terms saves the preemptions which had attached at the time of the passage of the bill?

Mr. FICKLIN. It saves all preemption rights that had then attached, because such rights could not be divested.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to ask, further, what is the nature and meaning of the term attach?

Mr. FICKLIN. If the actual settler had made his application at the proper land office for a preemption, according to law, prior to the passage of the act granting alternate sections, his right to a preemption would have attached, and he could have proceeded to complete his title; but the men which this bill is intended to protect, had located on the land before the bill passed, but had not taken this preliminary, but necessary step.

Mr. HUNTER. Does this preemption bill refuse to extend protection to those only who were actual settlers at the time of the passage of the alternate section act?

Mr. FICKLIN. It protects, and is intended for the benefit only of those who were bona fide settlers at the time of the passage of the act granting alternate sections. That is all I desire to do, and no amendment, excluding all others, can be too strong for me. Those who have been attracted to the line of the road since the lands were granted, have gone there for speculation, and can take care of themselves; but the actual settler, the poor man who has labored to make himself a home, is very differently situated.

Mr. HUNTER. My objection to the bill was purely on the ground, that I supposed it protected those who had made locations on the line of the road since the alternate sections were granted to the State; but I have no objection whatever to granting a preemption to the actual settler whose improvement was made prior to the grant of the lands.

Mr. FICKLIN. That is all I desire; and I cannot believe that any gentleman who understands the bill, will object to its being called up and passed.

Mr. HALL. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio, with the permission of my friend from Illinois, what the Committee on Public Lands understand by this bill. It has been represented to them, and I suppose truly, that there were certain settlers upon some of this land—which, under the bill alluded to, was reserved to the United States—who had not complied with the preemption law, and of course were not protected by the terms of that bill; and yet they had made settlements and improvements. The State of Illinois has secured to all such who have settled upon the land granted to that State, their rights, at $2 50 per acre. This bill merely proposes that those who had settled upon the land reserved to the Government, before the passage of the bill referred to, shall have the land at $2 50 per acre; although they had not complied with the preemption law.

Mr. FICKLIN. Mr. Chairman, having said thus much in regard to that preemption bill, I propose to proceed to the consideration of the subject immediately before the committee—the homestead bill, which was introduced by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON.] From the opponents of this bill we have had some speeches, to which I have listened with great interest. They were marked with thought and ability.

I have carefully read the speech of the honorable member from Maine, [Mr. FULLER;] and although I have bestowed as much thought in the investigation of his reasons as I was enabled to do, I see nothing in them, although his arguments are speciously put together, which is calculated to raise a doubt in the minds of those in favor of the homestead bill—nothing at all. Sir, my friend lives too near the Canada line to understand our land system. He quotes authorities which are not consonant with our interests in this country. He cites the opinions of British lords. I would rather have the opinion of one of our lords of the soil—one of the sovereigns of our land, on this subject, (although he may never have read a book on entails or contingent remainders,) than the opinion of a British lord, with all his legal lore. It is known to me, and it is known to all of those who have given any attention to the British land system, that it is directly the opposite of ours. Under the English law, the lands are in the hands of a few wealthy families—a few pampered aristocrats. Their policy is to hold them in the hands of the few—ours is to have them pass into the hands of the many, to distribute them amongst those of the people who will cultivate them. We desire to see them owned and occupied by the lords of the soil, the sovereign people of this country. The British theory is, that every acre of land in that country has its lord; and there is a regularly-graduated dependence from the King down to the humblest tenant who tills the soil. The title descends from the Crown. Her policy is to preserve a pampered landed aristocracy, which policy is at war with the best interests of this country.

The honorable member from Maine talked about the unconstitutionality of this measure, as have some others upon this floor. I have not taken the trouble to examine whether those gentlemen who question the unconstitutionality of this bill did or did not vote for grants of bounty land to the soldier. Nor shall I do so, because their vote cannot change the power of Congress in the premises. If, however, they voted to grant bounty lands to soldiers, I should like to know where they will find the distinction. I should like to know under what clause of the Constitution they will find the power delegated to grant bounty lands to soldiers, that does not at the same time confer the power to grant lands to the landless and homes to the homeless and houseless of this country. The principle is the same. I hold that we have unlimited control over the public lands of this country. I hold that ample power is delegated to us by express grant of the Constitution, whereby we are authorized to dispose of the property belonging to the United States, land included. This is the constitutional provision:

“The Congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting, the territory or other property belonging to the United States.”

It has been the uniform custom and practice of Congress to grant lands to individuals, corporations, and States, in great and small quantities, from the foundation of this Government up to the present time. The right, it seems to me, cannot now be questioned, for it has been sanctioned, I think, by every President who has had the honor of a seat in the Executive chair, from President Washington down to President Fillmore. Each and all have signed bills granting lands to individuals, corporations, or States.

My friend from Maine [Mr. FULLER] seems to think that we are going to run out of lands some of these days—that the time is coming on when we shall have no public lands whatever. In looking through the vista of time, I cannot, aided even by fancy, reach the point when this Government will be without public lands. I venture the prediction, that while these States are bound together, and we have a Government, we shall have more public lands than would furnish homes for all of our people. If, like Rome, and some other ancient Governments that have preceded us, we shall become so dissolute and so corrupt as to be overthrown, then, as a matter of course, land, liberty, and all that is dear to us, will go together. But while the States continue united, and while ours is a free, independent, and republican Government, we shall not only have lands, but we shall have more lands than we can settle. It was Lorenzo Dow, or some one else, who, speaking of the great desire of an acquaintance to increase his lands, said, if the individual owned the whole world he would want a small piece outside for a potato patch. It seems to me that that desire would be about as rational as the desire of my friend from Maine, [Mr. FULLER,] who maintains that we should not pass this bill granting these lands, because, forsooth, some day or other we should need them. I am one of those who believe that this is to be an ocean-bound Republic. I am one of those who believe, if we remain a free and independent people, that we are to occupy this whole continent. How was it in regard to Mexico? Is it not known that at the close of our war with that people, many of them desired to be annexed to this country, and have our laws extended over Mexico? How is it at this moment with that country? Do we not all know that our difficulty is rather in keeping these Mexican States away from us, than in attracting them to us? Is it not manifest that quite as soon as our population shall be prepared for it, and perhaps much sooner, the feeble Government of Mexico will totter to its fall, and drop like a ripe pear into our lap? It will devolve upon us the responsibility either of placing it under our own jurisdiction and government, or of seeing that it does not pass into improper hands. It is impossible that it shall maintain itself much longer.

We were told a few days ago by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] to whose remarks I listened with the most profound pleasure and to whom I return my thanks for his able and instructive speech, that we have upwards of an acre and a half of land for every human being upon the face of the globe. It is estimated that the globe contains between nine and ten hundred millions of souls, and this Government now owns between fourteen and fifteen hundred millions of acres of land, to say nothing of the hundreds of millions of acres of land in the old States owned by individuals; thus it will be seen that the time is not near at hand when we shall be in need of elbow room on this continent.

Then, so far as my friend from Maine, [Mr. FULLER,] or my friend from New York, [Mr. JENKINS,] is concerned, or any others who may entertain fears in regard to a scarcity of land in this country owned by this Government, I beg them to dismiss all fears upon that subject, because they are entirely groundless. One word more in regard to the speech of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER.] He saw the true point in this case. We are now receiving in this country, from 250,000 to 400,000 emigrants per annum. The tide of incoming population is rapidly increasing. He had read in the British prints that it was a part of the policy of Great Britain to rid herself of the Celtic population in Ireland, and he had perceived that our cities must be so crowded with this population, as to produce great inconvenience. He had seen with the eye of a statesman that this population must be disposed of in some way or other, and not be pent up in the confines and purlieus of cities where they would soon become vicious, if they were not so already. It is but the part of wisdom and far-seeing statesmanship to provide means of transportation and to send these people into the rural districts of this country, where they may enter upon the new lands, the virgin soil of the West, Southwest, and Northwest, and where they would be out of the way of many temptations to crime, and where by the sweat of their brows they can make a living. This would be not only beneficial to the cities themselves, but it is of the utmost importance to our emigrant population.

While I have voted land bounties to our soldiers whenever these bills have come up, I may be permitted here to say, that this measure is more salutary and more beneficent in its effects and operation than any bounty land bill which has ever passed this House. The bounty land bill receives more votes—and why? Because it affects all the States, and because the citizens of all the States feel a direct interest in it. When they obtain land warrants, they sell them, and the money is appropriated by them to serve their wants and supply the necessities of life. Those land warrants are very frequently located by the speculator, who holds them until the adjacent lands have been cultivated and improved, and thereby imparted value to his. But in this case it is different. You require the one who receives the benefits of this bill to locate upon the land, and remain there five years; and I ask you whether five years' probation on wild lands, where the occupant is subject to the privations incident to a new country, is not equal to a three months' campaign?

We are told by some that they are apprehensive, if this bill should pass, that there will be a rush from the old States to the new States—a kind of general stampede in the direction of the western and north and southwestern portions of this country. That will not be the case, however. In the first place, there are a great many individuals who are attached to home, kindred, and the fireside of their youth. This is a strong feeling of the human heart, and one, too, which is not so readily relinquished. This feeling alone will prevent many from quitting the home of their youth. Those who are able to purchase will not select a tract of land in this new wilderness country, but will prefer to buy a home of their choice land, that has been improved by the erection of comfortable houses, and other conveniences, rather than take one not of their choice, and remain on it five years before perfecting their title.

There is still another class that will not avail themselves of this bill; they are such as are too poor to find means to pay the expense of emigrating from the older to the new States, and of settling on these lands; therefore those persons can not go. When, then, you come to make the calculation, you will find that those not now residents of the new States, who will secure to themselves the benefits of this bill, will be generally of the middle, or rather not of the very poorest class, and that the number will not be so large by a great deal as is anticipated by some gentlemen. The man who is too poor to purchase land, but who has means to defray traveling expenses, will go and select him a home under this bill, improve the land and obtain a patent for it at the end of five years; but the man who is too poor to reach the lands cannot, of course, enjoy their benefits, for though “the waters are troubled, he cannot step in.”

I have heard it suggested by some of my friends from the older States, that if this bill shall become a law, it will put an end, now and forever, to all revenue from the public lands; and by others, that it disjointed and discontinued the surveys of the public lands. If that were the case, much as I am in favor of this bill, I should be reluctant to vote for it, because I regard our present system of land surveys as one of the most perfect ever devised by the wit of man. I would not for anything break it up, and have ourselves thrown back into that confusion of land titles which has been witnessed in the State of Kentucky, and in other States of this Union, where our present model system of land surveys has not obtained. I repeat, that I would not be willing, upon any reasonable terms, to return to that old system so fruitful of lawsuits and so fraught with evil to the community. Such is not, however, the operation of this bill. But gentlemen ask, "Do you think that the Government will pay the expense of these surveys of the public lands, and derive no benefit from the sales?" Not at all. I do not expect any such thing. But I do expect the Government to bear the expense of these surveys, and derive about the same revenue as is now derived from the land sales. How do I prove it? In this way, sir. When, in 1846 and 1850, the bounty land bills of those two years became laws, we all know that the same cry went forth of "no more revenue from the public lands." But was that the effect? Was that prediction verified by the result? Certainly not. The land sales went on as usual, and though they were not as large as in the years 1835, '36, and '37, when we were cursed with an inflated paper currency, yet they ran up about to the average sales in those years when the currency was in a healthy condition. And the reason of this is, that the man who to-day makes a location on Government land, and in five years receives his patent for it, will purchase other lands for himself and his children, just as soon as he accumulates funds enough to accomplish it. And if he can collect together sufficient money even before he obtains his patent, he will purchase the land around him. There is a desire common to all mankind, and not less striking in the American than in the European character, to acquire title to land. This is one of the instincts of our nature, and men will drain their pockets of the last dollar to buy land. They will almost suffer, and let their families suffer for want of the common necessities of life, in order that they may accumulate land for their children. Such will continue to be the case when this bill is passed, and my word for it the receipts from land sales will continue, and we shall see repeated the results of 1846 and 1850, granting military bounty land warrants to our soldiers; it will not materially diminish the receipts of the land office from the sales of the public lands. It may do it to some extent, but not so much as is anticipated.

Now, my friend from New York, [Mr. JENKINS],—and the same remark has been made by two or three gentlemen—referred to the receipts in 1835, '36, and '37, as a criterion in estimating these land sales. But that is no safe criterion at all. Those exorbitant sales of lands were produced by an inflated paper currency, which flooded the whole country, and resulted not only in bankruptcy to the people of the land States, but also to those of the manufacturing and mercantile sections of the Union. I believe that the land sales ran up to something like forty millions of dollars in two years, in those times. But that is no criterion whatever. That was one of those great monetary expansions superinducing a crisis that bankrupted the greater portion of those who had been engaged in speculation. Under the healthy operation of our land system, the land sales in this country have yielded not far from two millions of dollars a year.

I believe it was the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. SUTHERLAND] who undertook to prove by figures—and I do not at all question his proof—that one million of acres a year had been, in times past, about the amount required in this country for actual settlement. Well, now, gentlemen, by a little calculation, can see how long it would take, at the rate of one million of acres a year, to exhaust the fourteen hundred millions of acres of land that this Government owns. And then there would have to be an abatement from that amount of the lands which would be purchased by those who would prefer to select and pay for a home of their choice, rather than to be under the necessity of occupying land five years before perfecting their titles.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which appeals directly to the human heart, and awakens the best feelings of our nature. It is a bill which says to the landless, and homeless, and houseless, who are tenants to others, You shall have a home, to be won and earned by your own perseverance and industry. You have but to locate upon the lands of this Government, and after remaining there faithfully for the term of five years, you shall receive a patent, and then you will feel that you are one of the lords of the soil—that you are an American citizen, and have a home to live upon.

Gentlemen have compared the objects of this bill to the provisions made by the French Government, and by other Governments, to furnish labor and support to their needy citizens. Sir, there is no resemblance whatever between them. Our pension system is much more analogous. This bill does not propose to furnish bread to the breadless, or meat to the hungry, but it says to all such, "There is the land of the Government. Go upon it and work, and make a living for yourself." It stimulates industry. It says to the man who is without a home: "There is a home for you. There is a place where, by industry and by work, you can make a living, and secure an independence for yourself and your family." Instead of furnishing meat and bread to the hungry, to the idle, the lazy, and the loafer, they are each told to earn their living by the sweat of their brow, and are pointed to the land on which it can be done. We thus offer an additional admonition, and furnish an additional stimulant to our people to go and earn a livelihood by honest industry. The opponents of this mode of granting land insist that it is a gratuity or charity, which I think is clearly not the case. If their premises are wrong, the force of their deductions from these premises will be destroyed. It is no charity, because there is reciprocity in the agreement; there are mutual understandings or covenants between parties competent to contract, by which corresponding rights are acquired, and obligations imposed.

The Government virtually says to one of her citizens: I have a wide domain of public lands, and desire their settlement; do you go and select a tract of one hundred and sixty acres, and as a condition precedent reside on it for five consecutive years, and I will grant you a title in fee simple; which proposition the citizen accepts; and when he complies with the condition precedent, that being the consideration on his part, then, and not till then, is he entitled to a patent.

The same thing is done by private individuals and companies owning town sites on large tracts of wild lands. They make grants for the purpose of inducing settlement and improvement, and regard themselves as benefited by the operation. These undertakings are regarded as mutually beneficial to the parties concerned, and such will be the effect of these grants by the Government. When a farm is made on a tract of land, we all know that it brings into market the neighboring lands. The one follows the other, as certainly as effect follows its cause in any other instance. The Government has those lands. What can she do with them better than to have them settled by hardy and industrious farmers? What other use, indeed, has she for them? None that I can conceive of. The farmers who would occupy these lands must of necessity augment the exports and imports of the country, increase the revenue from duties, give employment to seamen, manufacturers, citizens, and indeed the products of their labor would be felt in all the ramifications of life.

I indorse all that has been said by the friends of this bill in regard to its efficacy in transforming the same community into better citizens; it will elevate their character, make them feel that they have a stake in the country, and awaken in their hearts an imperishable love of, and attachment to, their homes. It will nerve the arm of the soldier in the hour of peril; and though all cannot say, "This is my own, my native land," yet the emigrant in our midst will feel that in consequence of the bounty of our Government, the home of his adoption is more dear to him than the land of his nativity.

In the year 1795, during the administration of General Washington, and near its close, the following bill was passed, granting land to the French inhabitants of Gallipolis, and approved by him on the 3d of March of that year:

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to cause to be surveyed, laid off, and divided, the remaining 20,000 acres of land, residue of the 24,000 acres, into as many lots, or parts, as the actual settlers of Gallipolis shall on ascertainment aforesaid amount to, and the same to be designated, marked, and numbered on a plat thereof, to be returned to the Secretary of the said Territory, together with a certificate of the courses of the said lots, the said lots or parts of the aforesaid tract, to be assigned to the settlers aforesaid by lot. And the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to issue letters patent as aforesaid, to the said actual settlers and their heirs, for the said 20,000 acres, to be held by them in severality in lots to be designated and described by their numbers on the plat aforesaid, with condition in the same letters patent, that if one or more of the said grantees, his or her assignees, shall not, within five years from the date of the same letters, make or cause and procure to be made an actual settlement on the lot or lots assigned to him, her, or they, and the same continue for five years thereafter, that then the said letters patent, so far as concerns the said lot or lots not settled and continued to be settled as aforesaid, shall cease and determine, and the title thereof shall revert in the United States, in the same manner as if this law had not passed."

The Gallipolis act, it will be perceived, grants the title prior to the expiration of the term of five years' occupation and settlement, whilst the bill now under consideration requires the five years' occupation to be complied with as a condition precedent; otherwise the measures are very much the same in principle.

Arkansas grants her public lands that have been forfeited to the State for taxes to actual settlers, for the purpose of inducing immigration. Texas has offered similar inducements to immigrants. This Government has held out similar inducements to persons who would emigrate to Oregon.

Now, let us look for a moment at the system which has been adopted by some of the other States. Take, for example, Kentucky. That State became the owner of large tracts of public land. She reduced the price to a mere nominal amount, in some instances as low as twelve and a half cents per acre. And what has been the result of it? Has it been, as my friend from Maine [Mr. FULLER] seemed to anticipate, that the country would be settled by loafers and idlers, such as they have in Canada? Not so. The result has been that Jackson's purchase, in the southern part of Kentucky, represented now for some fourteen years on this floor by the Speaker, (the Hon. LINN BORN, of Kentucky,) has been settled by worthy, intelligent, and enterprising people; who, though poor at first, are gradually becoming wealthy, and that country is rapidly growing and improving; and the passing traveler is astonished at the growth of its towns and cities, and the number and extent of its farms. Look at the State of Georgia. By an arrangement between that State and the General Government it was agreed that the latter should extinguish the Indian title to a large tract of land known as the Cherokee country; and what was the policy of that State? It was a wise policy—the same as that adopted in parceling out the lands at Gallipolis. She determined to give that land to her citizens without charge, and she proceeded by lottery to decide the tract that each one should receive. This being done, the title was at once perfected, without requiring previous settlement on the land.

What has been the result? Has it been to people the Cherokee country with a set of loafers and loungers, whose only object was to obtain a title to the land and then dispose of it as has been supposed would be the operation under this bill by my friend from Maine? Not so. I will venture to say that there is not in any one portion of that Empire State of the South, nor is there in any portion of the whole country, a more enterprising, industrious, and thrifty people than is to be found in the Cherokee country, in Georgia. A few years since that was an Indian country, but it now contains perhaps one third of the population of that State.

It is not necessary for our friends to seek for examples drawn from Canada, Great Britain, or any other foreign Government. Let them rather come home to our own country, and profit by the examples of such of our States as have practiced upon this policy. I hold, sir, that the plan of this bill is better, if possible, than that carried out by the State of Georgia, or that adopted in regard to the grant to inhabitants of Gallipolis; because in the State of Georgia the settler was not required to remain upon the land for any length of time in order to secure his title. This, I regard as a most essential feature. By the provisions of this bill, the settler is not only required actually to take

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1852.

NEW SERIES.... No. 75.

possession, but he must live upon the land for five years in order to secure his title. In that time he will have made many improvements—his cabin will have been built—his fields will have been cultivated, and he will have erected many monuments about his home which he will cherish, and with which he will not willingly part.

Some gentlemen have said that all those who acquire land under this bill will sell it as soon as they once obtain the patent, or that they will squander it away. That may be done in some cases, because in all countries there is a certain portion of the population who are thriftless and who cannot hold what they possess. But there will be many others, and probably much the largest portion, who, when they obtain their titles, will remain upon the land until the day of their death, who will die in the house they have built, and will leave a home and land as an heritage to their children.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there may be some gentlemen in this Hall who suppose I am in favor of giving these grants of land to everybody who would ask for a patent for them. I tell those gentlemen, that when this bill comes to pass the ordeal of amendment before the committee, I propose to scan it closely, and guard it at every point. I shall call to my aid the light furnished by twenty years' experience and observation in the land States, to aid me in securing to the actual settler, the industrious man, the benefits of this bounty, and exclude therefrom the mere speculator and the idle loafer. I propose so to guard it that no one shall obtain a patent for a tract of land under this bill, who shall not live upon it in good faith the length of time required, and that, too, with the intention of becoming a citizen. I propose so to amend it that loafers and loungers, and worthless fellows, who are men of straw in the hands of others, and operate for their benefit, and who do not in good faith seek to obtain the land for the purpose of settlement, shall not profit by their frauds, nor shall those who employ them. But rather that the benefits of this bill shall inure to all such as really need a home for themselves and family, and are willing to secure it by honestly complying with the provisions of the law during the probationary period of five years. No occupation of the land by proxy should give even color of claim to title. When you bestow land upon the man who will till the soil, and who will erect his log cabin upon it, you plant there a citizen, who, when your country is invaded by a foreign foe, will bare his breast in its defense.

It would not surprise any one if the sons of those men who would receive land from the bounty of the Government under this bill, should rise to eminence in all the pursuits of life, and cause their influence to be felt in either end of the Capitol. Why, sir, if I am not mistaken, there are men in this House, whose fathers never owned an acre of land in their lives; men from the walks of poverty, who have struggled against adversity and trial, and have come up to fill offices of the highest honor and profit. When I hear my friends speaking of this class of people as being undeserving and worthless, I have only to ask them to look at the history of mankind. Look at the history of families and of men in this country, and you will discover that here, where the laws of primogeniture and entail do not obtain—where property does not of necessity descend in families from generation to generation—that lands, and fortune, and honors too, are passing from those who enjoyed them in one generation, to their overseers, their tenants, employees, and their descendants the next. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOWIE obtained the floor, but yielded it to Mr. HUNTER, who moved that the committee rise.

The question was put, and agreed to—ayes 48, noes 21.

Mr. COBB. A very large amount of business has accumulated upon the Speaker's table, as the House well knows. If it is in order, I therefore move that we do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. CARTTER. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTTER] cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB], to make that motion.

Mr. COBB. I then insist upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion can be entertained by unanimous consent.

Objection was made, and the motion was not entertained.

Mr. HALL. I reported a bill some weeks ago granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Missouri, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in that State, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but, through inadvertence in making the motion, it was not ordered to be printed. I ask that the bill may be ordered to be printed.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of 1,522 citizens of the city of Philadelphia, and of Philadelphia county, in favor of granting lands to actual settlers; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask the consent of the House to present a bill, of which previous notice has been given, for the purpose of having it referred.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. It is evident, from the last vote taken, that there is no quorum present. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned till Monday next.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. STANTON, of Ohio: The petition of 118 citizens of New York, in favor of Whitney's railroad to the Pacific.

By Mr. McNAIR: The resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, in relation to a canal around the falls in the Ohio river.

Also, the resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, against the extension of the Woodworth patent for a planing machine.

By Mr. MACE: The petition of Elias Shoemaker, asking to be placed on the pension list.

By Mr. PEASLEE: The petition of Beniah Dove, for a pension.

By Mr. HASCALL: The petition and accompanying documents of Mary Stanton, widow of General Phineas Stanton, deceased, praying that a pension may be granted to her on account of wounds received by her deceased husband in the war of 1812.

By Mr. HARPER: The petition of the Mayor and Council, and of the Board of Trade of the city of Zanesville, praying the construction of a canal on the Indiana side of the Ohio river at the falls.

By Mr. CHASTAIN: The memorial of Thomas Towers, of South Carolina, praying Congress to remunerate him for a wagon and team, pressed into the colonial service in the war of the Revolution, in the year 1780.

By Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana: The petition of Robert M. Cooke and 127 other citizens of Cudd's Parish, Louisiana, praying that a post road from Greenwood, Louisiana, to Boston, Texas, by Cooke's Store (Capon) and — ferry, be established.

By Mr. CHANDLER: The memorial, most numerous signed, by citizens of Philadelphia, asking for the passage of a homestead bill.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, April 26, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasury Department, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 14th instant, in relation to the character of the discriminating duties exacted on the tonnage of the United States entering the ports of Cuba and Porto Rico, at the time and subsequent to the acts of Congress approved July 13, 1832, and 30th June, 1834; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for information in relation to contracts for the erection of light-houses on the coast of the Pacific ocean; which was read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD. I am instructed by the Legislature of the State of New York to submit certain joint resolutions. I ask that they may be read.

The Secretary read them. They are in favor of an appropriation for the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of the St. Ste. Marie.

Mr. SEWARD. In submitting these resolutions, I desire leave to say that I am proud of the catholic spirit and patriotism which inspired them; that I shall conform myself to the wishes of the Legislature of New York; and that I shall coöperate with the Representatives of Michigan, and all others who may take an interest in the matter, with alacrity and perseverance in securing the earliest possible achievement of so great and truly national a work as a canal around the Falls of St. Ste. Marie. I move that the resolutions be laid on the table and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I am also requested to present the petition of citizens of the State of New York, embracing a large number of the members of the Legislature of that State, praying that a contract may be entered into with the Irish and American Steamship Company, for the transportation of the mails between the United States and Ireland.

I regard this, sir, as a most important postal and commercial enterprise, which, on some future occasion, I shall be happy to explain and defend. In the mean time, I beg leave to commend it to the present favorable consideration of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which I move that it may be referred.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD also presented a petition of merchants and others, citizens of New York, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steamships; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, two petitions of citizens of Albany, New York, praying that the bill giving further remedies to patentees may become a law; which were ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, a petition of the heirs-at-law of William Peters, deceased, an officer in the war of the Revolution, praying an allowance for the depreciation on commutation pay certificates; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, a petition of Louis Charette, praying the relief to which he was entitled under the treaties between the United States and the Ottawa and Ojibwa Indians, of 28th March, 1836, and 2d August, 1847; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JAMES presented the petition of John Williams, praying an increase of pension on account of wounds received in the late war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted additional documents in relation to the claim of Lewis Allen; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. UNDERWOOD presented the memorial of George Stealey, praying compensation for his services, and remuneration of expenses, while on a mission to the Indian tribes in the northern portion of the State of California, under the authority of the Indian Commissioners of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HUNTER presented the petition of the heirs of Everard Meade, praying an allowance for the depreciation on commutation certificates; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of Chelsea, Massachusetts, praying the establishment of a system of cheap ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of H. H. Stevens, praying authority to import free of duty, machinery to be used in the manufacture of linen goods; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALKER presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land to aid in the improvement of the Wisconsin river between Fort Winnebago and the Beaulieu Rapids; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FELCH submitted additional documents in relation to the claim of Sylvanus Culver; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WALKER. I have a petition in my hand, which measures fifty-two feet in length, and is signed about as closely throughout as it may be seen to be here at the commencement, praying that Congress may take such steps, and adopt such measures, as will throw open the public lands to free settlement by actual occupants. At a very early day in this session I had the honor of introducing a bill into the Senate upon this subject, which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. It was before that committee during the last Congress, and was then reported upon adversely. I have not heard from the bill since it went to the committee at this session; but I know the industry of that committee, and I know that it has a great deal to do, for it has before it many subjects of weighty importance. I had hoped, however, that we might have had a report on the bill which I had the honor to present, one way or the other, either favorably or adversely, before this time; and I am still in hopes that, notwithstanding the committee has been so fully occupied, they may do so at an early day. This subject is growing in importance before the country, and I believe I can say for one—having, perhaps, as intimate, if not a more intimate, knowledge upon this subject—having, perhaps, more correspondence than any other individual in the Senate in relation to it—that it is not looked upon as a matter of so great importance, perhaps, by the Committee on Public Lands as it is by those whom we represent throughout the country. I will ask that this petition also be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It is signed by a number of thousand people in the city and county of Philadelphia, and I hope it may be considered promptly by the committee, and that we may have a report upon it as early a day as practicable.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, it was Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of War and the accompanying papers, on the files of the Senate, relating to the claims of certain friendly Seminole Indians for military services in the Florida war, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That Robert Dickey have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLEMENS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the petition of the heirs of Wolcott Lawrence, late of Monroe, Michigan, deceased, praying remuneration for lands improperly sold to him by the General Government, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of the heirs of Semoice, a friendly Creek Indian, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Rosanna Sowards, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of C. Hansen, of Brooklyn, New York, praying that a contract may be entered into with him for carrying the mail by steamers between the city of Brooklyn and Gluckstadt, Holstein, for the term of ten years, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill for the relief of William Richardson and others, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, inasmuch as the claim has been adjusted under existing laws; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of James A. Fawns, reported it back without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Monmouth B. Hart, Joel Celley, and William Close, securities for the late Benjamin F. Hart, a purser in the United States Navy, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the petition of Isaac Houston, reported a resolution for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

It simply provides for the payment of $47 05, being a balance due under a contract for carrying the mails on a route embracing parts of the States of Iowa and Missouri, during portions of the years 1848 and 1849. At the request of Mr. Rusk, it was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. SUMNER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce "a bill to enforce liens in admiralty, and to regulate proceedings therein."

TEMPLE'S MEMOIR.

Mr. BELL submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to furnish the Senate with a copy of a memoir of the landing of the United States troops at Vera Cruz in 1847, by Lieutenant Granville Temple, with an appendix, containing the written orders of General Scott and Commodore Connor, on file in the Navy Department.

REV. CHARLES L. BRACE.

Mr. CASS submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to the Senate, so far as may be compatible with the public interest, a copy of the correspondence of the American Chargé at Vienna, with the Department of State, on the subject of the apprehension and imprisonment by the Austrian authorities of the Rev. Charles L. Brace, an American citizen.

MEXICAN REFUSAL OF TOBACCO PERMITS.

Mr. RUSK submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before the Senate the proofs upon file in the State Department, submitted by Turner and Penschaw, of the city of New Orleans, in relation to the refusal of the Mexican Government to grant guias or permits to take into the interior for sale certain lots of tobacco imported into Mexico prior to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

CONTRACTS FOR MAILS.

A motion by Mr. RUSK that fifteen hundred additional copies of the reports of the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster General in relation to the contracts for carrying the mails by steamships between New York and California, communicated the 23d, 25th, and 26th of March last, be printed for the use of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills and joint resolution were severally read a third time and passed: Joint resolution for the relief of Alexander Y. P. Garnett;

Bill for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased;

Bill for the relief of Jacob Young;

Bill for the relief of Margaret Farrar;

Bill authorizing the legal representatives of Antoine Vasquez, Joseph Vasquez, and John Colligan to enter certain lands in Missouri;

Bill for the relief of Martin Fenwick or his legal representatives; the title of which was amended on motion by Mr. Downs;

Bill for the relief of David P. Weeks;

Joint resolution for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Cordurey;

Bill for the relief of James Glynn;

Bill for the relief of Thompson Hutchinson;

Bill for the relief of Elizabeth Jones and the other children, if any, of John Carr;

Bill for the relief of the heirs of the late Major Thomas Noel, United States Army;

Bill for the relief of Don B. Juan Domercq, a Spanish subject; and a Bill for the relief of Charles G. Hunter.

URSULA E. COBB.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, the vote on ordering the bill for the relief of Ursula E. Cobb to be engrossed and read a third time was reconsidered. Since that vote was given, an error has been discovered which will render an amendment necessary.

REPRESENTATIVES OF T. D. ANDERSON.

The bill for the relief of the representatives of Thomas D. Anderson, deceased, late Consul of the United States at Tripoli, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

On motion by Mr. UNDERWOOD, it was Ordered, That it be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill entitled "An act to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys to the General Land Office."

JAPAN EXPEDITION.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to give notice to the Senate that on Wednesday of this week I shall ask the Senate to take up for consideration the resolution which I had the honor to offer some time ago on the subject of the expedition to Japan. I give notice of it for the reason, that some week or so since I stated that I should let it lie, without asking for it to be taken up, in consequence of the wish of some Senators to bring the subject before the Senate in Executive session. The considerations in regard to that have ceased to exist; and I shall on Wednesday, in accordance with the views of several other Senators besides myself, ask the Senate to take it up for consideration.

SCHOOL LAND IN MISSISSIPPI.

The following bill from the House of Representatives was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

An act to authorize the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to sell the lands heretofore appropriated for the use of schools in that State, and to ratify and approve the sales already made.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

A bill from the House of Representatives, to release from reservation and restore to the mass of the public lands certain lands in the State of Arkansas, was read a first and second time.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to refer it to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. There is no earthly necessity for doing that. A bill of precisely similar import to, and almost a literal copy of this, was introduced by me early in the session, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which reported favorably upon it. It is simply a bill to release from reservation the small remnant of military lands yet remaining undisposed of in the State of Arkansas; and it possesses that rare virtue of tendency to bring money into the Treasury, rather than voting an appropriation out of it. As the matter has received the full consideration of the committee, there is no necessity for its reference. Under these circumstances, I conceive there can be no objection to its immediate consideration. I ask that the bill, without reference, may be acted upon now.

Mr. HUNTER. I withdraw the motion to refer.

Mr. FELCH. I would inquire of the Senator whether the bill from the House is precisely the same as that reported from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It is the same in substance.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill. It enacts that the several tracts of land in the State of Arkansas heretofore reserved for the satisfaction of military bounties under the law of 1812, and which now remain undisposed of, shall be released from such reservations, and restored to the mass of the public lands, to be disposed of in the same manner as any other public lands; provided that the person who may, at the date of the act, be an actual settler on any one of said tracts, and who, but for the reservation thereof, might have claimed the right of preemption thereto under the act of September 4, 1841, shall be authorized to enter the same, or any subdivision thereof, upon making proof of said right, and paying the minimum price per acre, within a year after the passage of the act, or prior to the day fixed for the public sale of the tract. It enacts, further, that all the sales of said lands, or locations thereof by military warrants, other than those of the war of 1812, which have been inadvertently permitted to be made, and which are in all other respects fair and regular, except as embracing the reserved lands not offered at public sale, shall be confirmed, and the patents thereon which have been issued shall be as legal and valid as if said lands had been released from reservation, and offered at public sale prior to such sales or locations; and that all said warrants which have not been satisfied may be located on any public lands subject to private entry at the time of the location of the same.

Mr. HUNTER. I would inquire of the Senator from Arkansas, whether this is not an extension of the preemption system?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. In reply to the question of the Senator from Virginia, I can say, that, as I understand the bill, it does not embrace the extension of the preemption system. It extends the present preemption system to a new class of lands, which would have been subject to preemption but for the fact, that they were reserved by the act of 1812 for the satisfaction of military land warrants. Those military land warrants have been satisfied almost to the full extent of those which are out; but, long since, by two acts of Congress heretofore passed, the claims to military land warrants, which were to have been satisfied out of this military reserved district, were converted into rights at large; and it was a mere omission of Congress at the time; it was what they should have done at the very moment the military land warrants were turned into rights at large, and located on the public lands of the United States that they did not release these lands at the same time from this reservation. In the mean time, however, settlements have been made upon the lands, and this bill merely gives to those persons the right of settlement in the same manner as if the lands had not been reserved during this time. It does not extend the preemption system, except to these particular lands; and it removes this one objection. Had they not been embraced within the technical reservation, they would have been subject to the right of preemption ever since 1840, but they have been, since that time, reserved for land warrants which have been satisfied and turned into rights at large, for the satisfaction of which this military district had been formerly set apart. The Senate, therefore, will see that there is no reason why the bill should not pass. There can arise no conflict except between the settler and the Government; and this bill proposes to give the right of preemption in precisely the same class of cases to which it would have extended, but for this technical reservation.

Mr. FELCH. There is one respect, I think, in which the bill which has been read, does extend the preemption right. The preemptor now has the right to make his entry of land at any time previous to public sale. This bill gives him the right to enter it at any time previous to public sale, or within one year after the passage of the act. In that respect, I think it does extend the time for making the entry.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think the Senator misapprehends the effect of the bill. The settler, is at all events to make proof of his preemption right, and enter the land within twelve months, or sooner if it is proclaimed for sale, and that is incident to all preemption rights under the general law. I so understand it.

Mr. FELCH. If that is the provision of the bill, it is in accordance with the present law. If the Senator would consent to strike out the words "within a year after the passage of this act," it would then correspond with the general law.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will either make the bill conform to the present law or consent to refer it. I move to refer it to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

MONROE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of the Monroe Railroad Company and their sureties, was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAWSON. I would be pleased if the Senate would consent to consider the bill now.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent to read it a second time now.

There being no objection, the bill was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel the several bonds given by the Monroe Railroad Company, for the duties on certain bars of railroad iron imported for the use of that company, at Savannah, in the State of Georgia, in the year 1841; and also to enter as "satisfied," the judgments which have been or may be obtained by the United States against said company, or their sureties on their bonds—the defendants paying the costs of the suits.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Georgia that it would be better either to refer this bill to the Committee on Finance, or to let it lie over for a day. If he will give me a chance to examine it, I shall not press the reference.

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT. The bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and must be disposed of.

Mr. DAWSON. I asked that the bill might be considered, and passed at this time, because the court meets on Monday next—the first Monday in May.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose that by general consent the bill can be informally passed over until to-morrow.

Mr. DAWSON. I have no objection to that course, but it is setting a bad precedent.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest, that as the bill is now in Committee of the Whole, it would be better to allow it to be reported to the Senate, and to be ordered to a third reading. If that course is pursued, the bill will come up to-morrow on its third reading.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to that course.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The bill supplementary to "An act providing for the taking the Seventh and subsequent Censuses of the United States, and to fix the number of the members of the House of Representatives, and to provide for their future apportionment among the several States," approved May 23, 1850, was read a third time and passed.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, the pending question being upon the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND.]

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to make a slight modification in the amendment which I have offered. It is to add to the first section of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That in no State shall the papers selected for the publication of the laws and public advertisements be less than two in number.

Mr. HUNTER called for the reading of the amendment as modified; and it was accordingly read, as follows:

That the selection of newspapers for the publication of the laws of the United States shall, after the passage of this act, be made by the Secretary of State, as follows: The number selected shall be one in each Congressional district in each State—one in each Territory—and four in the District of Columbia. And the preference shall be given, in all cases, to the papers which at the time of selection shall have in the States or Territories respectively in which they are printed, the largest number of weekly subscribers; and to those in the District of Columbia which shall have at the time of selection, the largest number of weekly subscribers in the United States; the amount of such number of subscribers to be ascertained by the affidavit of the publishers respectively, and by such additional evidence as may be requisite to establish the facts in each case to the satisfaction of the postmaster at whose office such papers respectively commence their circulation. Provided, That in no State shall the papers selected for the publication of the laws and public advertisements be less than two in number.

And be it further enacted, That when it shall be necessary to publish any public advertisements, except advertise- ments of lists of letters in any State, they shall be published in the two papers in said State having the largest number of subscribers, as provided in the preceding section of this act, for the publication of the laws, the amount of circulation to be ascertained in the same manner as provided in the preceding section aforesaid.

And be it further enacted, That said public advertisements shall be published in the new-papers having the publication of the laws as aforesaid in the District of Columbia, and in the papers having the publication of said laws in the Territories, when and as often as may be deemed necessary.

And be it further enacted, That as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and at the beginning of the first session of every succeeding Congress, a copy of the list of newspapers selected, according to the terms of this act, for the publication of the laws of the United States, shall be communicated by the Secretary of State to the heads of the several Executive Departments, and to the Senate and House of Representatives respectively.

And be it further enacted, That the President shall cause to be communicated to the Senate and House of Representatives annually a list of all newspapers that shall have published by authority, during the next preceding year, any advertisement as aforesaid, with the names of the publishers, the place of publication, the nature of the work performed, and the amount paid to each publisher.

And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act, be and they are hereby repealed.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator who moved this amendment, to modify it by striking out the word "weekly," so as to let the publication of the laws and advertisements be given to the paper which has the largest number of subscribers, without reference to the fact whether they are weekly or daily.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no particular desire that the publication should be limited to the weekly subscribers but for this reason, which I suggested when I offered the amendment the other day, that the daily circulation, or the tri-weekly circulation of a paper is of very little consequence for the circulation of the public advertisements and laws. The weekly edition of a paper is that which generally goes to all the readers throughout the country, where we desire the public advertisements and laws to be made known. It brings them to the fireside of every reader of a newspaper throughout the country. Those who reside in cities, and who take daily and tri-weekly papers, will certainly find in their papers all that would be put into the weekly papers, or they could get the weekly papers also. For that reason I have put in the weekly circulation. I have no particular desire, however, to limit it. I wish to give it to the papers having the largest circulation. But we know very well that the daily and tri-weekly papers do not circulate generally throughout the country.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator has no particular objection to it, the amendment would be much more acceptable to me by striking out the word "weekly," so that the publications may be given to the papers having the largest number of subscribers.

Mr. BORLAND. Before I decide upon that, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact, that it will limit the publication of the laws and public advertisements to the papers of the large cities, which circulate within the cities and very little beyond them. Under this modification, those papers, of course, would always command all this public work—the publication of these advertisements and the laws—although they might be limited in their circulation to the corporation limits of a city. If you take the daily editions of papers in large cities, they will monopolize these advertisements and the publication of the laws, and the laws and advertisements will not go into such general circulation as they would if they were published in the weekly editions of newspapers.

Mr. BADGER. Without referring at all to the general purpose of the amendment of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, which may be very correct, it seems to me that there are three objections to it; two to the form of the amendment as it stands, and a third to the proposition to introduce it at this time, and on this bill. The first of the two objections which I think apply to the amendment itself is, that the publication of the laws and the public advertisements, in one paper in every Congressional district in the United States, seems to me to be entirely unnecessary, for any purposes for which laws and advertisements are required to be made known. It will involve a considerable additional charge upon the Treasury, of which you know, sir, I should think, perhaps, as little as any gentleman in this body. But I object to it, not on account of the amount, but because it seems to me it would be so much money entirely wasted. If the laws of the United States are published in two or three papers in each State, and I believe three is the present number—

Mr. COOPER. Two.

Mr. BADGER. By their publication in that number of papers every purpose is answered which the publication of the laws can accomplish. It is not necessary to have them printed in every little village newspaper. It is not necessary that every man in all the walks and conditions of life should read the laws that we pass here. It is sufficient that that amount of publicity is given to them which the present regulations require. We all know, that if there be particular bills which are interesting to particular portions of the country, they are at once transferred to the little papers and become known to everybody in the State who has any interest in them, or any desire to see them. That is the first objection.

The next is, the provision to which the Senator from Virginia has adverted, of determining the amount of circulation which shall entitle a paper, in this District or elsewhere, to the publication by the number of weekly papers issued. I do not understand the argument of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, that the advertisements do not find their way to those who may be interested in knowing them, through the daily and tri-weekly issues. I think they do, quite as much as through the weekly editions. It seems to me, therefore, that the amount of issues to entitle a paper to be allowed the privilege of publication, should include all the issues of the paper—daily, tri-weekly, and weekly.

In addition to these two objections, I do not see why the Senate should be called upon to consider this amendment on the present occasion. There is no necessity for it. It will have no operation now that it will not have if put upon one of the general appropriation bills. The arrangements for the publication of the laws are made in the winter for the coming year. The papers which are to publish the laws, which may be passed at this session of Congress, are not now to be designated. They are already designated. The Departments are in the habit of designating the papers to publish their advertisements at the commencement of the season. There is therefore no purpose to be accomplished by requiring this amendment to be considered now; and I would suggest that we should permit this matter to stand for the present. Let this amendment be laid over. If the Senator from Arkansas would be kind enough to withdraw it, we should have an opportunity of becoming familiar with its details; and let it be digested better, if it can be, and let it be put as an amendment on one of the appropriation bills. Every object will then be accomplished, while, at the same time, we shall have an opportunity of knowing, with accuracy and precision, what is the change we propose to make, and whether, on the whole, it will do good or not.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has at least brought a very formidable array of logic, for which he is, as we all know, distinguished, against this poor amendment of mine.

Mr. BADGER. I beg pardon. I was very far from calling this amendment of the Senator a poor amendment. I dare say it is a very good amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall not attempt, as I should not be able, I apprehend, to make an argument, in detail, to meet all the objections of the honorable Senator. I thought the amendment so plain, and it was, to my mind, so obviously proper, that I could not think it required an argument, hardly an explanation, to commend it to the favor of the Senate. I really did think that it was one of those propositions so plain, that argument was not necessary to enforce it, but would, rather, impair its force. To my mind, it is a self-evident proposition. It is simply a proposition that we will fix, by law, the number of newspapers in the United States which shall be selected to lay before the people, who are interested in the laws under which they live, and the advertisement of their Government transactions, in a manner to inform the greatest number, by bringing them to every man's door, under every man's eye, and to every man's knowledge. That is the object of it. That is the object which it proposes in every one of its provisions.

It does not stop quite so short as that, however; that is, its intention is to go a step further, in the same general direction, and while it diffuses, better than has yet been done, this useful information among the people, to correct what I consider a very great abuse. I do not know whether it is known to the Senator from North Carolina, or whether the same thing is to be observed in his State, but I am sure it has been the observation of almost every other Senator who hears me now, that the publication of the laws and public advertisements is made use of as Executive patronage for political purposes, and to an extent which not only fails of the proper object of these publications, but is positively mischievous in its tendency. I know that in my State the publication of the laws and public advertisements is made use of as political patronage for political purposes upon a small scale, it is true, because the opportunities there are limited. But even there, it is brought to bear as a means of political party influence. I learn from other Senators that it is so in their States. I have reason to believe it is so in most of the States. I have gone to the Departments here, and have shown by statements of facts which they were bound to admit, that certain papers in my State had the largest circulation; and I have been told that papers of smaller circulation must have the publication as patronage, as political partisans—

Mr. BADGER. Political friends.

Mr. BORLAND. Although I could show that the paper which I named had twice or three times the circulation of the one having the publication of the laws and advertisements, no heed was given to the fact, and the publication was continued where it would reach the smallest, instead of the greatest number. That was what I meant the other day, when I said that the present practice gave any Administration power, to a considerable extent, to subsidize the public press. We know that such is the effect.

I wish I had full information on this subject to lay before the Senate now. I shall to-morrow offer a resolution of inquiry, which I am satisfied will bring to the attention of the Senate facts which no one can controvert, showing that these abuses have been practiced to a very great extent. I shall offer a resolution of inquiry, calling upon the different Departments to communicate to the Senate what has been in done in this way.

The Senator from North Carolina says, that, for all the purposes for which we publish the laws and public advertisements, the daily circulation of the newspapers will be sufficient. Why, if he considers it only necessary and proper that persons living in cities, or in their immediate vicinity, and who take daily papers, should know the laws, then I admit he is right.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator misunderstands me altogether. I think that every class of readers should have a fair and reasonable opportunity of seeing the laws and public advertisements; and I think, that by taking the largest circulation of a paper, including daily, tri-weekly, and weekly, you give that opportunity; but if you exclude those who take daily papers I know no reason for it. I do not see why they should not have an opportunity to see the laws and advertisements as others. So with regard to the readers of tri-weekly papers. Why, I ask, confine the enumeration to weekly papers, and exclude both daily and tri-weekly? Here, in this city, for instance, is the National Intelligencer, and here is the Union, both printed at the seat of Government. They have large lists of daily subscribers, and probably much larger lists of tri-weekly and weekly subscribers. By selecting such papers as these you reach every class of the community. That is what I meant to say.

Mr. BORLAND. If this provision excluded the publication from the daily or tri-weekly press, then there would be, I think, some force in the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina. But we know that in making up the weekly paper the matter contained in the daily paper is put into it.

Mr. BADGER. Those who take the daily do not take the weekly papers.

Mr. BORLAND. If these laws be published in the weekly, they will go, as a matter of course, into the daily papers, because we know that the practice of the publishers is to make up the weekly from matter of the daily papers. The weekly is a collection of the contents of the daily paper. In that way we know that where these publications are made in the weekly papers, they will also be published in the daily papers. But the Senator from North Carolina must recollect, that in providing, under the present system, for the publication of the laws in the daily papers of Washington city, they are given not for the people at large, but for a class of population who have the information right before their eyes, in the daily publication of the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress. I want this for the benefit of the people at large, throughout the country, and in the country districts, not for the special benefit of persons congregated in the cities, who have the means of obtaining this information without looking into the newspapers for it.

The Senator says that this amendment is not in its proper place—that it ought to go upon another bill. I think it is too late to make objection to anything of this character coming into this bill. It has already been made an "omnibus." It is a general appropriation bill. It may be called a partial appropriation bill, but it is truly a general appropriation bill, as contradistinguished from a special appropriation bill. The proposition is therefore legitimately here as an amendment to this bill. Certainly a Senator who has gone for putting into this bill some provisions which are now in it, cannot object to this on the score of irrelevancy.

I know that a suggestion has been made that the effect of this amendment will be to give these publications to certain papers. I do not care to what papers they go, so that the publication in these papers will carry out the object of the amendment which is to spread the laws and public advertisements fairly and fully before the greatest number of people. If, as has been objected in some quarters, the effect of the amendment is to throw the publication of the public advertisements and laws into Abolition papers, I do not care. I am not giving it as patronage. But if there is any class of people, in my estimation, before whom, above all others, we should lay our laws, fully and fairly, so that their eyes shall rest upon them, from day to day, it is this very class of people, to whose organs, it is said, will be given the publication of the laws by this amendment. Perhaps, if they had before them the laws which we have passed here, in pursuance of constitutional authority, and which are binding, not only upon the actions but upon the consciences of good citizens, we should hear less about the "higher law" which is raised up for the purpose of interfering with the execution of the constitutional laws of the country. Let them have these publications, not as patronage to newspapers, but to inform their minds, enlighten their understandings, teach them their duties, and thus accomplish a great public good.

Before I sit down, I wish to remark, that if I had any doubt as to my own soundness upon the slavery question, or any thought that my standing at home was such as to subject me to the suspicion of a want of soundness upon it, I might have hesitated before offering this amendment; for I knew very well that the suggestion would be, as it has been made—not here, of course—that I was favoring the Abolitionists. But, sir, as I have no doubt of myself, so I have no fears of unjust suspicions among those to whom I am accountable for my conduct here. For that reason, if these publications do go into an Abolition paper, I have no objection. Not that I would give it patronage, but because I would make use of it as a vehicle for disseminating among the greatest number of the people a knowledge of the laws under which we all have to live.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to make a remark, and only one, in reference to a suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, as to the great evils of the partiality which he has discovered in the administration of this patronage of the Government. We have not found those evils in North Carolina. Whenever the Democratic party has been in power, it has of course put this patronage in the hands of Democratic editors. Nobody had a right to complain of that. When the Whig party has been in power, it has had this printing done through papers friendly to its interests. But that was a matter which did not concern the object in view. Whether the laws and public advertisements were printed by Whig or Democratic papers did not concern the object. They were printed and circulated. That is what we have found to be the case in our State. And if there was in the Senator's State some poor fellow who was struggling along with a small subscription list, endeavoring to do good in his vocation, but not having a sufficient number of subscribers adequately to support his paper, why, if it was not strictly justifiable to give him the publication of the laws, charity would induce one to pardon a friend for giving him a "lift" in that way, and helping him along in the good cause he was endeavoring to sustain. But in the State in which I live, we have found no difficulties of that kind.

The laws have been published, and every one has had a chance to read them, although they have not been published in a paper in every Congressional district in the State. I do not see any necessity for such a large publication. But my principal objection to this amendment is, that I think it ought to be looked into. There is no necessity for considering it now. It can have no present effect. These advertisements have already been given out. If we should pass some such amendment in one of the general appropriation bills, and give it such a shape as will answer the great ends in view, every object will be accomplished. The present arrangements exist for the year.

Mr. MANGUM. Mr. President, I am friendly to the general objects of this amendment, though I think it might be much improved. For instance, I feel very strongly the force of the objection made by my colleague, that publishing the laws in a newspaper in every Congressional district is wholly unnecessary; yet I coincide with the object of the amendment, which is to extend this information as generally as may be requisite. I think that the old practice of the Government was to give the publication of the laws and public advertisements to those papers in the respective States which were supposed to have the largest circulation. In truth, very few persons are much concerned in reading the laws, except professional gentlemen; and professional gentlemen will always have access to them through the papers of the largest circulation. I wish therefore to see the amendment modified in that respect. I think that, as it stands, it will create an unprofitable expenditure. I think that the publication of the laws and public advertisements ought to be given to those papers having the largest circulation, including daily, tri-weekly, semi-weekly, and weekly issues. If, in a daily paper, information can be communicated to certain communities better than in any other way, that is a matter easily stipulated for by the Secretary of State, who has control of this matter.

But I am in favor of the great principle at the foundation of this amendment. I am utterly unwilling to leave to any Administration, whether Whig or Democratic, the power of playing upon the press by this patronage, to have either beneficial or injurious influences. Let it be regulated by law, and that law, of course, will look to the widest extension and diffusion of this intelligence. These laws all reach the professional men, who are most interested in this knowledge; and if there be any peculiar laws that may be of much interest in any locality, they can be easily obtained, and would be obtained. My colleague suggested that they would be published in the local papers in the vicinity in which they were of interest. Perhaps that would be so.

I think it would be better to postpone this matter. If it should go over for a day, we could have a little more consideration on it. It would be more agreeable to me to have it laid over.

As to the idea of any irrelevancy or inpropriety in putting such an amendment into this bill, I suppose it is about as well here as anywhere. A great principle is, to regulate by law this whole matter of the printing of the laws and public advertisements. I desire that it should be regulated by law. I desire it as much under one Administration as another. I think it tends to a wholesome condition of the press, and to preserve its soundness and purity. I do not like to see small broken fragments of a loaf held up to tempt a man. I do not like to see a hand holding it up and waving it in the distance, tempting him to follow it. I am unwilling to see the press exposed to any temptation of that kind. When this matter is regulated by law, the press is not affected by it, because the actual status of a paper, in regard to its circulation, will either include or exclude it from the list of those publishing the laws and public advertisements.

I suppose the bill can hardly be disposed of today; and I think it would be as well to withdraw the amendment for the present, or to let it lie over until to-morrow. I would like to consider its details. I really think that it is unnecessary to publish the laws in a newspaper in every congressional district,—not merely on account of the expense, but for other and additional reasons. For all the usual and necessary purposes, the object could be attained by a different course. I am decidedly in favor of asserting the great principle of leaving nothing to discretion, under our system, but what may be absolutely necessary for the public interest. I would regulate everything, as far as possible, by law.

Mr. HAMLIN. I rise to make a suggestion to the honorable Senator who offered the amendment. I find that, in the State of Maine, the public advertisements would, in accordance with the principle contained in the amendment, be published in a literary and in an agricultural paper. I believe that they are the papers published in the State which possess the largest aggregate circulation, whether daily, weekly, semi-weekly, or tri-weekly. The literary paper is furnished very much to lady readers; the agricultural paper principally to agricultural readers: they are therefore that class of papers which would not furnish the greatest amount of information to the public on any subject which the Government might find it necessary to advertise. In relation to the publication of the laws, I would add, that we have, in Maine, and I think there is in every State in New England, a paper that is designated the "State paper." In that paper the public advertisements and laws of the State are printed, and persons who do not subscribe to it, and are desirous of ascertaining what public advertisements of importance there may be, resort to it for information. I therefore suggest to the Senator from Arkansas—and I hope he will be ready to adopt the suggestion—that he will so modify his amendment as to include the "State paper," even though it should not have the largest circulation, in the number of those papers which are to publish the laws and the public advertisements.

If the matter goes over, I shall offer an amendment to that effect when it comes up again. I throw out the suggestion now, in order that the Senator from Arkansas and other honorable Senators may have time to reflect on it.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no disposition to press this matter this morning; though I thought it a proper time to have it considered. But as there are many Senators who have the same general object in view, and who think that object can be accomplished better by some modification, I have no objection to the postponement of the further consideration of the question for the present, that Senators may examine the subject further, and suggest some appropriate modification.

Several SENATORS. Withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. If the Senate will permit me I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say that I concur in the request that this matter should be postponed for a short period of time. In this connection, I wish to throw out one or two suggestions for the consideration of the mover of this amendment. The proposition is, that those publishers who exhibit the greatest weekly subscriptions, shall have the publication of the laws. Now, there is oftentimes a daily press without a weekly subscription, though the paper has a large circulation. There are many daily papers which have no subscription at all, but depend upon their daily sale for their support. I believe that many papers which have the largest circulation, have no subscription at all. I do not know that it would be deemed necessary to advertise or publish in papers of that description, but I wish to present that fact for the consideration of Senators generally.

I think, too, there is a great deal in the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine. There are religious papers that have a large circulation. I have no objection that the laws should be published in them; and it may be very proper that they should. There are agricultural papers that have a very broad circulation, and they may be a very proper medium for sending the laws, perhaps the very best, because they circulate among persons of all political parties, and thus the objection with regard to the papers being of any peculiar political character, is overcome. Perhaps such papers furnish the best mode of circulating the laws.

But I wish to throw out another consideration. We had some years ago, in Massachusetts, a provision respecting the publication of the laws, which may commend itself to the Senate. There had been a little of this scrambling for the publication of the laws, or, as the Senator from North Carolina says, the little fragments of loaves which were held up before them. We then passed a law that all the papers in the Commonwealth might publish the laws if they chose, and a very moderate compensation was given for it. We said, if you wish to publish the laws for the proposed compensation, you may do it, and send forward the evidence that you have done it for the proper time. When that was done, and the evidence was sent and filed in the proper department, the compensation was paid. I am not certain, if you wish the laws of the United States generally published, that this is not the best way, giving a moderate compensation, and allowing the whole community to do the work. I would be glad to abstract the publication of the laws from political considerations. They are laws for the whole community, for the government of all; laws in which all are interested, and therefore they should be published to all, though I do know that the effect has been to limit the publication very much to a party press. I should be very glad if this subject could be extricated and withdrawn from that condition of things in which it has been, so as to give a more liberal and wider circulation to the laws. It seems to me that some means might be devised, that would place the publication of the laws upon a more liberal footing, and meet the approbation of all parties.

Mr. BORLAND. At the request of several Senators who desire to look at the matter a little further, and have the same general object in view, I will, if permitted by the Senate, withdraw the amendment for the present.

There being no objection made, the amendment was withdrawn.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the amendment in relation to Collins's line of steamers.

Mr. BORLAND. I again rise to the question of order that I raised the other day, under the thirtieth rule of the Senate. The rule was read on that occasion, and the two points on which I would insist, under it, and to the exclusion of this amendment, are: First, that it does not come before the Senate upon an estimate from any of the Departments; and, secondly, that it is not necessary to carry into effect any existing law of Congress. It has been said, Mr. President, that an estimate has been received. Well, I admit that an estimate has been received from the Navy Department; but it is not such an estimate as is contemplated by the rule. If I understand it correctly, a member of the Naval Committee addressed a communication to the Secretary of the Navy, and asked him what would be the additional cost if a certain arrangement should be made; and the Secretary, in reply, says: if the committee conclude to recommend this arrangement, then it will cost the sum proposed here; and this amendment, as I understand, has been based upon that letter. If I am in error, the chairman of the Committee on Finance will correct me.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from New Jersey, no doubt, has the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] has it.

Mr. BORLAND. I should like to hear it read.

THE PRESIDENT. It must be sent to the Chair, before the Chair can decide the question of order.

Mr. BADGER. I will explain the action of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom this subject went, in consequence of the mail service by this steam line being put under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, instead of that of the Postmaster General, as I think it should have been. I called on the Secretary of the Navy, in consequence of the facts communicated at the commencement of the session by the Postmaster General, to prepare an estimate for the additional appropriation necessary in consequence of the additional contract entered into between the Secretary and the Postmaster General and the Collins's line, to defray the additional expense at the estimate which the committee proposed to recommend to the Senate, to be made during the half fiscal year which remains unexpired; and that letter is the answer which was received.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the attention of the Senate while the letter is read:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 5, 1852.

SIR: I have the honor to state, that the estimate prepared at this Department on the 29th ultimo, in compliance with your request of the 27th ultimo, was confined to the increased service contemplated for the half year, commencing on the first of January last, to supply the deficiencies of existing appropriation, compensation for said service at the rate of $33,000 per trip in lieu of the present amount. It is the intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, to substitute a new rate of compensation, under the contract for mail service between New York and Liverpool, from the 1st of January, 1852, and to authorize increased services from that date, then the estimate to supply the deficiency of the existing appropriations, furnished on the 29th ultimo, is erroneous, and should be as follows, viz: For thirteen trips at $33,000 each, $429,000. Deducting existing appropriation $192,500, the deficiency is $236,500.

It should also be noticed, that the annual estimates of this Department for the fiscal year ending upon the 30th of June, 1853, for mail services, were based upon the compensation fixed in the contract. If the compensation for mail services between New York and Liverpool, proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, is to be extended to the fiscal year above referred to, the estimate should be changed, and instead of $585,000, the sum asked for, there should be provided the sum of $858,000.

WILLIAM A. GRAHAM,
Secretary of the Navy.

To the Hon. Mr. BADGER, of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will now read to the Senate the rule which precludes amendments to general appropriation bills, unless there is an estimate:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate, during that session, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments, and no amendment shall be received, whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

At the last session of Congress, and at the previous session, after this rule was adopted, various amendments were made to general appropriation bills, in pursuance of estimates, furnished in answer to calls made by individual Senators upon their own application, and not included in the general estimates furnished from the Departments. The Senate, on that occasion, gave a construction to its own rule, that any estimate which was furnished, though procured by the application of an individual Senator, was such an estimate as justified them in making the appropriations. In this case, the Chair will advert to the fact, that this amendment is reported from a committee; whether that varies it or not, it is not for the Chair to say. The estimate which has just been read was made by the Secretary of the Navy, under a call from the Naval Committee. The Senate having decided in the manner which the Chair has stated, at a previous session, that estimates thus furnished brought the amendment within the rule, so that the appropriation could be properly made, it would not be for the Chair now to say that this estimate would not produce the same effect. And inasmuch as the Senate adopted that construction with a full knowledge of what they intended the operation and effect should be, the Chair will leave it for the Senate to say whether that is such an estimate as will authorize the amendment to be made, without any reference to the fact that it was reported by a committee.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall not make any speech on this subject; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this estimate is altogether conditional, that it is not a recommendation. I have always understood an "estimate" from a Department to mean a recommendation of a measure, and the statement of the amount of money necessary to carry that measure into execution. If the rule be construed so as to receive such a statement as this as an estimate, then it is in the power of any Senator, at any time, to procure just such an estimate, and move anything he may choose as an amendment upon an appropriation bill. If I wished to propose an amendment to a bill, and wanted an estimate for the purpose, I could address the head of a Department, and ask him how much it would cost, and I could go on with item after item, until I had loaded the bill down. If anything is an estimate, which any Senator may choose to get from the head of a Department upon a supposition—for this is from the Navy Department is only hypothetical—then anything may be offered as an amendment, by evasion, and in despite of this rule.

Mr. BADGER. It would be singularly unhappy for the dignity and authority of the Senate, and would serve to show, in a very clear and cogent manner, the folly of the Senate in fettering itself with that rule, if it would receive any interpretation that would preclude it from the consideration of this proposed amendment. There is no necessity to inquire whether the case supposed by the Senator from Arkansas exists—that any Senator can write to any head of a Department for information on any point, and move it as an amendment to any appropriation bill; for that is not like the case now submitted for the consideration of the Senate, nor anything like the case. But, if the Senator will permit me, I will say that even if his interpretation of the rule were adopted, it would be totally out of his power to load down an appropriation bill with amendments. He might move the amendments under such an interpretation, if he saw fit to do so; but without the consent of the Senate it would be impossible to include them in the bill.

What is the case as it now stands? The Senate learns that, in the course of last autumn, the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster General deemed it highly important, for national purposes, that the amount of service of the Collins line of steamers should be increased, and entered into an arrangement for the purpose of procuring the performance of the additional service which they considered necessary. The proprietors agree to perform the service and run the risk, whether Congress would sanction the agreement and pay them an increase of compensation, or a pro rata compensation, for the additional service. And now we learn from the report of the Postmaster General, that he recognizes this arrangement, and that, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, he recommends Congress to sanction it, and to make an adequate compensation. Now, in the practical operation of this Government, all appropriation bills originate in the House of Representatives—we originate nothing—and now we are told that, while we originate nothing, we can propose no addition to any appropriation bill that the House of Representatives may think fit to introduce, although we may approve a contract conditionally made by the head of a Department, although the proper head of that Department recommends us to assume and carry it into effect, and communicates to us the amount of money necessary to accomplish that object. Now, I would like to know what would be the condition to which the Senate would voluntarily degrade itself by the adoption of such an interpretation of that rule. Is it not manifest that the Senate will have very little else to do, whenever an appropriation bill comes up, than simply to pass whatever the House of Representatives may choose to send, without addition and without consideration? Why, suppose that this matter stands over to the general appropriation bill, what will be the effect? What has been done during the last two sessions? It is very well known to every member of this body that we have received the appropriation bills within the last two or three days of the session, and we are always warned by the Committee on Finance that they are assured by the committee of the other House that if the Senate make any amendment to the bill it will be lost; and we have been thus practically excluded from that jurisdiction over questions of this nature which are vested in the Senate by the Constitution; and thus it will be this session. Five months of the session have already passed away, and this is the only appropriation bill we have received. I know not whether the House of Representatives has passed another; but, judging of the future by the past, we may safely conclude that three months more will pass before we receive another. Now, if the Senate have not given any practical exposition of this rule, the considerations I have urged show that we cannot, with a due regard to our own dignity and authority, accept the interpretation given by the Senator from Arkansas.

But this is not the case. The Senate has construed the rule in the manner which the Chair has stated, over and over again, that that is an estimate which is furnished by the head of a Department, upon the call of an individual Senator upon his own responsibility. Now, we are told we must retrace our steps; that although we had tied ourselves with cords, we must now bind ourselves down with rivets of iron. We had narrowed our own action by a rule; and now we are told that we must narrow that rule so as to take away all discretion. I ask what can be entitled to our consideration under the rule, if this is not? An estimate came here from the head of a Department, having been called for by a committee of this body charged with the subject to which it relates; and upon that estimate, as a basis, the Committee on Finance report, and now we are told that we have no authority to consider it. If so, the sooner we abrogate the rule the better. If so, the sooner we relieve ourselves from the degrading position in which we are placed the better.

It is the same rule that we had at the last session and a part of the session before. No word has been added to it, and no word has been taken from it; what it meant then it means now. The Senate then settled what it meant, and I should be sorry to see the Senate now unsettle what it so wisely determined. The object of the rule was not to prevent anything from being brought to the consideration of the Senate, that was fairly and properly a fit subject for their consideration; it was to prevent individual Senators spontaneously bringing forward measures for an appropriation, founded upon no action of an Executive Department of the Government, in pursuance of no law, and having no estimate furnished.

I have doubted the propriety of any rule which should fetter the appropriate action of the Senate on questions of this character; and I am not willing to have my own hands tied, so as to prevent me from doing what I consider to be right. At all events, I hope we shall not now give such an interpretation to this rule, as will make it so positively mischievous as it would become by the interpretation now sought to be given to it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think that, if this question stands upon the basis which it is considered as standing upon by the Senator from North Carolina, it cannot be made to appear that the estimate furnished by the Department does not take it clearly out of the rule. I do not propose, however, to say anything with reference to that point. There is another consideration to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate.

It may be well for the Senate to consider what the Senate attempted contemporaneously with the adoption of this rule. What was the evil which it was designed to obviate by its adoption? When the appropriation bills were before us, private bills that had never had the sanction or investigation of any committee, measures that were wholly private were offered as amendments to the appropriation bills, because there was no rule to exclude them. That was the state of things existing in the Senate at the time of the adoption of this rule. Now, does the rule, when fairly considered, go beyond what it was necessary to correct in the then existing state of things? I think not.

If this were a case which called for an estimate from a Department, that estimate has been furnished. In my judgment, it is not a case which requires an estimate; and it would be in order if no estimate were offered. It is the report of a committee, as the Chair well remarked in his suggestions a few moments since. This bill comes from the other House, and it is referred to the appropriate committee of this body. There are various modes in which that committee may report on the bill to this body. If they please, they may report back the bill with whatever amendments they may see fit to incorporate in the original draft, retaining in their hands the original bill. That would be agreeable to parliamentary law, well recognized the world over. They have not seen fit to do so in this case, but have reported back the original bill with amendments.

Now, the rule, it is true, provides that "no amendment shall be offered." That means, in my judgment, that no individual Senator may rise in his place and offer an amendment, unless fortified by the recommendation that the rule requires. Such is not the case here; this is not an amendment of a Senator on this floor; it is not an amendment of the character designed to be excluded by the rule; but it is a report of a committee as much as if it had been reported in a new bill with an original draft—only in the one case, we should take the question on adopting all the amendments in one vote, while here we take them seriatim. That is my view of the case; and either on the ground that it is within the rule, and that we have an estimate, or on the ground that it is without the rule, it is not of a character designed to be affected by the rule; but is a report from the committee, and I shall vote for retaining it.

Mr. RUSK. We find ourselves engaged in a discussion on what I conceive to be a very important amendment, arrested by a motion to get clear of that amendment under a rule of the Senate. I think it would have been much better to have met the question fairly upon its merits, have gone through with the discussion, and voted upon its merits, if there had been the slightest doubt in the Senate; but, in my mind, there is not the slightest doubt with regard to the rule, and I think the reading of it will show that there can be no doubt about it:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments," &c.

Now, what is the paper which has been produced by the Senator from North Carolina, and read by the Chair? I do not understand the English language if it is not an estimate. You can offer an amendment, if it is in conformity with an estimate from the head of a Department, whether it is to carry out a law or anything else. That, then, is clearly and unconditionally an estimate. The rule prescribes, that with an estimate from the head of a Department, you may offer an amendment. What is the fact here? Here is an increased service upon a mail route recommended by the Postmaster General, and in the deficiency bill for this year, to meet the increased expenditure for that increase of the service, here is an amendment founded upon a legitimate estimate from the head of the Department. Is this not carrying out a law? If you choose to sanction an increase of service upon a mail route, do you make a new law? Not at all. You carry out the law, already in existence, to establish the mail route. Upon these considerations, then, there is in my mind no sort of question as to the amendment being strictly in order.

Mr. BORLAND. It may be very wrong to arrest a public measure on a question of order, and not on its merits; yet, sir, while I do not consider that precedents are always binding, but are to be followed or disregarded according to their reasonableness, I beg to call the attention of the Senate, and particularly of the Senator from Texas, [Mr. RUSK,] to the action of the Senate upon this very subject last year, when, upon a question of order raised by a Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. SOULE,] an amendment making an increased allowance for this very steam line was ruled out of order by a decision of the Chair, which decision, upon an appeal being taken from it, was sustained by the Senate. On the 3d of March of last year—the last day of the session—the Journal of the Senate bears the following record:

"On motion by Mr. PEARCE, to amend the bill by inserting at the end thereof—

"SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to pay E. K. Collins and his associates, for the further conveyance of the mails between New York and Liverpool, at the rate of $600,000 per annum: Provided, That the increase of compensation hereby allowed may at any time be discontinued by authority of Congress.

"A question being raised by Mr. SOULE, whether the proposed amendment was in order,

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore decided that the proposed amendment was not in order."

After some other action of the Senate had been taken, on motion again of Mr. PEARCE, to amend the bill in the same manner,

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore decided that the proposed amendment was not in order.

"From this decision an appeal was taken; and, on the question, 'Is the decision of the Chair correct?' it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 26, nays 24."

Then the yeas and nays were ordered on the motion of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] and they stand on the record.

In the Congressional Globe of that date we find, from the debate on the subject, that when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] proposed the amendment, Mr. SOULE raised the question of order, and the amendment was ruled out of order. Then, after some intervening business, Mr. PEARCE renewed the offer of his amendment, when the following took place:

"Mr. HUNTER. I rise to a question of order. This amendment was decided by the Senate to be out of order."

"The PRESIDENT. It is the same question which was decided by the Senate, in committee, to be out of order, and the Chair cannot entertain it."

When the question was first raised Mr. SOULE asked, "Has there been an estimate for this?" Mr. PEARCE replied:

"There have been letters received from the Secretary of the Navy. I do not know whether the Senate will consider the one which I now hold in my hand as a precise estimate. But it is a letter in which he states:

"Understanding from E. K. Collins, Esq., that the Committee on Naval Affairs propose to pay him at the rate of $600,000 per annum, I have the honor to suggest that if such be the determination of Congress, there will be needed a further appropriation of $200,000."

Here, in this letter, in answer to an inquiry as to what amount would be required if Congress agreed to give Mr. Collins the additional compensation, the Secretary of the Navy estimated $200,000. It is precisely such a case as we now have before us. Then, when it was proposed to give Mr. Collins the increased compensation, the Secretary of the Navy was inquired of and answered, 'If you propose to give the increased compensation, the estimate is $200,000 in addition. Now, when it is proposed again to increase the compensation for the same line, the same Secretary of the Navy is inquired of as to the necessary amount; and he says if you give the increase, it will cost so much in addition. That is the case before the Senate. Upon the question formerly presented, the President of the Senate decided the proposed amendment to be out of order, and upon an appeal, his decision was sustained by the Senate.

Mr. President, I desire to be consistent, as nearly as I can. I do not wish, humble as I am, to be considered as taking a position which has not some reason for it. I beg leave, therefore, to read a very short paragraph from the debate at the last session, in which I gave my views before voting to sustain the decision of the Chair. I said:

"I desire to state why I consider the decision of the Chair correct. Under the rule, I understand that no amendment to a general appropriation bill requiring an appropriation of money, can be made, unless it is accompanied by an estimate furnished by a Department, or unless it is an amendment which provides for the execution of a provision of a preëxisting law. Under no circumstances can an amendment be made providing for a private claim. Now, I think upon all three of these points this amendment is clearly excluded by the rule. In the first place, it comes in without an estimate from a Department. Secondly, it is not in compliance with a preëxisting law; and, in the third place, no one understands it to be anything but a private claim—a gratuity to an individual."

The last point then made, I shall not insist upon now. The others I do.

The Senator from Texas refers to the terms of the rule, and says that the amendment is in conformity with it. It seems to me that he does not look to the requirement of the rule, that an amendment, to be in order, shall be in "pursuance of an estimate," &c. Now, I apprehend that, in this instance, instead of the amendment being in "pursuance of an estimate," the reverse is true, and the so-called estimate has been made in pursuance of the amendment. The estimate has been furnished now, as it was done last year, when a similar proposition was made. There did not then come here, in the regular and legitimate order of proceeding, a recommendation or estimate from the head of a Department, as of a public measure; but the proposition was made at the instance of the individual who was to be the beneficiary of the appropriation. Then the estimate was sought and was made, in pursuance of a preëxisting purpose of making the amendment, and not the amendment made in pursuance of the estimate, as the rule requires. But, whether the rule be right in itself, or whether the action of the Senate last year was right under the rule or not, in the view of my honorable friend from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER]—and a favorite view it seems to be with him—by the precedent of the Senate's decision action, in a similar case, and for the sake of consistency, the position I have taken is fully sustained, and the proposed amendment is excluded by the rule.

Mr. DOUGLAS. My first impression was very clear that this amendment was out of order; but if the facts be as stated by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] I do not see how it can be held to be so. I understand him to make this statement of the facts: that during the recess of Congress, the Department entered into an arrangement with this company for extra mail service; and that, in the annual report to Congress, the head of the Department stated the fact, and recommended Congress to provide by law for carrying the arrangement into effect. Here, then, is a distinct recommendation for extra service and for such legislation as is necessary to carry the arrangement for that extra service into effect, including, of course, the necessary money to be appropriated for that purpose. But there was an omission in the recommendation on one point, and that was to state the specific amount of money which the Department needed to carry out the recommendation. The committee write to the Department to know how much is required to carry out the arrangement which had been entered into, and which they propose by this bill; and the Department answer it requires so much money. If the two facts taken together, first the arrangement, and secondly, the estimate of the amount, do not form a distinct recommendation, I am unable to comprehend the meaning of such a communication to Congress. The specific arrangement being first made, and the estimate of the amount subsequently sent in, makes as clear and as distinct a recommendation and estimate as it is in the power of a Department to make. Under that state of the facts—although I was at first of the impression that the amendment was out of order, and if I had then been called upon to vote should have so voted—I am now of the opinion that it is based upon an estimate, and is therefore in order.

Mr. BADGER. There is one slight misapprehension into which the Senator from Illinois has fallen, and that is this point: The recommendation of the Department in the beginning of the session was, that Congress should ratify this contract for increased service with such increase of compensation as they might deem adequate. The appropriation increased the compensation. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to which the subject was referred, called upon the Department to know what appropriation would be necessary to carry out the recommendation with the rate of increased compensation which we proposed to allow.

One word as to the precedent of the last session, to which my friend from Arkansas has referred. I voted with him to sustain the Chair in its decision at that time, but the case has no resemblance to the one now under consideration. Now, we are acting under a contract made in the recess by the head of a Department, and communicated in the report at the commencement of the session with the recommendation to the favorable consideration of Congress that such a rate of compensation as Congress might deem adequate should be allowed. A determination as to the rate of the additional compensation was made by a committee, and a call upon the head of a Department was made for information as to the sum necessary to be put in the deficiency bill in consequence of that contract, and confirmation, and increase of compensation; and we have the estimate. That is the case now before the Senate. What was the case at the last session? I remember the transaction well. On the last night of the session—all these important bills for two sessions, at least, have been disposed of in the Senate, I believe, on the last night of the session, some time about daylight in the morning, though still considered as a part of the preceding night—in the hurry and confusion, a Senator moved for an appropriation of $600,000 founded on no recommendation of a Department, upon no call of a committee, and upon no estimate except one in an answer to a private note written to the head of a Department by the Senator. It seems to me it is difficult to state the two cases without seeing their total and irreconcilable difference. I do not want to prolong this discussion. All I have to say is to repeat what I have said, that if the rule of the Senate, fairly interpreted, excludes the consideration of this amendment, it is high time the rule was altered.

Mr. GWIN. I think it has been made perfectly clear, not only by the argument of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] but by that of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] that the amendment is strictly in order. I take this ground, and I take it elsewhere, and I think it is correct, that there was no necessity for an estimate in this case at all; and that the Finance Committee can report any amendment to any appropriation bill of which a majority of that Committee are in favor. No other committee of the Senate can report an appropriation bill. The rule, under which the point of order is raised, was intended to limit the amendments that were offered to appropriation bills, and this limitation was looked upon at the time as being proper. When the estimate in this case was prepared, it was the intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs to have brought up an amendment upon it, because then the estimate was necessary; but subsequently, when the question was brought up in the Finance Committee—the committee that has a right to originate appropriation bills, the committee that could have originated this deficiency bill, or any other of that description brought before the Senate—there was no necessity for an estimate. We had a right to strike out the whole original bill after the enacting clause, and bring in a substitute for it, or bring in an entirely new bill. I take the ground that the Committee on Finance can bring in an appropriation bill. That is the view which I have taken of it, and which, I am sure, the Finance Committee have taken of it. We have had it under our serious consideration whether it was not our duty to bring in a portion of the appropriation bills, and not have them all thrust upon us at the close of the session as heretofore. With that view of the case, I have never entertained a doubt that the Committee on Finance have power at any time to make any appropriation, independent of any estimate.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair, in justice to himself, will take the liberty of stating to the Senate, that when this proposition was made at the last session, by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEABODY], and objected to, on the ground that there was no estimate, the Chair, without hesitation, decided that it could not be received, and that it was out of order, as it conflicted with the rule. That decision was sustained by the Senate. The letter that was afterwards produced by the honorable Senator, did not vary the case at all. It was simply a letter written to a Senator, hypothetical in its terms, making no estimate, in fact. The question here is one which the Chair, under ordinary circumstances, would have decided; but inasmuch, as he has stated already, the Senate, on several occasions, have decided that estimates furnished on calls of Senators, brought such an amendment within the rule, he feels unwilling to give a construction to it which would preclude the Senate practically from entertaining what they might believe to be in order, and within the rule which they have adopted. Although an estimate is not exactly made by the Postmaster General, in his report, yet he designates the arrangement which, if made, would involve this appropriation; but owing to the regulation mentioned by the Senator from North Carolina, the Committee on Naval Affairs had to apply to the head of the Navy Department, who furnished the paper which has been read. It is for the Senate to say whether, in conforming with the communication made by the head of the Post Office Department, and thus far carried out by the head of the Navy Department, it is not such an estimate as brings the amendment strictly in order, and within the rule that has been adopted. The Chair therefore preferred that the Senate should decide this question for itself, although ordinarily he does not feel disposed to shrink from the decision of any question that may be presented.

Mr. BRADBURY. As this question of order is one of some interest, I desire to submit a single suggestion. Is it not too late to make objection to the amendment?

Mr. MANGUM. The Chair has already decided that point.

The PRESIDENT. A question can only be made when an amendment comes up for consideration; for that is the first time it is properly presented to the body.

Mr. MANGUM. I desire to understand the Chair aright. Do I understand that the Chair considers the amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has left it to the Senate to decide under the rule which has been adopted, whether, under the circumstances of the case, the estimate said to have been furnished by the Navy Department, does not bring the amendment within the rule.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire that the Senate shall act understandingly hereafter upon all these matters, and I wish to settle the principle for my own government hereafter. I therefore call for the yeas and nays on the point.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRADBURY. As this is a question of some importance in guiding our action in future, it is desirable that our decision should be such as may not embarrass us. The rule to which reference has been made declares that "no amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received," &c. Now, do we receive an amendment which comes to us from a committee? If we do, have we not already received this amendment? The Committee on Finance have reported, as rule No. 34 authorizes them to do, an amendment to the bill, and that amendment has been received and printed. Therefore, is it a question whether we shall now receive it? It seems to me that this single view of the subject shows that the rule to which reference has been made, is confined to cases of amendments proposed by individuals, and not those coming from a committee. Otherwise, we might find ourselves in this dilemma: The House might omit, for instance, to provide any contingent fund for the Senate, and the Committee on Finance would be precluded from reporting and the Senate from considering, a proposition to provide that which is indispensably necessary. I therefore regard this as a matter entirely aside from one of those cases where no estimate is required.

The PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance in order? Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BORLAND. Before that question is taken, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to one thing. I did not observe it so closely at first as I have now. It seems to me that the case presented by this letter of the Navy Department, which is called an estimate, is of itself sufficient to show that the proposed amendment is not in order. The letter says:

"I have the honor to state, that the estimate prepared at this Department, on the 29th ultimo, in compliance with your request of the 27th ultimo, was confined to the increased service contemplated for the half year commencing on the 1st of January last, to supply deficiencies of existing appropriation, compensation for said services at the rate of $53,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance. If it be the intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate to substitute a new rate of compensation under the contract for mail service between New York and Liverpool, from the 1st of January, 1852, and to authorize increased service from that date, then the estimate to supply the deficiency of existing appropriations, furnished on the 29th ultimo, is erroneous, and should be as follows," &c.

It appears from that, that the estimate furnished by the Department was altogether for a different amount and for a different purpose. The Secretary says now, that if it be proposed to do something else, then it is necessary that we should give more money. He does not ask it. He does not recommend it. Our action here, if we adopt this amendment, will not be in pursuance of an estimate as the rule requires.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to say one word in regard to this being in pursuance of an estimate. Are we to be the mere registers of the decrees of the Departments? When a Department makes an estimate, can we not cut it down or increase it? If we are the mere registers of the decrees of the Executive Departments, then we must construe the rule to the very letter.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not wish to be misunderstood upon this subject. The Senator from Texas clearly misconceives the position which I took. I did not contend that we should be the mere registers of the decrees of the Executive Departments. I was merely following the rule which, so long as it is the rule, is the law by which we are to be governed. The Department does not ask this. I do not propose to limit myself to what they ask, but I say, as long as we have a rule, which excludes certain things from our legislation, I consider it our duty to adhere to that rule. If we choose to abolish it, very well. I do not know that I should much object to that; but while it is a rule we are bound by it, and I shall vote for sustaining it.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question again. The question is simply whether the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance is in order. Those who think it is in order will, as their names are called, answer "yea;" those who consider that it is not in order will answer "nay."

The question being taken resulted—yeas 29, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Berrien, Bradbury, Brooke, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Douglas, Downs, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Brodhead, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Mason, Morton, Sebastian, and Walker—12.

So the Senate decided that the amendment was in order.

On the motion of Mr. SEWARD, the further consideration of the bill was postponed until tomorrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 26, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY], on Monday last, that the rules of the House be suspended in order to enable him to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the select committee on public printing be directed to investigate the accounts of John H. Trenholm and William M. Belt, for printing executed in their names for the Senate and House of Representatives for the Thirty-first Congress, whether rendered before, during, or since the adjournment of that Congress.

Mr. STANLY. I propose to modify the resolution into a call upon the Secretary of the Treasury, and then the House can send it to whatever committee they please. I hope there will be no objection to it. I propose to modify the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury furnish this House with copies of all the accounts of John H. Trenholm, and of William M. Belt, for printing executed in their names for the Senate and House of Representatives for the Thirty-first Congress, whether rendered before, during, or since the adjournment of that Congress.

The question was then put to the House, and there were, on a division—yeas 64, nays 24; no quorum voting.

Mr. STANLY. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules. By the time the roll shall have been called through, the members will be in.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask the Chair what is the condition of the question now submitted to the House? Is it the original resolution pending?

The SPEAKER. The original resolution is withdrawn, and the resolution just read by the Clerk substituted in its place by the mover of the original resolution. It will be read again for the information of the House, if there is no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If I understand correctly, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] withdrew the original resolution, and asks for a suspension of the rules to admit the substitute which has been just read at the Clerk's table, which merely proposes to call upon the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the accounts of Trenholm & Belt for the public printing.

Mr. STANLY. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution for the information of the House.

The resolution substituted was read by the Clerk, as above inserted.

Mr. JONES. I wish to inquire of the Chair if these accounts are not on file in the Clerk's office—if they were not paid by the Clerk, and the accounts retained in his office, and never sent to the Secretary?

Mr. STANLY. I reckon not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to inform the gentleman.

Mr. GORMAN. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] that the accounts of Trenholm & Belt, and all other printers, are paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and are all filed in this House, and that the Secretary of the Treasury has them not on file, unless they were left there when the Clerk settled his accounts at the Treasury. I have no objection, however, to the resolution.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I presume that the information called for is already before the House, or it ought to be.

Mr. STANLY. Yes, ought to be.

Mr. BAYLY. It is before the House, I presume, and the question is, whether a resolution of this sort is to be introduced as an excuse for not acting upon the report of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STANLY. The question is, whether gentlemen intend to vote against this information to give them an excuse to Galphinize a hundred thousand dollars out of the Treasury, without the facts before the country.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. STANLY. If debate is right on one side, it is on the other.

Mr. BAYLY. I should like to say one word, merely.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALL. I object to all further debate.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 104, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, William Appleton, Averett, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bocoek, Bowie, Briggs, Brooks, Bushy, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clingan, Cobb, Cottman, John G. Davis, Dimmick, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Gentry, Giddings, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mann, Martin, McCorkle, McQueen, Meacham, Miller, Millson, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Murray, Nabers, Newton, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Pennington, Perkins, Phelps, Robbins, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scudder, Smart, Staley, Benjamin Stanton, Stone, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Venable, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Wells, Alexander White, Williams, Woodward, and Yates—104.

NAYS—Messrs. John Appleton, Ashe, Bragg, Thompson Campbell, Chastain, Churchwell, Curtis, Dean, Edmundson, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Hammond, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Robert W. Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, McNair, Morrison, Penn, Poik, Price, Skelton, Snow, Frederick P. Stanton, St. Martin, and Wilcox—31.

So the rules were suspended to allow the resolution to be introduced.

Mr. CASKIE asked the privilege of recording his vote, as he was without the bar when his name was called.

Objection was made, and his vote was not recorded.

Mr. CASKIE. If I had been permitted to vote, I should have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, was here recognized by the Chair.

Mr. STANLY. Am I not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. Unless it is a question of privilege, no person is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STANLY. I yield most explicitly to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to the floor if he has any motion to make.

Mr. BAYLY. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. STANLY. I yield to that.

Mr. JONES. Is the resolution before the House, before the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] offers it?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] is entitled to the floor, unless the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] rises to a privileged question.

Mr. BAYLY. I do rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the rules were suspended, on the ground that I hold in my hand a printed copy of the information for which the resolution calls.

Mr. STANLY. That is a mistake, and I hope the House will refuse to reconsider the vote.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] can move to reconsider the vote?

A Voice. On which side did he vote?

Mr. BAYLY. I voted in the affirmative, with the majority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts the right of the gentleman to move a reconsideration.

Mr. BAYLY. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to decide that the gentleman had not the right to make the motion.

Mr. BAYLY. But I withdrew my motion first.

Mr. STANLY. I offer the resolution, and, without detaining the House, I ask the previous question upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman and the House, that there is a rule requiring all resolutions calling upon the Departments for information to lie upon the table for one day. That rule must also be suspended before the resolution can be considered.

Mr. STANLY. I make the same motion to suspend that rule.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the resolution, and it was agreed to.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. STANLY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

PROPOSITION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a privileged question. It is a resolution which I ask may be read for information. It relates to the adjournment of this Congress at a given day.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, (with the concurrence of the Senate,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives close the present session of Congress, by an adjournment of their respective Houses, on Monday, the ——— day of August next, at the hour of twelve o'clock, m.

The SPEAKER. The resolution does not embrace a privileged question.

VIRGINIA MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution, which I have striven to introduce for the last eight weeks, providing for opening a land office in my county, in the State of Ohio, which has been closed since the 1st of January, because a bill, No. 6, lying upon our table, has not been passed. I hope there will be no objection. It will not detain the House five minutes.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. If my colleague would consent that the bill be reported to the House, and that I may have an hour or half an hour to state my objections to it, I shall have no objection to his introducing his resolution. Otherwise, I cannot consent, as I have objections to the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot consent to it.

The resolution was then read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 6, further to extend the time of locating the Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office, and that the same be put upon its passage.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move to suspend the rules of the House for the purpose of introducing the resolution.

The question was then taken, and there were, upon a division—yeas 81, nays 36.

So the rules were suspended, and the resolution was introduced.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question received a second.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. If this bill is to pass under the operation of the previous question, I wish to know how many gentlemen are in favor of it, and call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON], that the previous question is not called upon the passage of the bill, but only upon the adoption of the resolution, and after the resolution is adopted, the bill will come before the House for consideration.

The question was then taken on the demand for the yeas and nays, and they were not ordered.

Mr. BELL. I rise in order to ascertain the effect of this vote. If this resolution now passes to put the bill, named in it, upon its passage, will it cut off all debate?

The SPEAKER. It will not, unless the House cut off debate by the adoption of the previous question, when the bill is up.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The resolution was then again read, as above inserted, and adopted.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR. I now move to take up the bill entitled "A bill to further extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office," approved July 5th, 1848; and that the bill be put upon its passage.

I will detain the House but a single moment in explaining it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to suggest to the gentleman, that perhaps it would be as well to amend the bill, by striking out the words "the 1st of January, 1854." I suppose the Government intends to satisfy all those land warrants. If that modification is adopted, it will save the trouble of passing another bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not object to that; but I think it necessary to detain the House for a moment in stating the object of this bill, for many gentlemen, probably, are not familiar with the situation of our Virginia military district in Ohio. It is well known by gentlemen who have served in Congress, that a bill of this kind becomes necessary every few years, from the policy of the Government, which endeavors to bring about the entry and locating of the land in what is called the Virginia military land district, in the State of Ohio. In 1784, when this reservation was made, and at the time of the general cession of Virginia of the Northwestern Territory, there were about 4,000,000 of acres of land within that district. All those lands, save about 100,000 acres, have been entered and appropriated by Virginia land warrants, entered in the Virginia military district land office, in the town of Chillicothe, in the State of Ohio, which is an office under the General Government requiring frequent legislation here. The time has been extended for the last twenty or thirty years, two or three years at a time, with the hope that those lands would be appropriated. Many of them are of little value; some not worth twenty cents an acre, some worth less; some fifty cents or more; but still there remains about 80,000 or 100,000 acres of this land not surveyed; and for the want of action on this bill, the land office of that district has been closed against the entering of the lands, since the 1st day of last January. I will state, Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, that this bill has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands to this House, and is in the exact words of the bills repeatedly passed heretofore by Congress. Its only object is, to keep the land office open there, to enable the persons holding Virginia military land warrants to enter them, until some final disposition may be made of these lands.

I am aware of the objection of my colleague, [Mr. STANTON], and am sorry that I cannot accommodate him. His object is to prevent litigation in the district. There has been a vast deal of conflict between persons entering these warrants; but if we close the land office, I do not think he would accomplish his object; for persons will litigate about their titles, and the boundaries of their land. I do not think he ought to desire to close this office in the State of Ohio, and leave 60,000 or 100,000 acres of land unsurveyed. It is the only portion of public land in the State unsurveyed, while it is subject only to entry by persons holding Virginia military land warrants. The land, which was of little value, is growing more valuable, as the settlement increases. I will state, that within the last four years, under a bill similar to this, 100,000 acres have been appropriated by persons holding Virginia land warrants; and the only object of this bill is to enable the holders of such warrants to continue to locate them so far as they desire. I believe, during the progress of this session, another bill will be introduced, probably by some of my friends from Virginia, contemplating the entire relinquishment of the residue of the land of this Virginia military land district, so far as it is inappropriate, to the United States, or to the State of Ohio, upon certain conditions, which shall have my cooperation when it comes up. That will afford my colleague ample opportunity to make his hour's speech. I do not wish to detain the House further, and will conclude by calling for the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will permit me to make a proposition to him. I desire to offer an amendment to that bill, which I think will obviate the objection I have to it; and for that purpose I submit a proposition that the bill be committed to a select committee to consist of three.

Mr. TAYLOR. Submit your amendment now.

Mr. STANTON. Let it be submitted to the investigation of a select committee, of which the gentleman and myself shall constitute members. We may agree upon an amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. Have your amendment read.

Mr. STANTON. I have not yet prepared it. The character of the amendment I desire should be made to the bill is this: That the vacant land shall be surveyed, laid out in sections and fractional sections by the surveyor of the district, and that the location shall be confined to the lands so surveyed; thereby to prevent locations upon lands which have been once bought and paid for, and now in the hands of actual settlers. That is the amendment I desire to ingraft upon the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw my call for the previous question, for the purpose of replying to my colleague.

Mr. STANTON. The gentleman will not allow me to make an explanation, and yet withdraws the call to make one himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is from no discourtesy to my colleague. I wish simply to state that he appears desirous of amending this bill in such a manner as that the United States surveyors shall lay off these lands in sections, according to the present mode of laying off the public lands. That is impracticable. The system of surveys adopted under the cession making this reservation, is entirely different from the general land survey system of the United States; a system which authorizes anybody holding a warrant to locate it where he pleases. Until an entire supervision and revision of the laws making this grant and reservation shall be made, it is impossible to change the present system. The Government has, at the present time, a land office in that district. Certainly, it is not the desire of Congress to shut it up! And this is the only system by which the lands may now be appropriated. It seems to me to be a plain matter. It is a very ample one; I ask no change, but merely that the land office may be kept open. I now renew the call for the previous question.

Mr. STANTON. I wish to make an explanation why the bill should not be passed, and I appeal to the House to vote down the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

The question recurred, Shall the main question be now put? And on a division, there were—ayes 55.

Mr. TAYLOR called for tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. TAYLOR, of Ohio, and STANTON, of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was again put to the House, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 74, noes 43.

Mr. STANTON. I hope the House will indulge me in having the yeas and nays upon the question, which I demand.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was again put, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Averett, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bocoek, Brooks, Chandler, Chapman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Cottman, Dean, Dockery, Duane, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hart, Haws, Haveu, Hendricks, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Geo. W. Jones, Kuhns, Landry, Martin, McDonald, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Polk, Porter, Price, Riddle, Schermerhorn, Origen S. Seymour, Snow, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Strother, Taylor, Thurston, Venable, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Wells, Addison White, and Williams—80.

NAYS—Messrs. John Appleton, Bell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chas. rain, John G. Davis, Dimmick, Doty, Fowler, Freeman, Giddings, Grow, Hascall, Hibbard, Hillyer, Jno. W. Howe, Ingersoll, Jenkins, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Geo. G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Mann, McCorkle, McNair, Milson, Molony, Murray, Nabers, Penniman, Perkins, Phelps, Robbins, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, St. Martin, Sweetser, Townsend, Walbridge, and Wilcox—44.

So the main question was ordered to be put.

The question now being upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time—

Mr. STANTON. I ask of the House ten minutes to make a few remarks on the bill. When I have occupied that much time, the Speaker's hammer may fall. As a statement has been heard in favor of the bill, I trust one will be heard against the bill. This is a question in which my constituents are deeply interested.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. TAYLOR. I object. I shall require ten minutes to explain it. I have no objection, however, to the gentleman's proceeding, provided I have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. STANTON. That will meet entirely with my consent.

A VOICE. Let them have ten minutes each.

The question was put to the House whether the gentlemen should have ten minutes each to speak to the bill, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON then said: Mr. Speaker, it is not without much hesitation and doubt that I have been able to come to a conclusion as to what course it was my duty to pursue in relation to this bill.

Laws, like the one now under consideration, have so long passed almost as a matter of course, without opposition from any member who has heretofore represented any part of the Virginia military district in Ohio, that I feel very reluctant to oppose its passage. But after much reflection, and upon consultation with some of the most intelligent citizens of my district, I have come to the conclusion that it is my duty to do so. As the subject is purely local in its character, it cannot be supposed that members from other States are familiar with the subject; and I must, therefore, beg the indulgence and attention of the House for a short time, to state the grounds of my opposition.

The bill proposes to grant further time to the holders of Virginia military bounty land warrants to locate their warrants. I oppose it; in the first place, because I believe it will have a tendency to disturb locations made many years ago, and interfere with existing titles. Very near one half of the district, which I have the honor to represent here, is within the Virginia military reservation, between the Little Miami and Scioto rivers. This territory, as I shall notice more fully hereafter, was reserved by the State of Virginia in her deed of cession, to satisfy bounty land claims that were outstanding against her in favor of her troops who served in the Virginia line on Continental establishment in the war of the Revolution. The great body of the lands, in the portion of the district which I represent, were located and surveyed between the date of the Greenville treaty, 1795, and the year 1815, a period of twenty years. That portion which lies north of the Greenville treaty line was not subject to location until the 4th of July, 1819, but was nearly all located and surveyed within the next five years.

And I doubt whether there is now an acre of vacant land in my district. And hence gentlemen may think it strange that I should be opposed to further locations. The difficulty is, that these lands are now very valuable, generally well improved, and highly cultivated. And hence the holders of these warrants are very anxious to make vacancies where there are none. From what I have stated, it will be recollected that the great body of these lands has been located from thirty-seven to fifty-seven years. These locations almost uniformly cover from ten to fifty per cent. more land than the entries, surveys, and patents call for. The lines, when measured upon the ground, are uniformly longer than the lines called for in the patent. The original corner and line trees are very generally lost, either from time and accident, or in clearing up the lands. The witnesses who can identify the corners, and testify where they originally stood, are fast passing to that "bourn from whence no traveler returns." The owners have neglected to perpetuate the evidence of their existence in any authorized and legal manner. So far as boundary conflicts between neighbors are concerned, the lines can generally be established by reputation, and very soon they will all be settled by the statute of limitations.

But when they have to contend with recent entries, surveys, and patents, lapse of time only makes it worse. The difficulty of establishing ancient boundaries is increased, and the statute of limitations does not run against the Government.

These warrants are generally held by gentlemen who reside in the district represented by my colleague who introduces this bill, and where the surveyor's office is kept. They have spent their whole time in dealing in Virginia military lands, have daily access to the records, and are thoroughly familiar with every survey in the district.

They know what surplus there is in every survey, and generally contrive to find out what corners are destroyed. And they very well understand the principle of law, that when a corner is lost, and its original position cannot be established by proof, that the boundaries of the survey must be established by running again, and accurately, the courses and distances called for in the original survey and patent.

This will almost uniformly leave from two hundred to three hundred acres of vacant land for each survey of one thousand acres. A warrant is forthwith laid upon it, a survey made in some lawyer's office, calling for the corners of the adjoining surveys, and a patent issued. A deed is thereupon made to some gentleman in another State, who is totally ignorant of the whole transaction, and an action of ejectment brought in the United States circuit court. And, as a general rule, it is of very little consequence whether the suit can be sustained or not; for, in nine cases out of ten, the farmer who is sued is not able to encounter the expense of a litigation in that court. If he prosecutes the case to a trial he is ruined, whether he fails in his suit or not. He is, therefore, very glad to get off by paying $5 or $10 per acre for the land in controversy, by way of compromise. This is the state of things there at present. I hope the next generation may see the end of it. If these locations are stopped now, the end will probably come in a quarter of a century. But it will never come so long as these locations are allowed. Time only aggravates the evil, by increasing the difficulty of establishing ancient boundaries.

In 1804, an act of Congress was passed, giving to the holders of the warrants three years to "complete their locations." Undoubtedly, the primary object of this law was to dispose of the residue of the lands in this district after the military warrants were satisfied. But I think it may also be fairly presumed that it was also intended, like all other statutes of limitations, to be a statute of repose—to prevent previous locators from being disturbed by new locations, after the landmarks of the original location should be destroyed. There is no more propriety in passing this law than there is in passing a law to relieve any other class of persons from the operation of the statute of limitations.

The lands upon which they propose to make their locations, I presume have been there ever since their rights accrued, though I am aware that their rights are very ancient, and will not undertake to speak with certainty on that point. I know it is said that they have a just claim to these lands, and that they ought not to be deprived of them. If the justice of their claim were admitted, there is no more injustice in this than in all other cases where a State claim is barred by the statute of limitations.

By the laws of Virginia, the soldiers entitled to land bounties from that State were required to exhaust the good lands in the district set apart for them, in what is now the State of Kentucky, before resorting to the lands reserved in her deed of cession between the Little Miami and Scioto rivers. But the statesmen of Kentucky, with a sagacity and foresight that does them infinite honor, provided, in their compact with Virginia, that no warrants should be located in Kentucky after the year 1792. And although Kentucky has passed through an ordeal of litigation in regard to titles to real estate, that has probably done more than all other causes combined to retard her prosperity, yet, if I am correctly informed, it is now almost, if not entirely, at an end. And I also understand, that she owes her exemption from this calamity at this time, mainly if not entirely to the lapse of time, and to the operation of the statute of limitation. But I undertake to say, that if the time for locating land warrants in Kentucky had been extended from that time until this, as it has been in Ohio, she would still have been harassed with litigation, arising out of recent locations and patents.

Every civilized country has found statutes of limitation, as to the title to real estate, indispensable to the security and repose of its people. And I see no reason why the people of the Virginia military district should, by these extraordinary extensions of time to the holders of Virginia military land warrants, be deprived of the wholesome and beneficial influence of such laws. But I deny the justice of the claims that are now outstanding, and propose to show that the warrants that are now unsatisfied, have been improvidently issued. To do this, a brief history of the origin of these warrants will be necessary, for the information of many gentlemen here who cannot be supposed to be familiar with the subject. During the revolutionary war, the State of Virginia furnished to the Continental army sixteen regiments of troops, which were called the Virginia Line on Continental Establishment.

She also raised three regiments for the more immediate defense of the State, which were under the control of the State authorities, and were called the "State Line."

She also furnished some twenty or twenty-five small vessels-of-war, that were called the "State Navy," which were estimated as being equal to one regiment of land forces.

She also furnished several "Partisan corps," such as "troops of cavalry," "battalions and legions of infantry," and artillery companies, which were estimated to be equal in the aggregate to two regiments, making twenty-two regiments.

At the earnest solicitations of the Continental Congress and General Washington, she held out the strongest inducement to her people to enter the service, by offering large bounties in land to such as would enlist and serve for three years, or during the war.

The Legislature of the State of Virginia, by various laws, running from the year 1778 to 1784, provided the following bounties for her officers and soldiers who had or should enlist, and serve for the term of three years, or during the war:

To a Major General .....	15,000 acres.
To a Brigadier General.....	10,000 "
To a Colonel.....	5,000 "
To a Lieutenant Colonel.....	4,500 "
To a Major.....	4,000 "
To a Captain.....	3,000 "
To a Subaltern.....	2,000 "
To a non-commissioned officer..	400 "
To a soldier or sailor.....	200 "

for those who served during the war.

For those who served during three years:

To a non-commissioned officer...	200 acres.
To a soldier or sailor.....	100 "

As to commissioned officers, there seems to have been no distinction made between those who served three years, and those who served during the war. The heirs of any officer or soldier who died in the service, were entitled to the same bounties their ancestor would have been if he had served during the war.

Warrants were to be issued by the Governor upon proof of service. In May, 1779, a tract of country bounded by Green river, the Cumberland mountain, the Carolina (now Tennessee) line, the Tennessee river, and the Ohio river, was set apart by the Legislature of Virginia to satisfy these warrants.

In November, 1781, a further tract, included within the Mississippi, Ohio, and Tennessee rivers and the Carolina line, was granted for the same purpose, which was said to be in lieu of a part of the former tract, which had fallen to Carolina in the extension of the Carolina line westward.

In 1774, Virginia ceded to the United States all the land claimed by her, lying northwest of the Ohio river, reserving the lands lying between the Little Miami and Scioto rivers, to satisfy any unsatisfied balance of land that might be due to the soldiers of the Virginia line on Continental establishment, after exhausting the Kentucky reservation. An examination of the phraseology of this reservation, will show that neither the Legislature of Virginia, nor the Congress by which the deed was accepted, considered it at all probable that there would be any deficiency in the Kentucky reservation. And the only contingency, it will be observed, which it was supposed could possibly create a deficiency, was, "should the North Carolina line bear in further upon the Cumberland lands than was expected," and deficiency thus be created, it was to be satisfied from the Ohio reservation. There is something singular about this. Three years before an additional grant had been made in Kentucky, for the reason that the North Carolina line had then been extended, so as to include a part of the original grant. It is a little remarkable, therefore, how there could then have been any uncertainty about the Carolina line.

It is worthy of remark, also, that the deed of cession was executed after the close of the war, when the authorities of the State of Virginia must have been able to ascertain, with very considerable certainty, what amount of land would be necessary to satisfy the legal claims of her officers and soldiers. It seems, that very soon after the execution of the deed of cession, and before the deficiency of the Kentucky reservation was ascertained, locations commenced on the Ohio side of the river. But Congress, still satisfied that the Kentucky lands were sufficient, passed a joint resolution in July, 1788, declaring all locations between the Little Miami and Scioto rivers, in Ohio, void, until the deficiency in the Kentucky reservation was ascertained and established. Soon after this, the superintendent of the surveys reported to the Executive of the State of Virginia, that the deficiency of good lands on the southeast side of the Ohio, contemplated by the deed of cession, had been ascertained, and an act of Congress was passed, August 10, 1790, legalizing the locations that had been made, and prescribing the mode of perfecting the title. This law also required the Secretary of War to furnish the Governor of Virginia with a list containing the names of the officers and privates of the Virginia troops, and the aggregate amount of acres to which they were entitled. It is believed that this list was furnished; but the original, from which it was taken, was destroyed in 1801, when the War Office was burned. A copy, however, was furnished by the auditor of the State of Virginia to the Secretary of War, and is still on file in the Pension Office.

In 1804, Congress acting, doubtless, upon the supposition that very nearly all who were entitled to warrants had had them issued and located, passed an act, requiring all claims to be located within three years, and prohibiting further locations after that time. In 1807, when this law was about to bring these locations to a close, it was represented that there were still a few claims not satisfied; and as there was no provision of law authorizing their location elsewhere, these warrants would be entirely worthless. An extension of two years was then given.

These periodical extensions have been continued every two or three years from that time to the present. And it is worthy of remark, that the annual issue of warrants from 1810 to 1816 was diminishing rapidly every year, the amount issued in 1810 being 119,456 acres, and in 1816, 773 acres.

The issues again commenced to increase, and warrants were issued in large quantities until 1825, when they were again reduced to 200 acres against 36,177 acres in 1822, and 60,980 acres in 1824. The explanation of this will probably be found in the fact, that in 1816 nearly all the good land, then subject to location, had been located. But by the treaty of Fort Meigs in 1818, the lands north of the Greenville treaty line were ceded to the United States, about 500,000 acres of which were within the Virginia military reservation in Ohio, which became subject to entry and survey after July 4, 1819. Between July, 1819, and 1825, these lands were nearly all exhausted. And we find but few warrants issued from 1825 to 1830. In 1830 an act of Congress passed, authorizing the issue of 310,000 acres of scrip to satisfy warrants that were alleged to be still outstanding and unsatisfied. In 1832 a further issue of 300,000 acres was authorized. In 1833 a still further amount of 200,000 acres, and in 1834 one of 650,000. In 1829 the issue of land warrants had been reduced to 1,589 acres for that year. During the issue of this scrip, new warrants were issued as follows:

In 1830.....	112,700 acres.
In 1831.....	176,618 "
In 1832.....	239,337 "
In 1833.....	158,917 "
In 1834.....	425,994 "
In 1835.....	162,208 "

In the law of 1834, liberal as the appropriation was, and sufficient—as they were assured it would be—to satisfy all claims, Congress seems, from some experience of the recent miraculous increase of these warrants, to have determined to avoid further applications for the future by providing that this grant should be in full of all outstanding claims. And to provide for the possibility of a deficiency, it required the holders of warrants to file them with the Commissioner of the General Land Office before the 1st of September, 1834; that no warrants should be satisfied before that time; and that, if there was on file warrants covering more than 650,000 acres, that they should be satisfied ratably. When the time arrived, it appeared that warrants for some 710,000 acres were filed, of which the appropriation of 650,000 acres of scrip satisfied about ninety per cent.

From that time up to 1845, application was made at about every session of Congress for further issues of scrip in satisfaction of these warrants. At the first session of the Twenty-sixth Congress the subject was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. The whole subject was thoroughly investigated by that committee, and two reports made; one by the honorable Hiland Hall, of Vermont, for the majority, and one by John Talliaferro for the minority. Both sides of the question are fairly presented by these reports, and an appendix to each presents a large amount of documentary evidence in support of the views which they respectively present.

Mr. Hall reports against any further issue of scrip, upon the distinct ground that all the just claims for bounty lands to the Virginia troops had been satisfied, and that the outstanding warrants had been improperly issued. The report of Mr. Hall was sustained by the House, and the bill for the further issue of scrip was defeated. These reports will be found in volume two of Reports of Committees of the first session of the Twenty-sixth Congress, No. 436. The subject was again brought before the House at the second session of the Twenty-seventh Congress, and referred to a select committee, of which a distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLEY,] now a member of this House, was chairman. Mr. Hall, of Vermont, was a member of the committee, and made a report which purports to be the report of the entire committee, enlarging upon his former report, and coming to the same conclusion. He was again sustained by the House. This will be found in volume five, Reports of Committees of the second session of the Twenty-seventh Congress, No. 1,063.

Another effort was made to procure a law authorizing the issue of additional scrip, at the first session of the Twenty-eighth Congress. It was now referred to the Committee on Public Lands, from which a very elaborate report was made by Mr. Hubard, of Virginia, in favor of the passage of the law. The House, however, refused to sustain the report, and the bill was defeated. This report will be found in volume two of Reports of House Committees, first session, Twenty-eighth Congress, No. 457.

In these reports, Mr. Hall labored to establish the proposition, that the warrants which had then been issued and satisfied, covered a larger amount of land than the Virginia troops could by possibility have been entitled to.

The difficulty was, to ascertain with precise accuracy the number of the troops who were entitled to bounty lands. The rolls of the revolutionary army do not show the time of service, and hence it was impossible to ascertain with precise accuracy, what proportion of the Virginia troops were entitled to bounty lands by the Virginia laws, which required three years' service, or until the end of the war. The heirs of those who died or were killed in the service, were also entitled, when the enlistment was for three years.

The amount of pay was resorted to by Mr. Hall as furnishing an approximation. But this would be defective, so far as the claims of those who died or were killed in service were concerned. For no matter how short the actual service, or how small the amount of pay may have been, if the enlistment was for three years, the heirs of the soldier would be entitled to pay.

There is, however, a "pay roll" in the Pension Office, which includes all the troops of the Virginia line, who received pay to any amount for their services. This, it is presumed, includes the whole of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia troops who were mustered into the service during the war of the Revolution. This is the roll furnished to the Governor of the State of Virginia, under the act of Congress of August, 1790.

Believing that this list might aid me in arriving at correct results on this subject, I called on the Commissioner of Pensions for a statement of the aggregate number of the officers and soldiers of the sixteen regiments composing the Virginia line on Continental establishment. He informs me in reply that there were 2 major generals; 13 brigadier generals; 47 colonels; 31 lieutenant colonels; 55 majors; 372 captains; 440 lieutenants; and 258 non-commissioned officers.

Making an aggregate of 1,218 officers; and that there were 8,459 soldiers—making a grand total of 9,677 troops.

It will be obvious, however, that of this number there must have been a very large proportion who did not serve the time required to entitle them to bounty land. But supposing them all to have been entitled, the result would be as follows:

2 Major Generals, one only of whom has received bounty lands.....	15,000 acres.
13 Brigadier Generals, only six of whom have received bounty lands.....	60,000 "
47 Colonels received 6,666 $\frac{2}{3}$ acres each.....	312,333 $\frac{1}{2}$ "
31 Lieutenant Colonels received 5,000 each.....	155,000 "
55 Majors received 5,333 $\frac{1}{3}$ acres each.....	293,333 $\frac{1}{3}$ "
372 Captains received 4,000 acres each.....	1,508,800 "
555 Subalterns received 2,666 $\frac{2}{3}$ acres each.....	1,479,963 $\frac{1}{3}$ "
143 Non-commissioned officers received 400 acres each.....	57,200 "
8,459 Privates received 100 acres each....	845,900 "
Making an aggregate of.....	4,722,730 "

Which would satisfy the claims of all the troops of the Virginia line on Continental establishment, as well those who were entitled as those who were not, except one Major General and seven Brigadier Generals, for whose services no warrants have ever been issued, probably because they had not served the time required to entitle them to bounty lands.

I am aware that officers who served six consecutive years, and till the end of the war, were entitled to one sixth, in addition to the amount originally granted, upon which the foregoing computation is based. And also that soldiers, who enlisted for the war, and served until its close, were entitled to two hundred acres, instead of one hundred. But no one who has the slightest knowledge of the times, and of the difficulties which the armies of the Revolution encountered on account of short enlistments and time of service, can suppose for a moment that the amount to be added for these two classes of cases can be anything like equal to the amount to be deducted for those who served less than three years.

I know it has been claimed that there was a larger number of troops than I have stated; but I am wholly at a loss to imagine how there could have been a larger number of men in the service than is found upon the pay rolls. This would give six hundred and five men to each of the sixteen regiments. And this is quite as large an average as we have any reason to suppose was ever in the service. As to the term of service, there can be no doubt; but a large proportion of those found upon the pay rolls served for a period short of three years, and were not entitled to bounty lands.

Prior to October, 1776, Virginia passed laws authorizing the raising and embodying of eleven regiments, one battalion, six troops of horse, and nineteen companies of infantry, all for terms less than three years. How many of these were actually raised, or what proportion of those actually raised went into the State line, and what proportion into the Continental line, it is difficult to ascertain; but there is no doubt many of them must have gone into the Continental line; and none of these troops would be entitled to bounty land by virtue of their enlistment and service under those laws.

There is no doubt but many who entered the service under these laws, renewed their enlistment at the expiration of their term of service, and ultimately became entitled to bounty land; and I suppose it is equally certain that many left the service at the expiration of their term, and never became entitled to land; but they are all on the pay roll, and included in the aggregate which I have given.

Chief Justice Marshall gave it as his opinion, in 1836, that there must have been an average of five hundred persons for each of the sixteen continental regiments who were entitled to bounty land. This would leave one hundred and five for each regiment who were not entitled to it. And when the condition of the army at Valley Forge, in the winter of 1777-'8, is considered, almost reduced to a skeleton by desertion, expiration of the terms of service of the men, and the resignation of the officers, it is believed that the estimate of the Chief Justice will be considered liberal.

But, leaving all these considerations out of view, and supposing every officer and soldier found upon the pay rolls entitled to bounty land for three years' service, and their claim will amount, in the aggregate, as I have said, to 4,722,730 acres.

They have already received, in land warrants, located in Kentucky and Ohio, and in land scrip issued under various acts of Congress, and applied to the satisfaction of their warrants, as follows, to wit:

Warrants located in Kentucky.....	724,045 acres.
Warrants located in Ohio.....	3,620,848 "
Scrip.....	550,225 "

Making an aggregate of.....4,944,118 "

being 221,338 acres more than the whole rank and file of the Continental troops could by any possibility ever have been entitled to. There is also on file in the General Land Office 85,000 acres of unsatisfied warrants, besides those that are in the hands of individuals. The inquiry at once arises, how it can be possible that the State of Virginia should ever have issued warrants that were wholly unauthorized, for such an immense quantity of land. To this I answer: first, that any system which authorizes one government to adjudicate claims that are to be paid by another, is radically wrong, and fatally, and almost necessarily, begets a loose mode of doing business, and inevitably leads to fraud and imposition on the part of claimants. The rules of evidence are relaxed to meet what are supposed to be hard cases, and the door is opened to all manner of imposition. It will be found that these results have, in fact, followed. During the war of the Revolution, and for many years after, a warrant could only be issued to an officer upon the certificate of a general officer of the line, stating the term of service of the applicant, and the regiment or corps in which he served. In 1816, this law was repealed, and the Executive was authorized to issue the warrants when "satisfactory evidence was adduced." Since that law, warrants have been issued upon ex parte affidavits of the most vague and unsatisfactory character. I do not charge that the State of Virginia, or her citizens, have acted differently from what any other State or people would have done under the circumstances. The whole system of granting and locating warrants, is radically and fatally defective; and nothing but fraud and imposition could possibly grow out of it. All I ask is, that inasmuch as the right to locate these warrants is now barred by the statute of limitations, that they shall not be relieved by further legislation. This, as well as all other statutes of limitation, proceeds upon the presumption, that if a man does not assert his claim within a reasonable time, it is because he is conscious of its injustice. The rights of these claimants accrued near seventy years ago. They have had from that time to the present to assert them.

Forty-eight years ago a law was passed requiring them to assert them within three years, or they should be forever barred. Since that they have been indulged with an extension of time for forty-five years. I submit, that in reason and common sense, as well as in law, if there are any such claims outstanding, they will be presumed to be unjust. The proofs which I have submitted fortifies this presumption so strongly that it amounts to demonstration.

But my colleague says there is a large amount of vacant land in his district, and that his constituents are interested in having it settled and brought into cultivation. It was undoubtedly contemplated at the time of the execution of the deed of cession by Virginia to the United States, and for many years afterwards, that there would be a large amount of vacant and unappropriated land in this reservation after satisfying the Virginia troops. It was mainly with the view of bringing these lands into market, and making them subject to private entry, like other Government lands, that the act of 1804, and subsequent acts requiring the soldiers to complete their locations within a short period, were passed. And if Congress shall refuse a further extension of time for making these entries and surveys, it will undoubtedly be our duty to provide for having them surveyed, and subject to entry and sale, like other Government lands. A bill has passed in the Senate to cede to the State of Ohio the unsold public lands lying in that State; and if the House shall refuse to pass this bill, these lands ought to be included in that cession.

That the lands are of scarcely any value, either to the State or the nation, is abundantly evident from the fact that they lie in the neighborhood of some of the oldest settlements in the States and have been subject to appropriation by Virginia military land warrants, worth from thirty to fifty cents per acre, for sixty years. I care very little, therefore, what becomes of the land. My main objection to this bill is, the effect of the extension of the time to make these locations upon existing titles in my own district. I will say to my colleague, if he is very anxious to have these huckleberry knobs in Pike and Adams counties subjected to the warrants that are still outstanding, I will interpose no objection if he will so modify his bill as to keep his land-sharks from devouring my constituents. If he will so modify it as to confine the locations to certain counties in the district, or if he will provide for having the vacated lands surveyed by some disinterested public surveyor, within a limited time, into sections and fractional sections, and such other subdivisions as are now provided for the public lands, and confine future locations to the lands so surveyed, I shall interpose no objection to the passage of the bill. But I assure my colleague that he will be very fortunate if he gets it passed in its present form during this Congress.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am very sorry to detain the House. I do not wish to occupy much of the time of this House, as it seems to me to be a plain matter. The Committee on Public Lands investigated this matter as early as January, and reported a bill to this House, unanimously, to extend the time for locating the warrants in this district. I thought it was unnecessary to place this bill upon the Calendar, and hoped very much that the chairman of the Land Committee would have asked that it might be passed, when it was first reported. Since the 1st day of January, the Virginia military land office in the district which I have the honor to represent, has been closed against the entering of public lands for the want of some action of Congress upon this bill. My friend and colleague [Mr. STANTON] intimates here, that my constituents have sent a private surveyor up to his district to molest his constituents. He ought in candor to have stated to the House that this surveyor is a surveyor of the United States—an office created more than sixty years ago—and the surveyor holding the title of surveyor general of the Virginia military district, appointed under law by the President. He holds an important office there, preserving the land titles of millions of acres. The county in which my colleague lives is situated some one hundred miles from where I reside. It does seem to me improper for the gentleman to insinuate that this public surveyor, of your public lands in this district, is carrying on a system of fraud and speculation upon those lands. It is true, that many of the old surveys were irregularly made. Conflicts about lines and titles have arisen in my colleague's county, as well as my own, and it has been a fruitful source of litigation. But does the gentleman suppose, that by closing the land office, and preventing persons not only in my part of the country, but in Virginia, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, and elsewhere, who own Virginia military land warrants, from entering the balance of these lands, he can accomplish his purpose and prevent litigation? Surely, as a lawyer, he will not advocate such a proposition here. Suppose some individual should claim 1,500 acres, in what he called 1,000 acre entry, and some other person, with a warrant recently issued, finds himself without the means of satisfying that warrant, and upon investigating the claim, finds an old entry for more than the warrant called for, or finds a vacant space between him and some subsequent locator: I ask if the gentleman would restrain him from entering the land warrant, and testing his rights in the courts of justice of that State? You cannot prevent litigation by closing this land office; and it would be improper to have it closed.

Mr. HALL. I understand the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON], who preceded the gentleman, to state that if this bill should pass, the titles in his district would be disturbed. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] if an individual who located a warrant for 1,000 acres under a previous law, does not hold it beyond the power of interference of this or any law heretofore passed?

Mr. TAYLOR. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HALL. It is, then, as I understand it, that if an individual locates a 1,000 acre warrant, he cannot by any possibility get 2,000 acres?

Mr. STANTON. It is the purchaser under him—the man who is holding it, and who does not know whether it was a 1,000 acre warrant under which the location was made, or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. I admire the zeal of my colleague in his desire to prevent litigation amongst his constituents, by shutting up the land office of my district. It might be of great convenience, but I presume that this House is not ready to say that we shall shut up a land office where there are nearly 100,000 acres of land not yet surveyed, and where that land is only liable to be entered and surveyed, under a system of legislation which has been in existence for sixty years. I should be perfectly willing, if the members of the House generally understood the situation of that district, to sit down, and trust to the good sense of the House to pass this bill. I am sorry to hear my colleague intimating that the surveyor general of the Virginia military district, in Ohio, a public officer who has been fifteen or twenty years in office, and whom I believe to be every way a respectable and trustworthy gentleman—who was appointed in General Jackson's or Martin Van Buren's time—would be guilty of peculating upon the public lands in his district. We have no desire to do any injury to the gentleman's constituents. I wish to say that the only object of this bill is to enter and survey the unappropriated lands, about 80,000 or 100,000 acres.

Mr. SWEETSER. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him for a moment? I am fearful that my colleague is confounding this Virginia military district and the manner of making surveys with the surveys of the United States military district.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not at all.

Mr. SWEETSER. Will my colleague permit me to make a single remark? Now, all these lands in the Virginia military district are subject to entry by the individuals who hold warrants. The entry and surveys were made by the interested party at their peril. The Government of the United States has no agency—

Mr. TAYLOR. I was about to explain that myself.

Mr. SWEETSER. If this bill was confined to the counties in the south part of the State, where there are unsurveyed lands, then I would have no objection to it; but in the northern counties of the Virginia military district, all these lands have been taken up and occupied for more than twenty years. There is not an acre of land in the northern counties that is not now claimed to have been surveyed, and in most cases now in the possession of actual settlers. There are from eighty to one hundred thousand acres in the southern counties of the Virginia military district, which have never been surveyed or entered. Confine your bill to that district, and I have no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will say to the gentleman who last occupied the floor, that it is not the desire of any gentleman holding a military land warrant, or the surveyor of the district, to touch one acre of land which is honestly appropriated. But if any of this land is dishonestly appropriated, I trust the officers of the General Government, and all other officers of the land office, will ferret it out. I trust that men having warrants will locate upon these lands. Some of the citizens of my colleague's district may have improperly held these lands; but that is a question to be decided by the courts of justice. I am willing to trust the courts to control the titles to any land I hold in that State, the Virginia military district, or elsewhere. It is impossible for both of my colleagues to resist this bill, and reach their object, by shutting up this land office. This bill simply proposes to extend the time for the short space of two years. It has been extended twenty years. I feel that I have already occupied enough of the time of the House, and I move the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio. I understand that his colleague [Mr. STANTON] wishes that, by an amendment, Congress shall settle the titles of those gentlemen who have entered more land than they were entitled to.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Not at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is exactly it. But I do not know how Congress is to settle the titles of conflicting land claimants. The courts were established to do that.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Neither do I see how they can do it.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was put, and the motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and having been engrossed, was read the third time.

Mr. TAYLOR called for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I rise to a privileged question. Is it not in order to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I do not want to speak on this bill myself, but as my colleague [Mr. STANTON] wishes to speak, I make the motion to reconsider for the purpose of giving him a chance.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. It is this: That the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] cannot get the floor for the purpose of giving it to any one else.

The SPEAKER. No other gentleman has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The motion was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and also, to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I wish to move to recommit the bill to a select committee of three, or to the Committee on Private Land Claims, whichever my colleague prefers.

The SPEAKER. If the House fails to sustain the previous question, that motion will be in order.

Mr. STANTON. Is it not in order now?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. STANTON. Then I hope the House will not sustain the previous question.

The question was then put on the second; and, on a division, there were—ayes 64, noes 35.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania, demanded tellers: which were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Ohio, and TAYLOR, were appointed.

The question was again put, and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 41. No quorum voting.

Mr. VENABLE moved that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask for tellers on the motion that there be a call of the House. That will disclose whether there be a quorum present.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEPHENS and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was then put and decided in the negative—ayes 38, noes 64.

So a call of the House was refused.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection there will be a recount on seconding the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. For the purpose of ascertaining whether there be a quorum present, I move that the House do now adjourn; and I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 15, nays 127.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. McMULLIN. Is it in order to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. I make that motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the motion till this bill can be disposed of.

Mr. McMULLIN. I cannot withdraw the motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to inquire of the Chair what will become of the bill now under consideration, if the motion of the gentleman from Virginia prevails?

The SPEAKER. It will go to the Speaker's table.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope that the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw the motion long enough for me to make the motion to recommit the bill, so that it may not go to the Speaker's table. I would inquire of the Chair if a motion to recommit would not bring the bill before the House to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor to make the motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will at least withdraw his motion for that purpose.

Mr. McMULLIN. I will withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. TAYLOR. I now ask that the question may be taken upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CARTTER. I did not understand the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw the motion to go into committee for any other purpose than to enable the gentleman from Ohio to move to recommit the bill. I renew the motion that the rules be suspended that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. The bill has been engrossed and read a third time, and the previous question has been called upon its passage. Now, I submit that the gentleman from Ohio can neither move to amend nor to recommit the bill. No other motion can be made in reference to it. The bill must either be passed or rejected as it is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is correct in his statement.

The question was then taken upon the motion that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and there were—ayes 60, noes 64.

Mr. CARTTER demanded the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, demanded tellers upon the motion to go into committee; which were ordered, and Messrs. TAYLOR and STANTON, of Ohio, were appointed.

The question was then again taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 68.

So the House refused to go into committee.

The question was then again taken upon seconding the demand for the previous question upon the passage of the bill; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 21.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Is it now in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. STANTON. I make that motion.

Mr. SWEETSER. Has not the previous question exhausted itself?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. STANTON. I will withdraw the motion to lay upon the table.

The question was then taken upon the passage of the bill, and carried in the affirmative.

So the bill passed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is a privileged motion. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is also a privileged question. The Chair thinks that the first one made should be first put.

The question to reconsider the vote was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The title of the bill was then passed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote confirming the title of the bill, which has just been passed, and that the motion to reconsider do lie on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOCKHART, from the Committee on Territories, by unanimous consent, reported a "joint resolution approving and confirming the act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon, entitled 'An act to provide for the selection of places for the location and erection of public buildings for the Territory of Oregon, and for other purposes;'" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. CARTTER. I ask for the reading of the joint resolution just reported.

The resolution was then read through, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and having been engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. LOCKHART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will permit me to make a report first.

Mr. STEPHENS. There are several gentlemen who desire to make a speech upon the special order, and I amongst the rest. I hope we shall have a speech to-day. The House will soon adjourn unless we do so. I insist upon my motion.

The question was then put upon the motion to suspend the rules and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and carried in the affirmative. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the Chair.)

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the business before the committee, the consideration of House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and for other purposes, on which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BOWIE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOWIE addressed the House an hour in opposition to the bill. He maintained that, instead of its being a bill, as indicated by its title, to benefit the agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing interests, its effect would be to blight every interest of the country. He viewed it as a measure which appealed to the venality of voters, and as one which, in its principles and policy, was to be found in the decay of the Roman Republic. The public domain, he contended, was the rightful and common property of the United States, held for the common and general welfare; and that the disposition proposed to be made by the bill of this property, by giving it to certain persons or classes, was subversive of the trust reposed in the United States. He looked upon the whole scheme as another evidence of the destructive tendencies of legislation, which, if persevered in, must result in most deplorable consequences. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, next obtained the floor, but gave way to

Mr. CHANDLER, who moved that the committee do now rise.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to. The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. HIBBARD) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting every man who is at the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, for the period herein specified, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. FLORENCE, by unanimous consent, presented a petition several yards long, signed by citizens of the city of Philadelphia, in favor of apportioning the public lands, in limited quantities, to actual settlers; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FOWLER asked the unanimous consent of the House to enable him to introduce, for the purpose of having it referred, a bill "to refund the balance due to Massachusetts for disbursements during the late war with Great Britain."

Mr. McMULLIN moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. FOWLER. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw that motion, to allow this bill to be read twice and referred.

Mr. McMULLIN. I will withdraw it, provided the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. FOWLER. I will renew it.

The motion to adjourn was withdrawn.

Mr. FOWLER then, by unanimous consent, introduced his bill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STROTHER asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings do inquire into the expediency of reestablishing communications by bridges between the District of Columbia and Virginia, which have been broken by the recent freshet, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. CABLE objected.

Mr. STROTHER. I believe the Committee on Public Buildings is the proper committee. The resolution merely calls the attention of the committee to the subject, and I cannot well see how any gentleman can object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection withdrawn? Mr. AVERETT. I object.

Mr. POLK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to enable me to move to take up from the Speaker's table, Senate bill for the relief of Charles G. Hunter.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. FOWLER. I promised to renew the motion to adjourn, when the gentleman from Virginia withdrew it, and I desire to make that motion now.

Mr. McMULLIN. I release the gentleman from the obligation.

Mr. FOWLER. Very well, then; I will not submit the motion.

Mr. POLK moved to suspend the rules to enable him to move to take up the bill which he had indicated.

Mr. MEACHAM moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. POLK. I should like to know if the gentleman can make that motion whilst I am upon the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee must remember that he is not entitled to make a speech, and is therefore not entitled to the floor.

Mr. POLK. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will withdraw the motion to adjourn. I will state to the House that my purpose is not to press for action on the bill now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont withdraw the motion to adjourn?

Mr. MEACHAM. I cannot.

The question was then taken on Mr. MEACHAM's motion, and it was not agreed to.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division, there were—ayes 49, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Mr. POLK. If the House will permit me to make an explanation of ten words, I will say, that it is not my purpose to press action on this bill to-day. I only want to put it in a condition that it can be reached at some early day. I do not ask the House to pass upon a question of any importance when it is so thinly attended. But I hope that, by general consent, the House will allow the bill to be taken from the Speaker's table, and placed where it can be reached to-morrow or the day after. That is all I ask.

The SPEAKER. There being no quorum in the House, it is impossible to take any action.

Mr. POLK. I hope it will be allowed by general consent.

Mr. COBB. I must object, unless we go to the business generally on the Speaker's table.

On motion by Mr. KING, of New York, The House then adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. GAYLORD: The petition of Isaac C. Hardy and 20 other citizens of Morgan county, Ohio, praying the grant of 100,000 acres of public land to aid in the construction of a certain plank road within said county.

Also, the petition of James A. Adair and 50 other citizens of Morgan county, Ohio, for a post route from McConnellville, via Hook's Salt Works and N. Coburn's, to Frisby's Ferry, in said county.

By Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana: The petition of Thomas Hicks, of Louisiana, praying to be confirmed in his title to a tract of land.

By Mr. MOREHEAD: The memorial of Alexander Vestel and other citizens of North Carolina, asking Congress to grant a homestead to actual settlers in the Territories.

By Mr. BELL: The petition of citizens of Dayton, Ohio, in favor of the Western Farm and Village Association of the city of New York.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of John Pollock, jr., and other citizens of New York, praying for the extension of the patent of Uri Emmons for a planing machine.

Mr. GROW: The petition of citizens of Bradford county, Pennsylvania, for a post route from Lawrenceville in said county, to Seely Creek Post Office, in said county.

Also, the petition of citizens of same county for post route from Wyalusing to Sugar Run Post Office.

Also the petition of citizens of Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, in favor of intervention.

By Mr. STANTON, of Ohio: The petition of 121 citizens of the city of New York, in favor of Whitney's Railroad to the Pacific.

By Mr. STANTON, of Ohio: The petition of 117 citizens of the city of New York, in favor of Whitney's railroad to the Pacific.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 27, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment in relation to a publication, which I hold in my hand, connected with the district judge of the United States court for the district of Maine.

I find in the Boston Daily Mail, of April 13th, a gross, uncalled-for, and unjustifiable attack on the Hon. Asher Ware, judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Maine. It accuses him of being an applicant, with various others, for an increase of salary; and runs a parallel between that application and an application to increase the pay of one of the black messengers belonging to this body. It appears in the editorial columns of that paper; but whether it emanated from the purloins of this capital, or was written by the editor of that paper, I know not. I have risen for the purpose of saying that this gentleman—who may, perhaps, be the only district judge who is an exception to what seems to be the general rule—has made no application whatever for an increase of his salary. I learn that there is no application before the Committee on the Judiciary, in the Senate; and I have also made inquiry in the House of Representatives, and there is no application there; and have authority for saying that there is no application whatever from him before Congress. I have felt it just and due to that distinguished individual to make this correction, that a contradiction may go forth from the point or place where the alleged application is charged to have been made. Of the taste, tone, and spirit of the article alluded to, I need not speak. My object only is to give a full denial to what is charged, and that I have done.

I need not speak of the character of this gentleman assailed, but I may, without injustice to any one, say, that wherever he is known he is esteemed as one of the best district judges in the United States.

Mr. BRADBURY. Perhaps I ought to add, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, that my colleague is entirely correct in his statement. I know of no application having been made by that judge for an increase of his salary. He stands almost as an exception in that respect.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating information called for by a resolution of the Senate of the 19th instant in relation to the qualities of the several species of coal now used by the Navy of the United States; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the names of naval officers who have received greater pay than is provided by the act regulating the pay of the Navy, the amounts paid, and the authority thereof; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WADE presented a petition of Joseph Hutchinson and others, citizens of the West, praying the construction of an additional canal around the Falls of the Ohio, on the Indiana side of that river; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a memorial from the American Statistical Association, which is established at Boston, in Massachusetts. It is devoted to the purpose of collecting, preserving, and diffusing information in the different departments of human knowledge. This association now asks Congress, by an act or resolve, to appropriate to it one copy of the Journals and documents of the Senate and House of Representatives, and of the Executive Departments, for the present and for all future time, the same as is granted to other associations. I ask its reference to the Committee on the Library.

It was so referred.

Mr. COOPER presented a petition of citizens of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and two petitions of citizens of the United States, remonstrating against any action by Congress to sanction the Wheeling bridge as it now is, or any interference in the decisions of the Supreme Court in that case; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a memorial of practical printers of the city and county of Philadelphia, praying the establishment of a national printing office; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRADBURY presented a petition of merchants, ship-owners, and others, of Bath, Maine, praying the enactment of an act prohibiting the carriage of freight and passengers for hire, by Government steam-vessels, and the prohibition of entry into any ports of the United States of all vessels belonging to the navies of foreign Powers, carrying freight and passengers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAYARD presented a memorial of practical printers of Wilmington, Delaware, praying the establishment of a national printing office on the plan proposed by the Hon. Mr. Dorr, of Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented the memorial of William Clarke, praying indemnity for losses sustained under a contract for the delivery of materials for an embankment at the navy-yard, Memphis, and damages for a violation of his contract by an agent of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That Mariano G. Vallejo have leave to withdraw the documents on the files of the Senate relating to his claim.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Louis Charette.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the memorial of Charles Gordon, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of George Talcott, reported a bill for the relief of George Talcott, Brevet Brigadier General United States Army, and Colonel of Ordnance; which was read and passed to the second reading.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BRADBURY gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill providing for holding the district courts in the District of Columbia, in case of the sickness or other disability of the district judge.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BORLAND, agreeably to notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to authorize the correction of erroneous locations of military bounty land warrants, by actual settlers on the public lands in certain cases; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to enforce liens in admiralty, and to regulate proceedings therein; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONVENTION WITH BRAZIL.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations inquire into the expediency of making the same provision by law for adjusting conflicting claims to awards made under the convention with Brazil, which is provided by the eighth section of an act approved March 3, 1849, entitled "An act to carry into effect certain stipulations of the treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, of the second day of February, 1848."

COMPENSATION TO NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to inform the Senate if any officers of the Navy are receiving greater compensation than is provided by the act of March 3, 1835, whether settled at the office of the Fourth Auditor or elsewhere, and especially whether any of those officers employed on the Coast Survey are receiving such compensation.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were read a third time and passed:

An act for the relief of the Monroe Railroad Company and their sureties; and

An act for the relief of Isaac Houston.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives, further to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN OREGON.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a joint resolution approving and confirming an act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon, entitled "An act to provide for the selection of places for location and erection of the public buildings of the Territory of Oregon, and for other purposes."

On the motion of Mr. DOUGLAS, it was read a first and second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate, read a third time, and passed.

WAR STEAMER FOR HARBOR DEFENSE.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution to authorize the completion of a war steamer for harbor defense, which Mr. STOCKTON, during the morning hour, had frequently solicited the Senate to take up. It was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to cause to be completed without unnecessary delay, the war steamer contracted for with Robert L. Stevens, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed in 1842.

Mr. RUSK. I would like to have some explanation as to the probable cost, or whether the act authorizing the completion of the steamer, makes the necessary appropriation. These experiments cost, in some cases, a large sum.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senate for their courtesy in consenting at this time to take up this bill for a war steamer, shot and shell proof. But, sir, I cannot consent so far to impose upon their courtesy as to attempt to do what may be impracticable. If I proceed now I fear that I cannot fulfill my obligations to the chairman of the Finance Committee, who wishes to call up the deficiency bill at one o'clock. The clock is now within five minutes of one, and I must, therefore, once more thank the Senate for their kindness, and wait for a more favorable time, when I hope the Senate will feel that they have an additional reason for a renewal of their courtesy.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Take ten minutes more.

Mr. STOCKTON. It is now too late to commence, and therefore I move to postpone the further consideration of the resolution until to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852, the pending question being upon the amendment of the Committee on Finance to insert the following:

For additional compensation for increasing the transportation of the United States mail between New York and Liverpool, in the Collins line of steamers, to twenty-six trips per annum, at such times as shall be directed by the Postmaster General, and in conformity to his last annual report to Congress, and his letter of the 15th of November last to the Secretary of the Navy, commencing said increased service on the first of January, 1852, at the rate of $33,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance, the sum of $336,500.

Mr. SEWARD. What will Congress do—what has Congress done—for the Collins steamers? These are questions which meet every visitor returning from the capital on his arrival at New York, and which every traveler from America encounters, on "Change in Liverpool and London, and in the Courts of Paris and St. Petersburg. There is reason enough for all this curiosity and interest among the merchants and statesmen of the two continents.

Mr. President, under a contract with the United States, made on the 19th of April, 1849, between Edward K. Collins, James Brown, and Stewart Brown, merchants of New York, and the United States, those persons now prosecute, between the ports of New York and Liverpool, forty voyages across the ocean, or twenty outward and inward voyages annually, in steam-ships carrying freights and passengers on their own account, and also public mails on account of the United States, and receive from the Treasury, as a compensation for that service, $335,000 a year, which is equivalent to somewhat more than $19,000 for each outward and return passage. The Committee on Finance propose an amendment to the annual deficiency bill, the effect of which is to increase the number of mails and voyages from twenty to twenty-six, and the compensation from $19,000 to $33,000 for each voyage.

SHOULD THIS MEASURE TO BE ADOPTED?

I assume, for the present, that the existing enterprise is to be perseveringly sustained. In that view the question arises—

Whether the proposed increase of mail service is expedient?

When this line was established, the British Cunard steamers, consisting of seven vessels, were making semi-monthly voyages and carrying semi-monthly mails between the same ports during the eight temperate months, and monthly mails during the four other months; and thus they had a monopoly of steam ocean postage between the two countries. We authorized the Collins line to carry just the same number of mails, alternating with the Cunard steamers; and so we broke up the monopoly, and divided the postages of the route equally with Great Britain. So far, all was right and well. But recently the Cunard steamers have continued their semi-monthly mails throughout the whole year, while ours were limited to the eight temperate months; and so the equality of postage revenues has been subverted, and the early British monopoly has been partially restored. By the proposed increase of mails we shall exactly alternate again; and on every day that an American or European mail steam-vessel shall leave New York, one of the other line will leave the opposite port; and so the monopoly will again be broken, and the complete equality of postage revenues will be re-established. We must do just this, or relinquish in an important degree the great postal object of the enterprise. The Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Navy, and the Senate's Committees on the Post Office, on Naval Affairs, and on Finance, agree that the service must be thus increased, if it is to be at all continued. The increase, then, is not merely expedient, but even necessary and indispensable.

Assuming now that the service is to be increased, the question comes up—

Is the increase of compensation from $19,000 to $33,000 per voyage just and reasonable?

It is just and reasonable, if necessary. It is clear that some increase is necessary. The proprietors decline to make the six new voyages for nothing, and even to make them for $19,000 a voyage. We cannot oblige the contractors to make them for that compensation, nor even to make them for any compensation, for they are beyond the contract. No one else offers to make them on those terms, or, indeed, on any terms. We must therefore apply to Mr. Collins and his associates to enlarge the contract. But opening the contract for enlargement opens it for revision. They consent to enlarge, but they equally appeal to us to remodel it; and they show for reasons that while the average cost of each voyage is....$65,216 64 The average receipts are only..... 48,286 85

And that they incur an average loss of $16,928 79

And an aggregate loss annually of... $338,574 40 They further show that a capital of three millions invested has paid no dividends, and been reduced by inevitable losses to a little more than two and a half millions; that their stock is sold in Wall street at fifty cents on a dollar; and that, even if they would, yet they cannot dispatch another ship of mail after the 15th of May next. Something must be allowed, if not for profits, at least for renovation; and so the actual loss of each voyage being in round numbers $17,000, it is quite certain that an increase of not less than $19,000 is necessary to keep the steamers in vigorous and sure operation.

All questions of the fairness of this showing are precluded by the offer of the contractors to relinquish the enterprise to the United States or to any assignee indicated by them after the contract shall have been remodeled, and by the neglect of any other party to propose for a new contract, even on the terms thus recommended.

So, the increase of compensation solicited is just and reasonable, and is, moreover, like the increase of the mail service, necessary and indispensable.

Now, sir, we have arrived at the very question of the whole question. We must do just what is thus proposed, or relinquish the contract altogether.

The honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, [Mr. HUNTER,] dissenting from his associates, advises that alternative. Sir, with a profound respect for that distinguished Senator, not now for the first time, nor for mere effect, expressed, I must have his pardon, nevertheless, for preferring the authority of his associates. Extreme caution is apt to be the fruit of the patient and patriotic labors of his office. An appropriation bill seldom has passed this House without calling forth from him or his predecessors eloquent, yet groundless, alarms of an exhausted treasury, and of impending taxation, if not bankruptcy.

While we cannot, without wounding the national sensibilities and impairing the national character, abandon any great enterprise, it is equally true that indecision is among the worst vices of the statesman, and vacillation in the conduct of public affairs is fruitful of national demoralization, and indicative of certain national decline. Persistence, when practicable, invigorates national energies, discourages foreign rivalry, and prevents foreign insult and aggression. Compare France—enlightened, vigorous, and energetic, but unstable as water—with England, cautious, constant, and persevering, or even with Russia, unimpassioned and cold as her climate, yet with her eyes unswervingly and forever fixed on Stamboul, and you have an apt illustration of my moral. Nevertheless, these general observations are inconclusive, and I grasp, therefore, cheerfully with this great question.

If this enterprise must be abandoned, it must be for one of two reasons, namely: either because—

1. It was erroneously conceived; or because 2. It has been rendered unnecessary, unwise, or impracticable, by subsequent events and circumstances.

1. Was it erroneously conceived? To determine this question, we need to ascend some high eminence of time, from which we can look back along the past, and pierce, as far as is allowed to human vision, through the clouds and darkness that rest upon the future. Come, then, Senators, and suppose that you stand with me in the galleries of St. Stephen's Chapel, on a day so long gone by as the 22d of March, 1775. A mighty debate has been going on here in this august legislature of the British empire. Insurrection against commercial restriction has broken out in the distant American colonies; a seditious assembly in Philadelphia has organized it, and a brave, patient, unimpassioned, and not untried soldier of Virginia, lies, with hastily gathered and irregular levies, on the heights of Dorchester, waiting the coming out of the British army from Boston. The question whether Great Britain shall strike, or concede and conciliate, has just been debated and decided. Concession has been denied. A silence, brief but intense, is broken by the often fierce and violent, but now measured and solemn, utterance of Burke:

"My counsel has been rejected. You have determined to trample upon and extinguish a people who have, in the course of a single life, added to England as much as she had acquired by a progressive increase of improvement, brought on, by varieties of civilizing conquests and civilizing settlements, in a series of 1,700 years. A vision has passed before my eyes; the spirit of prophecy is upon me. Listen, now, to a revelation of the consequences which shall follow your maddened decision. Henceforth there shall be division, separation, and eternal conflict in alternating war and peace between you and the child you have oppressed, which has inherited all your indomitable love of liberty and all your insatiable passion for power. Though still in the gristle, and not yet hardened into the bone of manhood, America will, within the short period of sixteen months, cast off your dominion and defy your utmost persecution. Perfecting the institutions you have not yet suffered to ripen, she will establish a Republic, the first confederate representative commonwealth, which shall in time become the admiration and envy of the world. France, the hereditary rival whom, only twenty years ago, with the aid of your own colonies, you despoiled of her North American possessions, though they had been strengthened by the genius of Richelieu, will take sweet revenge in aiding the emancipation of those very colonies, and thus dismembering your empire. You will strike her in vain with one hand, while you stretch forth the other to reduce your colonies with equal discomfiture. And you, even you, most infuriated yet most loyal prince, will, within eight years, sign a treaty of peace with the royal Bourbon, and of independence with republican America! With fraud, corruption, fire, and sword, you will compensate England with conquests in the East, and within half a century they will surround the world, and the British flag shall wave over provinces covering five millions of square miles, and containing one sixth of the inhabitants of the globe. Nor shall you lose your retaliation upon your ancient enemy; for she, in the mean time, imbibing and intoxicated by the spirit of revolution in her American affiliation, shall overthrow all authority, human and divine, and, exhausting herself by twenty-five years of carnage and desolation throughout continental Europe, shall at last succumb to your victorious arms, and relapse, after ineffectual struggles, into the embraces of an inglorious military despotism. Yet, notwithstanding all these unsurpassed conquests and triumphs, shall you enjoy no certain or complete dominion. For, on the other hand, wild beasts and savage men, and uncouth manners shall all disappear on the American continent; and the three millions whom you now despise, gathering to themselves increase from every European nation and island, will, within seventy-five years, spread themselves over field and forest, prairie and mountain, until, in your way to your provinces in the Bahamas, they shall meet you on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, and, on your return from the Eastern Indies, they will salute you from the eastern coast of the Pacific ocean. In the mean time, with genius developed by the influence of freedom, and with vigor called forth and disciplined in the subjugation of the forest, and trained and perfected in the mysteries of ship building and navigation, by the hardy pursuits of the whale fisheries under either pole, they will, in all European conflicts, with keen sagacity, assume the relation of neutrals, and thus grasp the prize of Atlantic commerce dropped into their hands by fierce belligerents. In the midst of your studies and experiments in hydraulics, steam and electricity, they will seize the unpracticed and even incomplete inventions, and cover their rivers with steam-boats, and connect and bind together their widely-separated territories with canals, railroads, and telegraphs. When a long interval of peace shall have come your merchants, combining a vast capital, will regain and hold for a time the carrying trade by substituting capacious, buoyant, and fleet packet-ships, departing and arriving with exact punctuality; but the Americans, quickly borrowing the device and improving on your skill, will reconquer their commerce. You will then rouse all the enterprise of your merchants, and all the spirit of your Government, and wresting the new and mighty power of steam from the hands of your inveterate rival, will apply it to ocean navigation, and laying hold of the commercial and social correspondence between the two continents, increasing as the nations rise to higher civilization and come into more close and intimate relations, as the basis of postal revenue, and you will thus restore your lost monopoly on the Atlantic, and enjoy it unclouded through a period of ten years. During that season of triumph you will mature and perfect all the arrangements for extending this mighty device of power and revenue, so as to connect every island of the seas and every part of every continent with your capital. But just at that moment your envious rival will appear with steam ships still more capacious, buoyant, and fleet, than your own, in your harbors, and at once subverting your Atlantic monopoly will give earnest of her vigorous renewal of the endless contest for supremacy of all the seas. When you thought her expelled from the ocean, her flag will be seen in your ports, covering her charities contributed to relieve your population stricken by famine; and while you stand hesitating whether to declare between republicanism and absolute power in continental Europe, her ambassadors will be seen waiting on every battle-field to salute the triumphs of liberty; and when that cause shall be overthrown, the same constant flag shall be seen even in the Straits of the Dardanelles, receiving with ovations due to conquerors the temporarily-overthrown champions of freedom. Look towards Africa: there you see American colonies lifting her up from her long night of barbarism into the broad light of liberty and civilization. Look to the East, you see American missionaries bringing the people of the Sandwich Islands into the family of nations, and American armaments peacefully seeking, yet firmly demanding, the rights of humanity in Japan. Look to the equator, there are American engineers opening passages by canals and railroads across the isthmus which divides the two oceans. And last of all, look northward, and you behold American sailors penetrating the continent of ice in search of your own daring and lost navigators."

Sir, this stupendous vision has become real. All this momentous prophecy has come to pass. The man yet lives who has seen both the end and the beginning of its fulfillment. It is history. And that history shows that this enterprise of American Atlantic steam navigation was wisely and even necessarily undertaken, to maintain our present commercial independence, and the contest for the ultimate empire of the ocean. Only a word shall express the importance of these objects. International postal communication and foreign commerce are as important as domestic mails and traffic. Equality with other nations in respect to those interests is as important as freedom from restriction upon them among ourselves. Except Rome—which substituted conquests and spoliation for commerce—no nation was ever highly prosperous, really great, or even truly independent, whose foreign communications and traffics were conducted by other States; while Tyre, and Egypt, and Venice, and the Netherlands, and Great Britain, successively becoming the merchants, became thereby the masters of the world.

But the learned and honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance raises a question on a warlike feature of the enterprise which has not yet come under our notice. Departing, after the most profound consideration, from the ancient naval policy which separated the National Ocean Polices from the National Mercantile Marine, Great Britain constructs all the steam-ships employed in her postal service; so that they are "good, substantial, and efficient—of such model and strength as to be fit and able to carry guns of the largest calibre used on board her majesty's steam-vessels of war," and they are subject to be taken in emergencies by the Government at cost for the public naval service. And in this way Great Britain is rapidly and steadily building up a new and peculiar naval force, which will always be in complete condition, and ready for effective use. The same principle was adopted in the contract with Collins and his associates; and the evidence is complete that it has been faithfully and fully carried out. The honorable Senator now disputes the soundness of the principle itself, and insists that merchant steam-vessels cannot be constructed so as to be practically useful for warlike purposes. I reply, first, that having, on such careful examination, and with such weighty example, adopted the principle, we could not now wisely abandon it without proof, by practical trial, long I hope to be delayed, that it is erroneous. Secondly: No ship-of-war, however constructed, is adapted to all the exigencies of naval service; while these steam-ships are certainly adapted to some of them. Commodore Perry, on the 15th of February, 1852, reports to the Secretary of the Navy, that—"These steam-ships (of the Collins line) may be converted at an expense of $20,000 each into war-steamer of the first class; and that each of them could carry four 10 inch Paixhan guns on pivots, fore and aft, of the weight of those in the model-ship Mississippi; and ten 8 inch Paixhan guns on the sides; and that this armament would not incommode the vessel; and that, in the general operations of a maritime war, they would render good service; and especially that, from their great speed, they would be useful as dispatch vessels, and for the transportation of troops, being always capable of attack and defense, and of overhauling and escaping from an enemy."

The Secretary of War reports to the Senate, on the 20th of March, 1852, that the readiness of the steamers to be used at the shortest notice, their capacity of being used as transports for goods and munitions of war, and their great celerity of motion, enabling them to overhail merchantmen, and at the same time escape cruisers, would render them terrible as guerrillas of the ocean.

Thirdly. Great Britain has already more than two hundred and fifty steamers armed and capable of armament. What would be our situation, in the emergency of a war, if we were unprovided with a similar force for defense and aggression?

But, fourthly. The warlike adaptation of the steamers is a collateral and contingent feature of the enterprise, which will stand safely on the accomplishment of its postal and mercantile ends, even if that feature should prove valueless. These steamers, at least, are built and in use, and accom-

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 76.

plish their important civic purposes. We may correct our system, not in this, but in future operations.

Thus, Mr. President, it appears that the enterprise was wisely adopted. And now I pray you to take notice, that it has not been rendered unwise or impracticable by any change of circumstances or of public interests. Everything in these respects remains as it was, except that we have increased ability and increased need to put it forth in the struggle for the freedom of commerce and the command of the seas.

Nor does the expense complained of affect the question of perseverance. The excess of expense above the estimates results from the wise policy of building larger and better ships than were at first contemplated, whereby in achievement we have not merely equaled but surpassed Great Britain.

Nor is the expense of the American steamers disproportionate to that of the British; although we all know that for a time it might well be so, because the rate of interest, and the cost of labor and of skill are higher on this side of the Atlantic than on the other, and because higher insurance must be paid on more valuable vessels. Nevertheless, the Cunard steamers, seven in number, have an aggregate capacity of 12,252 tons, averaging 1,750 tons for each, and they cross the Atlantic eighty-five times annually; thus the whole tonnage worked by them across the Atlantic is 148,750 tons.

The Collins steamers have an aggregate tonnage of 13,720, averaging 2,425 tons for each; and the aggregate tonnage worked by them across the ocean is 178,000 tons; the cost to the Government is $850,000, not exceeding, in proportion to their work, the expense of the Cunard line. At the same time they excel the Cunard steamers in speed. The shortest westward passage of the Cunard steamers was ten days and twenty-two hours, and the shortest eastward passage ten days and twelve hours; while the quickest westward passage of the Collins steamers was nine days and twelve hours, and the quickest eastward passage was nine days and eight hours.

Nor is the expense disproportioned to the benefits received. The first effect of the enterprise was a postal treaty with Great Britain, and under that treaty, in lieu of receiving no steam ocean postage, as before, we now receive postages, amounting in round numbers to $400,000; and this revenue must swell, and is actually swelling, at the rate of $200,000 annually. Thus, in the first place, it is clear that in two years the postal revenue alone will defray the expense; and secondly, there lies very near to us in the future what my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] so justly denominates, and what every patriot and philanthropist so earnestly seeks, the great boon of cheap ocean postage.

And now, while we maintain postal communication to every part of our country, at no matter how great expense, provided that the revenue of the whole system shall equal the cost of all its parts, I desire to know why we should depart from a principle so enlightened in foreign postal conventions, which are ancillary to commerce, to immigration, and to political influence and power? But if we change the terms of the question it will be more easily solved. What then shall we lose by arresting the enterprise? We shall lose all the postages on steam mails, and all the hopes of cheap postage, and all the profits on passengers and freight transported by steam. It is not easy to estimate these losses; but we have some knowledge of the profits of Great Britain arising from the monopoly she enjoyed before our competition. The duties received into the Treasury from the Cunard steamers rose, in six years, from $73,809 to $1,054,731. She paid the steamers for carrying the mails six years, $2,550,000; and received postages in return amounting to $7,836,800; giving her a clear profit, on the postal revenue, of $5,286,800, or little less than a million a year. We have gained at least one half of what benefits Great Britain has lost by reason of our enterprise. Let that monopoly be restored and reestablished, we shall then lose all that gain, and with it we shall see the postages, and freights, and rates of passage raised to their ancient standards, and continually adjusted equally to injure our prosperity, and promote the interests and gratify the caprice of Great Britain. What shall we then look for but decline of trade and industry, with a long train of commercial embarrassments and national humiliations?

At most, we can save by abandoning this enterprise only about $300,000 in two years. Could we not now easily retrench to that extent in some other quarter? We can save as much, and more, by laying up one of our frigates in ordinary during the same time, and twice as much by burning it down to the water's edge. No one would advise this, and yet it would be far less disastrous than the retrenchment now proposed.

Still, sir, the argument that the expense exceeds the estimates is pressed. Well, there is nothing new in that. This is a deficiency bill. It makes appropriations of some millions to supply deficiencies in the customs service, in the construction of public edifices, in the improvement and embellishment of the capital, in the Department of Indian Affairs, in the Department of the Territories, and in the Department of Foreign Relations. And just such a deficiency bill comes up from the House of Representatives, at the middle of every session of Congress, as punctually as the estimates for the year come in at the beginning, and as the appropriation bill based on these estimates appears at the close. Shall we, then, abandon the customs, the public edifices, the seat of Government, the Army and Navy, the Indian tribes, the Territories, and all foreign intercourse, because we can never estimate accurately at the beginning the cost of maintaining them throughout the fiscal year?

But it is said that the enterprise is a departure from the principle of free trade. Sir, it is a departure from that principle, but not a divergence from the fixed and ancient policy of the country. Widely, and I think unwisely, as we have differed among ourselves about the policy of protecting agriculture and manufactures, to the hindrance of the growth of commerce itself; yet we have, from first to last, uncompromisingly and unwaveringly adhered to the policy of protecting navigation. We inherited it from England, whose navigation act, passed by the Long Parliament, and coöperating with her encouragement of manufactures, broke the monopoly of Holland, and secured to the British Islands the commerce of the world and the command of the ocean. If this measure enhances protection of our navigation, it is because British largesses enhance the protection of her navigation. Let her revert to her old measures of protection, and we can at once safely return to ours.

The honorable Senator from Virginia tells us that it is wise to give up now, because the system, being unprofitable, we shall be obliged to give up at last. But this is only a temporary contest, not yet fully decided, and growing in success. Collins's contract has eight years to run. Long before that time, Atlantic steam navigation will prove itself to be either self-sustaining or not self-sustaining. In either case, Great Britain will withdraw her patronage from her line, and we can then safely discontinue our contributions to our line.

The honorable Senator from Virginia seeks to divide us on this question, by presenting the claims of what he calls the poorer cities for a share in the benefits of this policy, now concentrated upon New York. I learn that a bill is near its third reading in the Legislature of the Old Dominion, having for its object to establish a line of first-class steam-ships between Norfolk and Antwerp. Sir, I assure the honorable Senator that when a proposition shall come before us for material aid to the trade of any of our Atlantic cities, which shall at the same time be beneficial to the whole Union—whether that city be Boston, or Philadelphia, or Baltimore, or Charleston, or New Orleans—I shall greet it with no reluctant hearing. But in the mean time the field of battle is chosen, not by us, but by the enemy; it is not a provincial contest, for provincial objects, but it is a national one. We must meet our adversary on that field, not elsewhere; and we must meet him, or surrender the whole nation's cause without a blow.

And now I pray honorable Senators to consider what it is that we are invited to surrender: It is no less than the proud commercial and political position we have gained by two wars with Great Britain, and by the vigorous and well-directed enterprise of our countrymen through a period now reaching to three quarters of a century.

Next, I pray you to consider what position we must take after that surrender—the position of Mexico, of the Canadas, and of the South American States. Surely there is nothing attractive in such a change, in such a descent.

I conjure you to consider moreover that England, without waiting for, and, I am sure, without expecting so inglorious a retreat on our part, is completing a vast web of ocean steam navigation, based on postage and commerce, that will connect all the European ports, all our own ports, all the South American ports, all the ports in the West Indies, all the ports of Asia and Oceania, with her great commercial capital. Thus the world is to become a great commercial system, ramified by a thousand nerves projecting from the one head at London. Yet, stupendous as the scheme is, our own merchants, conscious of equal capacity and equal resources, and relying on experience for success, stand here beseeching us to allow them to counteract its fulfillment, and ask of us facilities and aid equal to those yielded by the British Government to its citizens. While our commercial history is full of presages of a successful competition, Great Britain is sunk deep in debt. We are free from debt. Great Britain is oppressed with armies and costly aristocratic institutions; industry among us is unfettered and free. But it is a contest depending not on armies, nor even on wealth, but chiefly on invention and industry. And how stands the national account in those respects? The cotton-gin, the planing machine, steam navigation, and electrical communication—these are old achievements. England only a year ago invited the nations to bring their inventions and compare them together in a palace of iron and glass. In all the devices for the increase of luxury and indulgence America was surpassed, not only by refined England and chivalrous France, but even by semi-barbarian Russia. Not until after all the mortification which that result necessarily produced did the comparison of utilitarian inventions begin. Then our countrymen exhibited Dick's anti-friction press—a machine that raised a power greater by two hundred and forty tons than could be raised by the Bramah hydraulic press, which, having been used by Sir John Stevenson in erecting the tubular bridge over the Straits of Menai, had been brought forward by the British artisans as a contrivance of unrivalled merit for the generation of direct power.

Next was submitted, on our behalf, the two inventions of St. John, the variation compass, which indicated the deflection of its own needle at any place, resulting from local causes; and the velocimeter, which tells, at any time, the actual speed of the vessel bearing it, and its distance from the port of departure; inventions adopted at once by the Admiralty of Great Britain. Then, to say nothing of the ingeniously-constructed locks invented by Hobbs, which defied the skill of the British artisans, while he opened all of theirs at pleasure, there was Bigelow's power-loom, which has brought down ingrain and Brussels carpets within the reach of the British mechanic and farmer. While the American plows took precedence of all others, McCormick's reaper was acknowledged to be a contribution to the agriculture of England, surpassing in value the cost of the Crystal Palace. Nor were we dishonored in the fine arts, for a well-deserved medal was awarded to Hughes for his successful incorporation in marble of the ideal Oliver Twist; and the palm was conferred on Powers for his immortal statue of the Greek Slave. When these successes had turned away the tide of derision from our country, the yacht America entered the Thames. Skillful architects saw that she combined, in before-unknown proportions, the elements of grace and motion, and her modest challenge was reluctantly accepted, and even then only for a tenth part of the prize she proposed. The trial was graced by the presence of the Queen and her court, and watched with an interest created by national pride and ambition, and yet the triumph was complete.

In the very hour of this, of itself conclusive demonstration of American superiority of utilitarian inventions, and in the art "that leads to nautical dominion," a further and irresistible confirmation was given by the arrival of American clippers from India freighted at advanced rates with shipments, consigned by the agents of the East India Company at Calcutta to their own warehouses in London. Such, and so recent are the proofs, that in the capital element of invention we are equal to the contest for the supremacy of the seas. When I consider them, and consider our resources, of which those of Pennsylvania, or of the Valley of the Mississippi, or of California, alone exceed the entire native wealth of Great Britain; when I consider, moreover, our yet unelicited manufacturing capacity—our great population, already nearly equal to that of the British islands, and multiplying at a rate unknown in human progress by accessions from both of the old continents; when I consider the advantages of our geographical position midway between them; and when I consider, above all, the expanding and elevating influence of freedom upon the genius of our people, I feel quite assured that their enterprise will be adequate to the glorious conflict, if it be only sustained by constancy and perseverance on the part of their Government. I do not know that we shall prevail in that conflict; but for myself, like the modest hero who was instructed to charge on the artillery at Niagara, I can say that we "will try;" and that when a difficulty occurs no greater than that which meets us now, my motto shall be the words of the dying commander of the Chesapeake—"Don't give up the ship."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of entering at large upon the advantages of a steam connection between the United States and the continent of Europe for postal purposes. I am in favor of that object. I believe it to be beneficial. I wish to preserve it, and keep it up. But I rise to address myself particularly to this amendment, having made various inquiries for the purpose of getting facts, and not having got them to my satisfaction. I am willing to vote for the increase of six additional trips per annum. I am willing to make an additional allowance for these additional trips. But, then, I apprehend that this amendment goes greatly beyond the point of reason and propriety; and I rise for the purpose of submitting to the Senate some plain, practical facts; which, as it seems to me, will prove the ideas which I entertain to be such as should govern our action.

We have had recently an application made here, by way of a memorial from Vanderbilt & Co., to perform the mail service from New York through Nicaragua to Astoria, or, at all events, to San Francisco—a much longer route than that from New York across the Atlantic to Liverpool—for $150,000 a year, the trips to be, I believe, as numerous as those from New York to Liverpool. Now, this is a startling fact to me; when you already allow $385,000 a year to these navigators of the Collins line, here are persons memorializing you to perform the service between New York and San Francisco at this diminished rate. It has set me to thinking about the matter, and to ask myself how is this difference to be accounted for? I suppose the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, whose business and whose pleasure I have no doubt it has been to look into the performance of the mail service in every direction, can give the Senate the facts connected with the California service, and with the European service, much better than I can. I shall hear him upon this with very great pleasure; for, as I have already stated, both from a sense of pride in reference to this rivalry between Great Britain and the United States, as well as from a conviction of its utility, I am for maintaining this line, provided it can be done upon proper principles.

But, sir, my mind was not only directed to this subject, from the consideration of the fact which I have just mentioned, but other matters had occurred to me, which brought my mind to think about it; and I am very happy to state, that this morning there was laid upon our tables a document which shows a fact that had passed through my mind, and to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. On page thirty-one of the document from the Navy Department, to which I refer, some facts will be found. It is there stated, that a ship of the line of the first class can be navigated for twelve months for $287,500. Now, we already pay to the Collins line, for twenty trips a year, $385,000, or near $100,000 more. This line, I suppose, employs from one hundred to two hundred hands, but exactly how many I do not know. We already pay for twenty trips across the Atlantic, some $100,000 more, according to the report of the Secretary of the Navy, than we pay for navigating a seventy-four of the first class for one whole year, with her crew, of from a thousand to fifteen hundred persons on board.

Mr. COOPER. There are four vessels for the Collins line.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe there are four vessels; but I am giving the facts. We pay to the Collins line, for employing four ships and performing twenty trips, $100,000 more than it costs to pay for navigating a seventy-four. A frigate of the first class only costs $186,000. A comparison of the cost of navigating war steamers, perhaps would be more to the purpose than any other. According to this report, the cost of navigating a war steamer per annum, is only $190,000. I am unadvised as to how much time these four steamers of the Collins line rest at the ports at which they arrive. The trip is made in about twenty-two days, and twenty trips would give, at that rate, four hundred and forty days, or seventy-five days more than a year for the running time of the four ships, or one hundred and ten days running time for each ship, on the supposition that each makes five trips. This would leave them in port more than two thirds of the year.

Sir, I am a Western man, living in the Valley of the Mississippi, some five or six hundred miles from any sea-port; and it may be presumed that I ought not to speak on any subject connected with the navigation of the ocean; but the great country which I represent, has as much interest in postal arrangements as any other portion of the Confederacy. The great country from which I come will have to manage, in the process of time, perhaps the whole of this Government, aided by the weaker sections of it upon the sea-board; and it is time for us to look into all these matters which lie at the foundation of national prosperity. We ought to make ourselves somewhat acquainted with them.

Now, I have referred to the annual expense of keeping our ships-of-war in commission, as affording some data of comparison. It costs only $190,000 a year to navigate one of our first-class war steamers with all her crew. How much these steamers rest at the different points at which they arrive, I do not know.

This application for increased compensation for the Collins steamers is made on the ground, that at the present, they are engaged in a losing business; and that in the rivalry between us and Great Britain, we ought not to suffer the Collins line to go down. Well, I have asked repeatedly to get the facts upon which this assertion rests; and I have been told that it was sworn to before the committee, that the aggregate expense of each trip was $65,215; and that the aggregate receipts upon the average for each trip were $48,286 15, and of course, the difference between the two, showed, it was said, the amount of loss, to wit: $16,928.

This matter ought not to be estimated by the actual loss which any company of navigators may sustain in point of fact; but ought to be estimated by the actual loss which they necessarily sustain after using all due economy, all due skill, and all due management and diligence to make a profit. A company engaged in any business or performance whatever, where money is concerned, may lose an immense amount from the want of skill, the want of energy, the want of knowledge, or the want of economy. If the loss of profit results from the want of skill, knowledge, economy, energy, and management, there is no propriety in calling upon Government, or in calling upon anybody to make amends for losses which have thus been incurred. I had wished to see, in the very beginning of this investigation, what were the data upon which these losses rested, and where were the evidences that all the skill, energy, management and economy which necessarily should be employed in conducting a great undertaking of this sort, had been employed; and that, after the application of all this economy, management, energy, and skill, these losses were the unavoidable result of the operation. Nobody has turned attention to this very element and foundation upon which the calculation rests, and upon which our judgment ought to be formed. We seem to take it for granted, that if a loss has been sustained, the Government should bear it without any inquiry into the system of management under which it has occurred, and without knowing whether it has been the consequence of wasteful extravagance and exorbitant salaries, or any other abuse which may have been practiced. Sir, we should have had minute information in regard to the various items of expenditure, instead of mere general statements that there has been a loss. If we had been shown the particulars, we could have seen whether the loss resulted from causes likely to be permanent, or only temporary. Sir, I am unwilling to act in such important matters upon partial information, under the influence of mere declamation. No sensible man is willing to act, in his own affairs, without the fullest information. An honest statesman should be equally cautious in the management of public affairs.

It is the easiest thing in the world to sing pæans upon the future glory of our country, and to excite that national feeling which grows out of our relations to our old rival, and to stir up the passions of our people. But all that is foreign to my present purpose in the investigation of the question before us. The question with us, whether there is sufficient utility in this postal communication by steam with Europe to authorize us to continue it. The Government cannot pension a navy for commercial purposes, and carry on all the commercial operations of the country by bonuses out of the Treasury. To pay a bonus to a commercial marine out of the Treasury of the United States, is but to take taxes from the people to be handed over to those who bring merchandise here to sell. But if you allow the people to buy the products brought here, the expense lies upon the consumer, and it is not an improper operation.

With regard to postal arrangements, the correspondence of the country, I am willing to make that an exception so far as this line and other lines are concerned. But it comes around at last to the question, whether these losses spoken of grow out of the necessary operation of the line when coming in competition with British lines, after we have used all the economy, skill, and industry that we possess. I have seen, as yet, nothing in the whole of this debate coming from any one which gives the foundation upon which that estimate is to be made. There are, however, some things upon which we may make proper calculations and deductions; and I beg leave, for a short time, to present to the Senate some of the calculations and estimates I have made. I think there is a great deal in them. If there is nothing in them, before I am called upon to vote, I hope that gentlemen who may turn their attention to the subject, and those who have done so much more than I have, will answer me, and satisfy me that I am incorrect. My first inquiry is, how much capital has been invested in this line? for when you have the amount of capital invested, you have the basis upon which to say how much interest, or how much profit should be made to constitute a fair remuneration. We have the basis of that estimate. We are told, by the reports laid upon our tables, that the capital invested to fit these steamers ready for service, amounts to $2,944,142. It may be considered $3,000,000 in round numbers. But I give the sums accurately, according to the documents, and that which we have gives $2,944,142 as the actual outlay to fit these four steamers for operation. It therefore includes everything which belongs to them. Six per cent. interest upon that capital makes only $176,648 52 per annum. Twelve per cent. interest upon that sum makes $353,297 per annum; and we pay $385,000 a year. We therefore pay twelve per cent. interest upon the capital invested, and about $32,000 over and above that.

A Government bonus, amounting to more than twelve per cent. on a capital invested in a private business, by private individuals, is a greater bonus than I have ever known to be given, for the purpose of helping individuals in a business connected with the public service. There can be no denial of this fact, and of this view of the subject; that the compensation you already pay amounts to more than twelve per cent. on the whole capital invested; and then, in addition to that, you allow all the profits which are made by a trip. Let us see how that matter presents itself. This document says that the average amount made on each trip is $48,286, and some cents; twenty trips at that rate make $965,737 a year; in addition to that, the owners of the line have the Government pay $385,000.

Mr. HALE. That estimate includes the Government pay.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I had supposed not.

Mr. HALE. Yes, it does.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that is the case, my calculation is wrong. I do not so understand it.

Mr. SEWARD. With the permission of the Senator, I will state one or two facts which should be taken into consideration. The first is, that the insurance on these four ships amounts to more than half of all that is allowed by Congress for their support. The other is, that the deterioration of steamers by wear and tear, amounts to twelve per cent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My honorable friend will not permit me to come at it in my own way. I have included those items in my calculations. From this document I learn that the average receipts of each voyage have been $48,286—I am right according to the paper—the $48,286, the average receipts of each voyage, multiplied by the twenty trips, makes $965,737; add to that the $385,000 paid by Government, and you have $1,350,737 as the actual receipts of this line of steamers. No one can deny that, if the documents are correct. Here is the contract for the $385,000; here is the document which states that the average receipts per voyage is so much; and it makes in all this sum of $1,350,737. Now, what is the loss, or what is the expense, according to this same document, for each trip? It is $65,215, and twenty times that sum will give the whole outlay, amounting to $1,304,300; showing, by a calculation which cannot be gainsayed, that there is a clear gain of $46,437. There can be no resistance offered to that calculation; none whatever. It is according to the documents, and cannot be otherwise.

Now, I admit that this sum of $46,437 is no compensation for the insurance, for the capital invested, and so forth. It is deficient. It is not enough. It does not form a profitable investment. But when you engage in a great enterprise of this kind, and the Government patronizes it to the extent I have shown, and you bring out a clear profit of $46,437, there is some little allowance to be made for that increase of the business which lies ahead, and which the Senator from New York pointed out, I think with a good deal of propriety, and I hope with a prescience that will be realized. Although this profit is not sufficient as an immediate compensation for the capital invested, and the insurance and risk, yet something has to be risked in all undertakings of this nature. I have thus proved from the data before me, that this idea which has been started and harped on from the beginning, of an entire loss, cannot be indulged in.

Mr. SEWARD. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, I wish to inquire whether I understand him to include a portion of the $385,000 in this item of the receipts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not. I said that according to the document, the $385,000 was exclusive of the average receipts of $48,286.

Mr. SEWARD. The Senator is under a misapprehension with regard to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I am under a misapprehension, then my calculation is wrong.

Mr. SEWARD. I am sure it is so. The $48,286 includes the proportionate share of the $382,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state again that the document reads, "the average receipts of each voyage, $48,286." I understand from that, that the profit from each voyage, independent of the Government pay, amounts to that sum.

Mr. RUSK. Will the Senator allow me to explain that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly. I only want light.

Mr. RUSK. The expenses of each trip amounts to $65,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, I see that.

Mr. RUSK. The receipts of each voyage amount to $48,286, and there is just the loss complained of by these contractors. They pay out for each trip which they make $65,000. They receive $48,286. And that is the sum and substance which they complain of. There is the loss which they show to you. This comes to us from their book-keeper, under the formality of an oath; and I know the Senator does not want to be mistaken. As he refers to the report which I had the honor to make a few years ago, where the cost of sailing a war steamer of the first class was estimated by the Secretary of the Navy to be $190,000, I must say that I think the honorable Senator did not remember that if you give these men the same amount per ship which was given according to the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy, it will amount to within a few dollars of what they ask. If you multiply this $190,000 by four, you will have $760,000. The Senator was taking one ship in commission and comparing it with four ships run by the Collins line. He will also remember that this estimate of $190,000 was made upon two voyages which a steamer of the first class made, in commission, while these ships of the Collins line are running every day, and have a constant expense. The estimate of the Secretary of the Navy was made upon the distance which was sailed, which was little or nothing compared with the constant service performed by the Collins line.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I only referred to the cost of sailing our own men-of-war—our war steamers—as reported by the Secretary of the Navy, as a matter which had induced me to think upon this question, and enter upon its investigation. I had never seen the particular sums until I saw this report this morning. I had thought about them, and had a faint recollection in regard to them before, however. I do not now refer to them for the purpose of going into a minute comparison, because I have not had the information necessary to enable me to do so. But my friend's explanation does not relieve the difficulty between myself and the honorable Senator from New York, at all. He states exactly what the document says, and what I have read again and again. It is here stated that the amount expended in each trip is $65,215, and that the amount received is $48,286, and they show the difference between the expenditure and the receipts to be $16,929. Now the matter in doubt is this: Whether any part of $385,000 enters into the receipts? whether any part of the Government pay goes into the amount to make the receipts amount to $48,286? If it does not, then when you multiply the $48,286 by twenty, the number of trips, you should add the $385,000 to it; and when you add that, it makes $1,350,737. The only question with me is, whether the $48,286 embraces any part of the Government pay. According to a fair interpretation of this document, it does not. But, as I said, I am not sufficiently informed. And I may be wrong. So much for "receipts" for each trip is what they get for freight and passengers if I understand it.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is there anything to prove it besides this document which I have read? If there is I should like to see it?

Mr. MILLER. That is not the fair interpretation of the language of the document read. I understand that in giving an account of the receipts for each trip, the Senator has an idea that the $19,000 given by Government is not estimated in that amount.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir, that is my idea.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator is entirely mistaken. That amount is made up from an estimate of the actual receipts from each voyage; and in these receipts are included $19,000 received from Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, if that is a proper understanding of it, I again acknowledge that my calculations are, to that extent, wrong; as I have done several times already. The question is, whether the $19,000 paid by Government form a part of the receipts.

Mr. RUSK. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, if it is, I should not add the $19,000, as I have done. That is very clear. I take it that these receipts, of so much per voyage, show the amount of money derived from the conveyance of freight and passengers, only without regard to the compensation growing out of the contract with the Government. It should have been explicitly stated that these "receipts" embraced what the Government paid, if such had been the fact. Let us, if you please, very briefly examine what information we have as to the expenditure of the $65,215 for each trip in crossing the Atlantic. Mark you, sir, the information states that the whole capital—less than three millions—pays the cost of all these ships, ready for service. Of course, all the engines and fixtures, all the furniture, all the rigging, tackle, and everything belonging to the ships, are paid for by the capital to start with, of $2,944,142. What other expenses, then, can enter into the navigation of these ocean steamers to bring the cost of navigating them up to $65,215 a trip? That's the inquiry. On that point, no person has yet deigned to give me the information necessary to form a judgment; and in the absence of all information, communicated to enable a Western landsman to judge of sea matters, I have been compelled to proceed on the best lights I had. What are they? In estimating the cost of navigating these ocean steamers, I was compelled to compare them with the operations of our little steam water craft on our little spring branches in the West. Perhaps gentlemen may say that it is a very poor comparison to institute between one of our little shackling craft, that is knocked all to pieces by coming into contact with the first snag, or Polk stalk, as it is used to be called, in the Mississippi river, and one of the great ocean steamers. Well, inferior as it may be, and humble as it may be, in point of comparison, it is the best standard I have; and until I have a better, which some of the gentlemen who understand ocean navigation better than I do can furnish, I must resort to that I have. Well, in navigating our steamers, the cost of fuel forms a very considerable item; and in navigating the ocean steamers, the cost of fuel is also one great item, and I have endeavored to ascertain, as nearly as I can, what the cost of fuel would be for one of these steamers for one trip; and I will give the item, for I wish Senators to go into these items, and illuminate the subject for the benefit of the public. According to my information, the expenditure of coal has now been reduced to something like fifty tons a day, but I have allowed seventy-five tons, and I have looked into the New York Prices Current, in reference to the price of coal, and allowed $8 a ton, the highest price according to the quotations, and I find, by allowing seventy-five tons, at $8 per ton, the expense of fuel would amount to $600 a day. Now, what other expenses are there, everything else being paid for by the capital? Why, sir, there is food and water. I will go through my list, and give the items, and then gentlemen, in the prosecution of these investigations, can supply anything that I have omitted.

Food and water come next. The old military rations, when I was a soldier a long time ago, used to cost twenty cents per day. But in these days of progress, when California gold is felt here as well as upon the Pacific, we will not even stop at double that sum; I will not put it down at forty cents per day, but will allow fifty cents per day. I have excluded spirit rations, for perhaps if you were to put in spirit rations, and run up a Kos-suth bill of expense, you might possibly go beyond my calculations. I know some liberal gentlemen, such as I know the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] to be, would take in champagne and Madeira, and every other thing that is good.

Mr. BADGER. I wonder if the gentleman himself would take a little in?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A little, perhaps, but not as much as the honorable Senator from North Carolina. But to go on, and give some serious thoughts in reference to this matter, I had supposed that fifty cents per day would be a reasonable allowance for the material for food and drink; because you find the cooks provided for in another item. I do not know that we are to have wine and things of that sort paid for at the public expense. And I am not speaking of providing for the passengers, because you will remember that when they are to be provided for they pay for their own wine and luxuries, and it comes amply out of their own pockets. I am speaking of the provisions necessary for the crews of these ships—for the officers and men, stewards, cooks, and servants, on board, and whose services are necessary in navigating and attending to the management of the ship and duties on board.

I beg to make a distinction between the passengers and crew. When you come to the passengers, there is an increased expenditure depending upon the amount gentlemen are willing to consume and pay for in the way of luxuries, wine, &c. That has nothing to do with furnishing the necessities for the ship's crew; and when you come to them, if our ships are furnished at a greater rate than fifty cents per day, or half of that, it is an extravagance that has not yet crept into the management of our Government vessels. But to show that I am liberal in the extreme, I allow fifty cents per day, which will provide the necessities of life in a much more costly manner than they are provided for in our national ships. Now, how many hands have you to provide for? I suppose not more than one hundred and fifty. I have made some inquiries, and I was informed that that number would probably embrace the whole ship's crew. I have now provided for food; I have provided for water; I have provided for fuel. What more expense is there? Nothing but wages; for out of the wages, the clothing and other necessities are provided by the crew themselves. How much must be allowed for the wages of these one hundred and fifty officers, men, and boys, who navigate these ships? I suppose a dollar a day would be a very extravagant sum for many of the hands that can be hired by the month. How much for the officers on board? I am told that most of these ships are navigated by our own officers, and I suppose they draw their salaries from Government while navigating these ships.

Mr. MILLER. Not at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am told they do not now. Then they are paid out of the profits of the ship. What salaries ought to be paid to the officers on board of these ships? These are proper inquiries; and I have allowed in my calculations something like California prices; because, not knowing how much the cook, the fireman, the waiter, the sailor, and engineer would get, I was compelled to lump them off at $5 per day, all around. That is very liberal, I think, and will bring them all nearly to the notch of $2,000 a year. Allowing $5 a day for each officer, man, and boy, and putting their number at one hundred and fifty, it would bring their wages to $273,750 per annum—a sum sufficient to pay one hundred laborers on board $2 per day throughout the year, and leave enough to give salaries to fifty officers, exceeding $4,000 to each! Sir, I have allowed for wages three times as much as it ought to be.

Five dollars a day for each of one hundred and fifty hands, makes $750. Then, according to this report or memorial, it takes eleven days, upon an average, to cross the ocean. Multiply all these sums by that number, and it gives an aggregate of $15,675; and to come back again, it makes it amount to $31,350 for a trip—the sailing time of a trip. I have already said that I have no means of estimating for the resting time of the trip; nor do I know how much time is spent in port. According to this calculation, then, it does not make the half of the $65,000 for the expense per trip, as the memorial states.

I again advert to the idea with which I started. These gentlemen may have expended the $65,000; but, I repeat, that is not the question. They may have lost double, triple, quadruple that, for aught I know; but the question is, were they compelled to lose it by economical management? Were they compelled, in carrying on the business in which they were associated with the Government, to incur the expenditures in the necessary performance of the business in which they sustained the loss? That is the inquiry; and there is nothing before me, from any fact communicated by any individual or committee, which enables me to judge further than I have attempted to judge from these, perhaps you may say, very crude considerations. I have made no allowance for wear and tear, for repairs, and for insurance, because I do not know how much they amount to, and no one has taken the trouble to ascertain, and to inform us. The amount of repairs are always uncertain, because they depend much upon accidents, which cannot be anticipated or estimated. It is the fault of the documents before me, that these things were not all exhibited.

Mr. BORLAND. I would ask the Senator if he has taken into his account of expenses the expense of that very remarkable trip made to Washington, a few months ago, by one of those ships?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, sir; I left that out. I thought it might come in under the head of "extras," for which compensation is sometimes made by a vote of the Senate, to a great many people.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to make one statement. As I understand the honorable Senator, according to his calculation, what he calls a trip across and back costs $31,350.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. According to the data which I have thus given.

Mr. MILLER. In that he does not take into consideration the expense of sustaining the passengers, or the money received from them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. MILLER. Then, if the ship merely performs the service of carrying the mail from New York to Liverpool, it will cost the company $31,650; and yet they get from the Government only $19,250 per trip. The gentleman makes out the whole case, that they ought to receive the amount proposed by the amendment—a little over $30,000 per trip.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well; let us attend to the suggestion of my friend from New Jersey. He thinks it would be right for the Government just to pay all the expenses of performing this service, and give all the profit on freight and passengers away for nothing at all. Is that the thing we are to be engaged in?

Mr. MILLER. The Senator misunderstands me. He has made a calculation, the results of which he presented to the Senate as the actual cost of running one of the ships without regard to the passage money. He discards the account that has been presented, and makes his account merely with regard to the actual cost.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will explain it all.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator takes that view, I say the actual cost of running the ship, without regard to passengers, will amount to the sum designated. But if he takes the other view, and gives the amount of expense sustained by the ship in carrying the passengers, he must also take in the amount of passage money.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will do that. The only difficulty is, that I cannot get to do it in my own way. But, as to the suggestion of the honorable Senator, in the view in which I was going to present it, would he think it reasonable for the Government to have to pay all the expenses both ways, and allow the company to derive all the profits? Certainly that would not be reasonable. I have given you the expenses by showing what the fuel, and food, and wages, to support the ship's crew, would amount to; and I have shown, according to the data which I have given—and if I am not right, I want to be corrected—that the support of the ship's crew, and the running of the vessel, would not amount to the half of the sum which has been expended in the navigation. But then the gentleman comes forward, and says: "You do not take into consideration anything which is furnished to passengers; you do not take into consideration any of the expenses of loading and unloading the vessel; you do not take into consideration the various things connected with passage, and with the trade and commerce carried on by the ships." Sir, I intentionally left all that out. And why? Because every man knows that the passenger on board the ship pays his own way, and more than pays it. He pays it with a great profit to the owners of the ship. Every one knows that every article of food, every luxury, everything of that kind, which is put on board for the benefit of the passengers, they get at a very great profit to those who furnish it. Every one knows that every pound of merchandise put on board the ship for commercial purposes, or transportation, is paid for, and at a profit. Therefore, there is nothing in the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey. All that ought to be left out, because, when you take it into consideration, it is the great source of profit to the owners of the ships.

Now, I want gentlemen to show me, if they please, how it is that we could, by economical management, with paying just wages, make the expense amount to $65,000. And when they make out a "clean bill"—to use the expression of yourself, sir, [Mr. Mangum temporarily occupying the chair]—and let me see it, I can tell then whether it is proper to vote for the amendment, or give up the enterprise. But we have not the facts now sufficiently before us to justify a correct judgment. As far as I have got the facts, it appears to me that the $33,000 proposed in the amendment to be given, is altogether exorbitant. And now, to prove that, you propose, by the amendment, to increase the trips to twenty-six, and to give $33,000 for each trip. That makes $858,000 per annum. Well, sir, that $858,000 per annum would, in less than four years, more than pay the capital invested. Was there ever such a business as that before?

Mr. RUSK. The Senator seems to forget altogether that we are receiving postages from this line. He makes the calculation as if we were not receiving back a single cent; when the fact of the business is, that the postages themselves, for the first two years, amounted to within $256,000 of the amount paid out by the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not forget anything; but I do not go on, perhaps, as rapidly as other minds.

Mr. RUSK. You forget that one side of the account.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; I do not forget it. The question I am investigating is, How is Mr. Collins affected by going on with the performance of this service? I am not investigating how much the Government loses or gains, but I am investigating whether Mr. Collins sustains an expenditure of $65,000 per trip; and if we pay him $33,000 a trip, how long it will take to pay or return his capital; and, in reference to that investigation, whether the Government gets postage, or gets not a cent, has nothing to do with it. I am upon one thing, and the gentleman's mind is running upon another. I am endeavoring to show that $65,000, with good economy, and skill, and management, according to the facts, could not be spent; and that has nothing to do with the receipts or losses of the Government. I say, though, that if you give $33,000 a trip, for twenty-six trips, it makes $858,000; and that that $858,000, according to the data here, pays for the whole capital invested in a little more than three years—between three and four years it pays for the capital invested, and gives to the owners of the line every cent of profit they can make from passengers and freight. Now, sir, I am going to take no such leap as that in the dark. I must be fully informed of everything before I can think a moment of doing it.

Now, sir, it is said that we get, to be sure, some compensation for these $858,000. Suppose we do, does that alter the fact that the capital is repaid in between three and four years? Not at all. And I bring forward the fact to show that this is a business that cannot be sustained by the Government, if it costs as much as that; that we cannot pay for steam lines, if we are to reimburse the owners of those lines for the whole capital invested in between three and four years. I want to manage this postal affair so that I can avail myself of the liberal doctrines which the Senator from New York has avowed here—to give some aid to lines from Boston, New Orleans, Charleston, and other ports—even to the ports of the Old Dominion, when they shall be put into operation. But when I am showing the facts that carry out the view, that if you apply it to everybody it will make it necessary to pay in three or four years those capitalists who invest in steam-ships the whole amount of the capital out of the Treasury of the United States, I am answered by being told, "Why, you receive a portion of the earnings of the ships, in the shape of postage!" I admit that it is so; but I rely upon this to show that this is either partiality to the port of New York, or, if you make it general, and extend it according to the suggestion of the gentleman—as I am anxious to do, if you go into the business at all—it is to go upon principles which cannot stand. I therefore say, from the facts which we have before us, that these $858,000 a year, to be paid for the performance of these trips, is an exorbitant allowance, and before I can go for it, it must be reduced.

Sir, I will not detain the Senate by going into the sum which I think would be reasonable. I think I can stand $25,000 a trip; but I cannot go beyond that. From the view which I have of the subject, I would be willing to allow that amount; and if it will not enable this line to go on, I am pretty much inclined to think that we had better put an end to it. If it is to come to this, that when lines are started from every part of the country we are to reimburse to their proprietors, within four years the capital which they have invested in them, I cannot consent to it. It ought not to be done, and I hope it will not be done. But as we are about to allow this line, and as I am anxious to allow this line to perform additional trips with the view of making the competition between it and the Cunard line complete as regards the amount of trips, I am for enlarging the compensation somewhat. I believe it would be better for these parties to take $20,000 per trip, (which is about the amount that they now receive,) for twenty-six trips, than for twenty trips; for I suppose it would be better for them to keep their ships in motion, but I have not sufficient information to form an opinion as to that point.

I have now indicated my difficulties. I have indicated my wishes. I shall sustain them by my vote. I cannot vote for the amendment as it now stands.

Mr. JAMES. I have a few remarks which I would like to make on this question; but as the hour is late, and as it is desirable to have an Executive session, I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject until to-morrow at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 27, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER announced, as the first business before the House, reports from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. We have a very important matter before the House, upon which we shall be called to vote in a day or two; and I therefore move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

Mr. DEAN. If the gentleman will withhold that motion for one moment, I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a private bill, and have it referred to a Committee of the Whole House. I shall have to leave town to-night or to-morrow morning.

Mr. HENN. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope we shall have the call of committees during the morning hour.

The question was then taken on Mr. MOORE's motion, and, on a division, there were—ayes 63, noes 56; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOUSTON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. WILLIAMS, and JOHNSON of Arkansas, were appointed.

And the question being again put, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 72, noes not counted.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the business before the committee, the consideration of House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and for other purposes; on which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, addressed the committee an hour. In regard to this bill he took occasion to say, that if the public lands were to be disposed of as indicated by the action of the last Congress, in the form of grants, he was decidedly in favor of disposing of them in the manner provided for by this bill. He preferred this mode of benefaction to the poor men of the country to that wholesale system of giving the lands to railroad companies and to States. He was inclined, however, to favor the postponement of this question if the land was to be given away, until a general system could be devised in regard to an equitable disposition of the public domain. He also discussed at some length the condition of parties in regard to the compromise measures, maintaining that no party can or ought to succeed in the coming canvass, unless it adopted as the basis of its organization an adherence to those measures. The conventions, he said, might meet and patch up platforms to suit party purposes, but none of them would be sustained by the popular will of the country, unless based upon the Constitution. [Mr. S.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SMITH next obtained the floor, and addressed the committee in favor of the bill, maintaining that it was constitutional; and that it would not do at this late day to controvert the constitutionality of the measure, when the abstract question of the right of Congress to dispose of the public domain by grants, donations, and benefactions, had been yielded years ago. [Mr. Smith's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. HENDRICKS, of Indiana, addressed the committee on the subject generally of the public lands, and in support of the bill under consideration; and towards the conclusion of his remarks, to obviate objections which had been urged against the measure, he suggested the propriety of recommending the bill with instructions to amend it, so that the lands may be purchased at the cost price to the Government. [Mr. H.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, next obtained the floor, but gave way to

Mr. CHANDLER, who moved that the committee do now rise.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman [Mr. HIBBARD] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting every man who is at the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, for the period herein specified, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. VENABLE. I will suggest that, as the debate is soon to close upon this bill, and as there are a number of gentlemen who yet desire to speak upon it, that we take a recess till half-past seven o'clock, or to any hour which gentlemen may name, in order to give those gentlemen that opportunity.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no objection to the proposition, provided it be understood that no business shall be transacted at the night session.

Mr. VENABLE. Certainly, I suppose that is the understanding.

Objection was made to the proposition.

Mr. VENABLE. Does an objection overrule the proposition entirely?

The SPEAKER. It does. It would require a suspension of the rules; and a motion to suspend is not in order except on Mondays.

Mr. DEAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to report a bill for the purpose of having it referred to a Committee of the Whole House. I would not make the request, were it not that I have to leave the city to-morrow morning.

Mr. HENN objected.

On motion by Mr. HALL,

The House then adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

Mr. BOYD, of Kentucky: The petition of citizens of St. Joseph county, Indiana, in favor of an appropriation for the construction of a canal around the Falls of the Ohio river.

By Mr. WASHBURN: The memorial of the Androscoggin Railroad Company in Maine, for remission of duties on certain railroad iron, and for other relief.

By Mr. CURTIS: A petition of John L. Hickman, praying for compensation as messenger in 1841.

By Mr. PARKER, of Indiana: The petition of M. L. Bundy, Joel Reed, and 41 others, citizens of Henry county, Indiana, praying for another canal around the Falls of Ohio.

By Mr. KUHN: The petition of Rebecca Mansfield, widow of Samuel Mansfield, late of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, a soldier of the late war with Great Britain, praying Congress for a pension.

By Mr. SMART: The petition of Tina H. Spinney and others, citizens of Georgetown, Lincoln county, Maine, asking for a repeal of the rendition law of 1850.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 28, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. COOPER presented the petition of William Marcus Bayly, praying indemnity for loss of property in consequence of his forcible expulsion from Mexico during the late war with that Republic; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject of claims against Mexico.

Mr. MORTON. I present the petition of Mrs. Rebecca Munden, in behalf of herself and children, who represents that her late husband, Emanuel Munden, was an inhabitant of Florida in 1812 and 1813, when it was invaded by the United States army; that all of his property was destroyed or lost in consequence of said invasion; that he was entitled under the treaty of 1819 with Spain to indemnity for said loss. She further represents that her husband was prevented by poverty, and other causes, from reaching St. Augustine (where the judge resided) in time to file his claim under the act of 1834; and, inasmuch as other sufferers similarly situated have been allowed by special act of Congress to file their claims, she asks that the like privilege be allowed her, in behalf of herself and children. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, it was Ordered, That the documents on the files of the Senate relative to the claim of the children of Hannah Scott, widow of William Scott, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill to provide for the repair and improvement of the dam at the head of Cumberland Island, in the Ohio river, reported back the same without amendment.

On motion by Mr. DAVIS, it was Ordered, That sundry papers received from the Department on the subject be printed with the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Cadwalader Wallace, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, to aid in the construction of a railroad from the Wabash to the Missouri river, reported back the same with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Amos Proctor; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRADBURY, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the holding of the district court for the District of Columbia during the sickness or other disability of the district judge; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF THE CONQUEST OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN. I ask the indulgence of the Senate this morning, to permit me to make a motion to take up Senate bill No. 8, which provides for the settlement of claims which originated in the military operations in California during the years 1846 and 1847. I will briefly state the reasons which induce me to make this motion at this time.

By the mail this morning, I received a letter from Colonel John C. Frémont, late a member of this body, dated London, April 13, 1852, in which he states, that on the evening of the 8th instant, as he was stepping into a carriage with his family, to visit a friend, he was arrested by a party of four Bow street officers, who were of a low order, rude and insolent; that they were accompanied by a solicitor's clerk of the same character. No time was allowed him to collect information, or have intercourse with his friends; he was simply informed that he was arrested, at the suit of unknown parties, for the sum of $50,000; that he subsequently ascertained that he was arrested on liabilities connected with his military operations in California during the years 1846 and 1847; that he was confined under lock and key for twenty-four hours, subjected to the most exorbitant extortions. He also says, that he will be compelled to maintain an expensive law suit, employ solicitors and able counsel, and go through all the anxiety, delays, and incidental expenses of the law, or pay $50,000. He further says, he has reason to believe that this suit will be followed by many others for large amounts beyond his ability to give security, thus permanently endangering his personal liberty.

I have reason to believe that the whole proceeding was unusual, and such as could not have happened to an Englishman of character; and that it is considered by American citizens, resident in London, conversant with the circumstances, not only an outrage to Colonel Frémont, but disrespectful to our Government.

I am requested by Colonel Frémont to bring the subject to the notice of Congress; and in doing so, I make this appeal to the Senate to take up the bill I have indicated and act upon it. The subject of these claims was thoroughly examined by the Senate three years ago; and a bill, reported by Mr. Cass, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, was passed, providing for the creation of a Board of Commissioners to examine these claims, and appropriating $700,000 for their payment. In the House this Senate bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which reported a substitute providing for a Board, and appropriating half a million of dollars; but it was not acted on, owing to difficulties about our territorial acquisitions, which obstructed most of the legislation at the close of that session.

I brought this subject to the attention of the Senate at the last session, and again at an early period in this session. The Committee on Military Affairs have reported a bill, which I wish may be taken up now, that we may act upon it, so that we may relieve Colonel Frémont from his unpleasant situation. I therefore move that all previous orders be postponed for the purpose of considering the bill to create a Board of Commissioners for the examination and payment of claims against the United States, growing out of the conquest of California.

Mr. BORLAND. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is not now present, and I think it is very important that he should be present when this bill is taken up for consideration. Nor can I see that there is any necessity for proceeding at this time to its consideration, for it cannot, in my opinion, afford the immediate relief that Colonel Frémont's situation seems to require.

Mr. HALE. I am told that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is within the Capitol, in the library room, and I hope he may be called for.

Mr. GWIN. I desire that he may be sent for.

Mr. SHIELDS having arrived, the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill, as it was originally introduced by Mr. Gwin, proposed to authorize the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint three disinterested persons to act as commissioners in California to ascertain and pay all proper, reasonable, and just claims and demands against the Government of the United States, growing out of the conquest of California by the American volunteers, army and naval forces, the military occupation thereof by the conquerors, and the administration of the civil government thereafter established. The bill further provides that the persons appointed as commissioners should be sworn or affirmed; that they should not be interested in any claim which they would have to examine and allow; that they should appoint a clerk, keep a record of their proceedings, and return a duplicate thereof to the War Department; that they should take testimony on oath for or against any claim when deemed necessary; that they should have power to send for persons and papers, and should allow or disallow the claims in whole or in part, according to the justice of the case. The bill further provides that the troops enlisted or enrolled in California and employed there should be paid as volunteer mounted riflemen, finding their own horses or forage, and that they should have all the benefits of the acts of Congress in favor of the troops engaged in the war with Mexico. The Board, it was provided, should give three months' public notice of the times and places at which they would sit; and all claims not presented within twelve months from its first sitting, should be deemed and held to be unfounded and unjust, and should be forever barred; provided, however, that such time might be extended by the President of the United States for twelve months. The decisions of the majority of the Board were to be final, and should authorize a certificate to be issued to the claimant for the immediate payment of the amount allowed, by some disbursing officer to be appointed by the President of the United States. Provision was also made for the payment of salaries to the members of the Board, which were not to exceed in the aggregate, in full for all traveling expenses of each or other allowances, the sum of $5,000 per annum. The remuneration of the clerk was limited to $4,000, and that of witnesses to the amounts established by law to witnesses in attendance upon the district courts of the State of California.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and by that committee it was reported back with an amendment, striking out of the original bill all after the enacting clause, and inserting a substitute, providing that the troops enlisted or enrolled in California, under the direction of the military and naval officers, should be paid as volunteer mounted riflemen, finding their own horses and forage, and that they should have all the benefits of all acts of Congress in favor of troops engaged in the war with Mexico. It further directed the Secretary of War to ascertain, by the agency of three competent officers, and report to Congress, on the second Monday in January, 1853, the amount of all just claims and demands for supplies furnished or services rendered to those troops, and moneys advanced for their support, and all other debts and liabilities contracted with a view to the active prosecution of hostilities by those troops. The substitute provided further that the sum of $10,000 be appropriated for the expenses of the examination of the claims, including such allowances to the officers of the Board as the Secretary of War should consider proper.

Mr. GWIN. I propose to offer a substitute for the bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. I retain in my proposed substitute the first section as it is reported with regard to the payment of the troops. I have changed the second section, so as to make it more simple and effective. I therefore move to strike out the second section, and insert what I send to the Secretary.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the troops enlisted or enrolled in California, under the direction of the military and naval officers, shall be paid as volunteer mounted riflemen, finding their own horses and forage, and shall have all the benefits of all acts of Congress in favor of troops engaged in the war with Mexico.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be directed to ascertain and report to Congress, as soon as practicable, the amount of all unpaid claims and demands for supplies furnished or services rendered to said troops, and moneys advanced for their support, and all other debts and liabilities contracted with a view to the active prosecution of hostilities by said troops, which may be or have been presented to any officer of the United States or Department of the Government of the United States, together with such evidence to sustain them as may be submitted to him or those charged by him with the investigation of those claims in support thereof.

Mr. GWIN. My object is to do away with the Board of Commissioners, for this reason: There are officers connected with the Paymaster's and Quartermaster's Department, who can be ordered forthwith to report to the Secretary of War. These officers understand the terms necessary to present the claims properly, and they know the kind of evidence which is proper to be received in order to sustain any claim. Besides, I am anxious that the claims shall be acted upon speedily by Congress. I understand that the Secretary of War can obtain the information without the aid of a Board of Commissioners.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was not in the Chamber when this measure was called up this morning, and did not expect that I should be called on to meet the case; I am not, therefore, very well prepared to understand the lengths to which this amendment may go. I understand very well the original bill, or rather the bill which was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs; and I think I can understand how far that may go, and what it was intended to accomplish. I, for one, regard it as a very liberal measure in relation to California—extremely so. We found great difficulty in the Committee on Military Affairs to devise any plan to meet this particular case; and, up to the present session, there was a total refusal on its part to act on the subject. As I understand, the difficulty is to separate those cases which are fair, just, and equitable, and make an appropriation for them, from what we regard as the numerous spurious claims which have been hatched up somehow or other in California. We could get no information from the Department on the subject, for it had none in its possession, except an immense amount of reclamations against the Department for services rendered to the troops, for provisions, and for various services rendered, as the claimants assert, to the Government, in what is termed the "conquest of California." We finally concluded that the best plan would be to authorize the War Department to select three competent officers; and as these officers would be the best judges of what was absolutely necessary and essential during the military service in California, they were to determine who were the persons actually called out by those in command, what services they rendered, how long they were on service, and when discharged; and, further, to pay them for the time and service rendered. These officers were to ascertain: First, who rendered service to the Government; and next, what the amount of the service was before any claim was paid. We cannot venture to legislate on this subject, in my opinion, before we settled those points.

Mr. GWIN. That is provided in the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. The honorable Senator says that provision is contained in the amendment. The first section of the substitute offered by the Senator is exactly similar, it is true, to the first section of the bill reported from the committee; but here is the difference: in our amendment we propose to appoint a "Board," to examine into the claims, and in his bill there is no Board mentioned.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that the Secretary of War has the power to establish a "Board," in both cases. The only difference is, that my substitute simplifies the proposition of the committee, and while it gives the Secretary of War the power of appointing a "Board," consisting of more than three persons, if he chooses; if he should prefer, he can also collect the information through the officers of the Quartermaster's and Paymaster's Departments, if, in his judgment, the appointment of a "Board" of three officers were unnecessary to promote the public interests.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will again ask the honorable Senator a question. Does he intend, by this amendment, that the Secretary of War shall pay these claims, before making a report to Congress?

Mr. GWIN. Certainly not. He must first report.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then the bill does not give the Secretary one particle of power that he does not possess at this moment. He has now power to receive evidence, and lay the whole matter before Congress. Does the Senator know that the Committee on Military Affairs has the whole subject before it now, precisely in the shape contemplated by him? The claims against the Government; the amount of the claims; the persons who make the claims; together with the relative amounts for money, provisions, cattle, services, and so forth—all are before the committee. "And why not legislate on it now?" What we want to do is to separate the just from the spurious and fraudulent claims. How is that to be done by the Senator's bill? He asks us to gather up all these claims, and bring them into Congress for us to fight them out here.

We have now an immense bundle of papers before that committee, embracing claims for provisions, claims for money, claims for military service, for horses bought and sold, for horses lost and killed. All these are now before the committee.

Now, what I want the gentleman to do—and mark, I am in favor of the general object sought, as much as the gentleman himself is, and the Senator from California knows this, for I have urged it from the very commencement—what I want is, a plan upon which I have acted at the suggestion of the War Department, and in regard to which the Committee on Military Affairs are unanimously agreed, and which is to select three competent officers. I have very little confidence in Boards of Commissioners which may be established. I have had sufficient evidence to satisfy my mind that they are not to be relied on.

We concluded that the cheapest way, and that which would be most easily accomplished, would be to appoint three competent officers here in the city of Washington, to determine what are the peculiar claims that should be paid, and that those which cannot be determined in Washington, shall be examined by the officers going to California, and determined there, and then bring before Congress, not the whole of these claims, but so many as are just and ought to be paid, and then let Congress act upon their report. I am perfectly willing, if the gentleman will show me a quicker or better method of settling these claims, to adopt that method. But so far as the substitute of the Senator is concerned, if I understand it, there is no provision in it which gives the Department any authority which they have not now under the law.

"Be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be directed to ascertain, and report to Congress as soon as practicable, all the unpaid claims and demands."

He has reported all that he has been able to ascertain already.

"For supplies furnished and services rendered to said troops, and moneys advanced for their support," &c.

The object of this is merely to get a report from the War Department of all the claims against the Government. It accomplishes nothing. It does not authorize their payment; it leaves the whole matter for Congress to act upon when this information is received. I will therefore ask, if the gentleman objects to the bill as reported by the committee, that he will examine the report from the War Department, which embraces all that he asks for.

Mr. GWIN. I have very little choice about the form in which this matter is accomplished. My great objection is, that the mode proposed by the committee requires the appointment of a Board of Commissioners. I am perfectly confident that the War Department has refused to report on many claims which I have presented there.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will answer the Senator, because, I presume, he only wants to accomplish the same object as desired by the committee, and to do it fairly and honestly. I have contemplated an amendment to enable these three officers, when selected here by the Department and the Secretary of War, to sit in Washington and determine before they set out for California, what bills should be drawn and moneys paid. Now, I would ask if that is not a speedier mode of accomplishing this object, than the one proposed by the Senator? If I were not called on to act so suddenly, I should have reported that amendment in connection with the bill.

Mr. GWIN. I was not aware of that fact. Let the Senator prepare his amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. As the morning hour is about to expire, and as the Senator from Illinois is to prepare an amendment, I think it would be better to allow this bill to lie over until to-morrow, as my colleague has the floor to-day on the subject of non-intervention.

Mr. SHIELDS. I want to have it out of the way; I therefore move to recommit the bill, together with the amendment of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill so re-committed.

NON-INTERVENTION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolutions submitted by Mr. CLARKE, reaffirming the doctrine of non-intervention; the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. CASS.

Mr. COOPER addressed the Senate upwards of two hours and a half. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. WADE. I desire to make some observations upon the matters now under consideration. I will move, therefore, to postpone the further consideration of the subject, until such time as shall be thought proper by the Senate. I do not wish to interfere with any of the practical business that is pressing on the attention of the Senate.

Several SENATORS suggested to-morrow (Thursday) week.

Mr. WADE. I move, then, to postpone the further consideration of the subject until to-morrow week.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 28, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

Mr. OLDS. I ask my colleague to withdraw the motion in order to enable me to introduce a resolution calling on the President for information.

Mr. CABLE. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

THE HARGOUS AND GARDINER CLAIMS.

Mr. OLDS then presented the following resolutions; which were read by the Clerk for information, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to this House, if not deemed incompatible with the public interest, a copy of such report, or reports, as may have been received by the Government from Mr. George Slacum, the agent dispatched to Mexico to investigate the merits of the Hargous, the Gardiner, the Mears, and other claims against Mexico, allowed and passed by the late Board of Commissioners upon the claims against the Mexican Government, and a copy also of all reports or dispatches upon the same subject which may have been received from Mr. Letcher, the Minister of the United States at the city of Mexico, or from any member of that Minister's legation.

Resolved, also, That the President communicate such official information as he may have received of the cause of the long delay of the criminal court of the District of Columbia in bringing to trial Dr. George A. Gardiner, who, many months ago was arrested and held to bail in the sum of $40,000 upon a charge of perjury in the matter of obtaining an award of $428,750 out of the Treasury of the United States.

Resolved, also, That the President inform the House whether he has any official information that either of the Cabinet Ministers received, for professional services, and for moneys advanced, any portion of the so-called Gardiner's award.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman can get that information personally, if he will apply to the President. This is a matter of judicial investigation, and I do not think this House should go into it. I can be prepared to answer a portion of the questions, if the gentleman desires it, and I shall be happy to do so; but I do not think it is the business of the House to interfere with the judicial department of the Government.

Mr. OLDS. If the gentleman objects, I cannot offer it, as a matter of course.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I object to it only because it is a matter which the House has no right to investigate. The language of the resolution calls for information which it would be incompatible with the public interest to communicate.

Mr. OLDS. Well, I suppose it will be entered upon the Journal from whom this objection comes.

Mr. WOODWARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk procure for the use of the members a sufficient number of revolving chairs, of the style and description of those occupied by the Clerk and his assistants.

Mr. WOODWARD. I will remark, if the House will indulge me, that the expense of repairing the old chairs we have in use is more than the interest upon the money it would require to purchase new ones.

Mr. STANLY. The position of all parties at present is revolving enough anyhow. I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASCALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present two petitions—one from the citizens of Albany, and one from the citizens of Genesee county, praying that an act may be passed to protect patentees against infringers of patents from Canada; and move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Patents, with instructions to report a bill in pursuance of the prayer of the petitioners.

Mr. CABLE. I object, if it is to go with instructions; and renew the motion to go into committee.

Mr. HASCALL. Then I ask that it be referred without instructions.

Mr. CABLE. I have no objection to that.

The petitions were then received, and accordingly referred.

Mr. BRIGGS. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. MCNAIR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a memorial, signed by Charles Greenawalt and two hundred and fifty-eight other citizens, in favor of a modification of the bounty land act of 1850, so as to give each benefited by said act and the seamen and marines who served in the war of 1812 not less than one hundred and sixty acres of land.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object, and renew the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and there were—ayes 72, noes 21; no quorum voting.

Mr. COBB demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. JONES, of Tennessee, and CLINGMAN, were appointed.

The question was then again put, and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 13; still no quorum voting.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and being taken, the result was—yeas 108, nays 14.

So the motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the first business in order, House bill No. 7, being a bill for the encouragement of agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and for other purposes, upon which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, claimed to be among the earliest and most steadfast friends of the wise and humane policy of providing homes for the homeless. His mind was not only clear, but free from the shadow of doubt, as to the constitutional power to pass such a law. The power was in express terms, and nothing is left to implication. He then proceeded to show how the interests of the entire country would be benefited by the measure, and the moral, social, and political condition of the people improved. He answered some of the objections which had been urged against the adoption of such a policy, and explained the provisions of a substitute which he intended to offer to the bill under consideration. He regarded the present preemption system as a curse to the settler. How many persons would accept the bounty proposed by this bill he could not say; but that many will, he had no doubt. He warned its friends, in conclusion, that it is an old trick when the enemies of a measure cannot openly fight it, they attack it in ambuscade. Many bills are killed in this way; and the hands thus employed can no more be seen than that which struck Billy Patterson. One of the modes is by going into committee upon a bill. The yeas and nays are not taken in committee, and, as a consequence, there is no record and no responsibility. When an amendment is offered in good faith, much the greater portion of members make it appear ridiculous. The questions are taken by passing between the tellers, until the features of the bill are so distorted that its friends do not recognize it; and it is then left to the tender care of its enemies, who kill it without mercy. On this measure he anticipated the usual course of proceedings; and should not be surprised to see an amendment offered to give every man a horse and cow, another to give farming utensils, and another a negro to work his land; and all intended to bring the bill into ridicule, and thus procure its defeat. Give us a fair record vote; and if the bill shall be lost, the country will then know who are its friends and who are its enemies.

Mr. PARKER, of Indiana, next obtained the floor, and addressed the committee an hour. He adverted to the manifesto of certain Southern Whigs, which appeared in the Republic of this morning, to the people of the United States, in regard to the failure of the recent Whig caucus, in the Senate chamber, to indorse the compromise measures. By that manifesto, he said that he and others, who were present on the occasion alluded to, had been placed in a false position. He therefore presented his protest, in reference to the deductions of those who signed that paper, so far as he was concerned. If these gentlemen so regarded it, yet he did not; that "the vote on GENTRY's amendment was an emphatic declaration" by that meeting, that the persons present remained uncommitted as to their own support of the adjustment measures, or that they refused to establish any such test of the qualification of the nominee of the National Convention. That was not his position, by any means. Although he did not withdraw from the meeting, as did those who signed the manifesto, yet, for one, he stood committed to the compromise measures. He stood before his constituents so committed, and that was the reason that they had returned him as their Representative. He did not evade the question of a test by any connection of his with the action of the caucus, so far as his candidate was concerned, for he would expect, whoever he supported for that exalted position, to be as sound as he was upon the Constitution and the compromise measures. His view, in reference to this whole matter, was this—and it was upon that he had acted, and acted consistently—he had deemed the question as decided by his constituents, when they sent him to Congress. They were willing to abide by the compromise measures, but were opposed to further agitation upon the questions involved therein.

In regard to the policy proper to be observed in disposing of the public domain, he argued in favor of the following basis for a system:

1. That hereafter the sales of the public lands of the United States, when made for cash, shall only be to such persons as will make oath that they purchase for actual settlement; and sales so made shall be at the rate of twenty-five cents per acre, and no more. And patents shall issue on such sales so soon as there shall have been five years' continuous occupation by the purchaser, his heirs, or assigns.

2. That all the public lands now in market, if not sold within five years, shall vest in the States respectively where they are situate; and all lands hereafter brought into market, if not sold within five years thereafter, shall in like manner vest; and all lands so vesting shall be sold by the proper State, within a reasonable time, for such reasonable sum per acre as to the State may seem expedient. And the net proceeds of all such last-mentioned sales shall be appropriated as follows: One third thereof to the State making the sale, for a perpetual common school fund; one third to be ratably apportioned among the other States and the District of Columbia, in proportion to the representation of each State in Congress, and regarding the District as entitled to one Representative, for a like purpose; and the remaining third to the American Colonization Society, for the colonization of the free blacks of the United States, with their own consent, in the Republic of Liberia.

Mr. MILLISON next obtained the floor, and made an argument in opposition to the bill, maintaining that it was unconstitutional, and that that clause of the Constitution which conferred upon Congress the power to dispose of and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, did not confer unlimited power in regard to the disposition of the public domain; but, like all other powers in that instrument, was limited by the objects for which the Government was created.

[These speeches will be found in the Appendix.] Mr. WALSH here obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. GROW, who moved that the committee rise.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to. The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. HUBBARD) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting every man who is at the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, for the period herein specified, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. FLORENCE, by unanimous consent, introduced resolutions of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, in relation to the Parker patent for cast-iron submerged reaction water-wheels; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, a bill for the construction of a canal around the Falls in the Ohio river, at Louisville.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the report cannot be received.

On motion of Mr. McMULLIN, the House then adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BELL: A petition of citizens of Preble county, Ohio, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Eaton, by the way of Sugar Valley, to West Floren, in Preble county, Ohio.

By Mr. McNAIR: The memorial of Charles Greenwalt and 258 others, citizens of Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, in favor of a modification of the bounty land act of 28th September, 1850, so as to give each person benefited by said act, and the seamen and marines who served in the war of 1812, not less than one hundred and sixty acres of land.

By Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana: A statement of T. W. Sail, in relation to his claim for additional services as assistant marshal in taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. JOHN W. HOWE: The petition of D. McCoy and 38 others, citizens of Clarion county, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to establish a post route from the borough of Coudersburg to Catfish post office, in said county.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of Frederick Klett, Peter Yeager, Robert Flanagan, J. E. Hagert, and 107 others, citizens of Philadelphia, petitioning Congress to pass a law to grant one hundred and sixty acres of land to soldiers of the war of 1812, the Indian, and Florida wars, &c., &c.

Also, the memorial of Fayette Pierson, Lewis Snell, Ralph H. Knowles, and 13 others, citizens of Philadelphia, petitioning Congress to pass a law granting one hundred and sixty acres of land to soldiers of the war of 1812, the Indian and Florida wars, &c., &c.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 29, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. PEARCE presented the memorial of Zabdriel W. Potter, praying compensation for services rendered as acting United States Naval Storekeeper at Valparaiso; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DOWNS presented the petition of Aaron Livingston and Randal D. Livingston, praying to be allowed certain privileges in entering lands in the Bastrop Grant, upon which they have made improvements; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. SEWARD presented the memorial of Rue. Van Brunt, praying indemnity for losses incurred by him in consequence of the occupation of his property in 1814, by troops raised for the defense of the city of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented seven petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land for the construction of a railroad from Chicago through Janesville and Fond du Lac, to Lake Superior; which were ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. WALKER presented several petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, numerous signed, praying a grant of land for the construction of a railroad from Chicago through Janesville and Fond du Lac to Lake Superior; which were ordered to be laid on the table.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. DOWNS, it was Ordered, That John S. Maunsell and William Parker have leave to withdraw their petition and papers.

RULES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the thirtieth rule for conducting the business of the Senate be amended by inserting after the word "session" the following:

"Or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate."

Resolved further, That the following be added to the rules of the Senate:

"A motion to suspend, or to concur in a resolution of the House to suspend, the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules, or either of them, shall always be in order, and shall be decided without debate."

If the thirtieth rule should be amended as proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, it will stand thus:

30. No amendment, proposing additional appropriations, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate, during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate.

The sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules referred to in the second proposed amendment, are as follows:

16. No bill that shall have passed one House shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the three last days of the session.

17. No bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation on the last day of the session.

DEPARTMENTAL PRINTING.

Mr. BORLAND submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretaries of the Departments, respectively, of State, Treasury, War, Navy, and Interior, and the Postmaster General, be directed to communicate to the Senate statements of the quantity of printing, binding, and public advertising, which has been done for, or by order of the Department over which he presides, and on what account, and the amount of money paid for the same, and to whom paid, for each year since the 4th day of March, 1849, up to this time; and what remains to be done, and how much is to be paid for it under any existing contracts, arrangements, or agreements, written or verbal. Also, copies of the several contracts under which said printing, binding, and advertising, has been or is to be done; and also, statements whether said contracts, arrangements, or agreements, have been made in pursuance of public advertisement or otherwise.

REV. C. L. BRACE.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. Cass, on the 26th instant, was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to the Senate, so far as may be compatible with the public interest, a copy of the correspondence of the American Chargé at Vienna, with the Department of State, on the subject of the apprehension and imprisonment by the Austrian authorities of the Rev. Chas. L. Brace, an American citizen.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. MORTON. At the request of my colleague, who is confined by indisposition, I beg leave to give notice that to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, I will ask leave to introduce a bill, to be entitled "A bill to establish a steam mail line between California or Oregon and Shanghai, with a branch thereof to the Sandwich Islands."

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BORLAND, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, granting to the State of Arkansas the right of way and a portion of the public land, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Gaines's Landing to Fulton, in said State; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a motion by Mr. Rusk, that one thousand five hundred additional copies be printed of the reports of the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster General, in relation to the contracts for carrying the mails by steam-ships between New York and California, reported that the same be printed.

The report was concurred in.

He also, from the Committee on Printing; to which was referred a motion to print that portion of the report of the Commissioner of Patents which relates to arts and manufactures, reported that the same be printed.

Mr. BORLAND. Let it lie over.

Mr. HAMLIN also submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That seventeen thousand additional copies of that portion of the report of the Commissioner of Patents, which relates to arts and manufactures, be printed; fifteen thousand copies thereof for the use of the Senate, and two thousand for the use of the Commissioner of Patents.

This also lies over with the original motion.

Mr. HAMLIN also, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the motion to print the agricultural portion of the annual report of the Commissioner of Patents, reported that the same be printed.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire that that also may lie over.

Mr. HAMLIN. I also submit, from the Committee on Printing, the following resolution:

Resolved, That thirty-two thousand five hundred additional copies of the Agricultural Report be printed, thirty thousand for the use of the Senate, and two thousand five hundred for the use of the Commissioner of Patents.

I desire to remark simply, that the number reported by the committee corresponds with the number reported last year, with the addition that we set apart 2,000 copies of the report on arts and manufactures, and 2,500 copies of the report on agriculture, for the use of the Commissioner of Patents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is not now before the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am aware that it is not; but I wished to show the action of the committee last year.

The whole subject was then passed over.

CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF THE CONQUEST OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was recommitted the bill to create a Board of Commissioners for the examination and payment of claims against the United States growing out of the conquest of California, with the amendment reported thereto, reported the same with amendments.

Mr. GWIN. I ask that this bill may now be acted upon. I think it will lead to no debate at all. If it should, I will consent that it be laid over at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill, as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment reported this morning to the amendment of the committee heretofore reported, proposes to strike out of the second section the words "on the second Monday in January, 1853," and insert the words "as soon as practicable;" so that the section will provide "that the Secretary of War be directed to ascertain, and report to Congress, as soon as practicable, the amount of all just claims," &c., &c.

The second amendment proposes to insert the word "Washington," before the word "California," so that another clause of the same section will provide that "the Secretary be directed to appoint a Board of three competent officers to examine witnesses and receive evidence in Washington, California, and elsewhere," &c.

The third amendment proposes to strike out the word "same," and insert the words printed in italic in the residue of the sentence above quoted, which will then read thus: "in relation to such claims, and to report the claims which they may consider just, with the evidence in support of them, to the War Department."

Mr. SHIELDS. These amendments make no essential change whatever in the amendment heretofore reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill, thus amended, will provide for the appointment of three officers to adjudicate in relation to the claims arising out of the conquest of California; it will also provide for the appointment of a secretary. The next change is, that instead of directing the Department to report next January, it will authorize the Department to report as soon as practicable; so that the report may be made in a few days, if they shall have adjudicated on any claims within that time. The next change is, that the commissioners may sit in Washington, and decide, previous to setting out for California, on such a portion of these claims as the testimony at hand will enable them to decide. The next is merely a verbal change, that they may report such claims as they consider to be just, with the evidence on which they are based. Those are the only changes; and I have reason to think that there will be no opposition to their passage.

The amendments were concurred in; and the question recurred on the adoption of the amendment reported from the committee, as amended.

Mr. GEYER. I desire that the second section may be read, as amended.

The section was read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be directed to ascertain and report to Congress as soon as practicable the amount of all just claims and demands for supplies furnished or services rendered to said troops, and moneys advanced for their support, and all other debts and liabilities contracted with a view to the active prosecution of hostilities by said troops; and for this purpose the Secretary be directed to appoint a board of three competent officers, to examine witnesses and receive evidence in Washington, California, and elsewhere, in relation to such claims, and report the claims which they may consider just, with the evidence in support of them, to the War Department: Provided, That public notice be given of the times and places of the sittings of said Board.

The amendment as amended was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

RAILROADS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill granting to the State of Wisconsin the right of way and a donation of the public land, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Fond du Lac to Janesville. I wish to take it up mainly for the purpose of submitting certain amendments, that we may perfect the form of the bill. We can dispose of the amendments in a very few minutes, and then it may lie over, if it is desired.

Mr. PEARCE. I wish to know if it is intended to occupy more than the morning hour?

Mr. WALKER. No, sir. I simply wish to get some amendments introduced; and then it may lie over, if it is desired.

The motion to postpone the previous orders for the purpose of taking up the bill was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALKER. This bill has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and reported back, with a substitute, in the form of the bills which have been recently passed in relation to similar grants to other States. There are certain amendments, however, which have been incorporated in those other bills which are not in this. I wish to make this bill conform to the bill granting land to Missouri for a similar purpose. I wish, also, to amend it in another respect. There are two bills reported for Wisconsin, and it may be as well not to make two bites at the cherry, but to amend them both at once. The first amendment is, to add at the end of the sixth line, after the word "State," the following words: "and also a railroad from Milwaukee, on Lake Michigan, to Prairie La Cross, on the Mississippi river."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. In consequence of that amendment, there are certain amendments required, as matters of course, changing certain words from the singular to the plural; for instance, "railroad" to "railroads," &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be made, of course.

Mr. WALKER. The next amendment proposed to strike out the words:

"That the right of way shall not exceed one hundred feet on each side of the line of the road and a copy of the survey."

And insert the words:

"That in locating the railroads aforesaid, and assigning limits to the easement, no more land shall be taken from the United States than is necessary for a convenient construction and use of said roads as a public way for transportation, including stations, with the usual buildings of all kinds, turn outs, and such other appurtenances as are usually enjoyed by railroad companies, and a copy of the location."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. The next amendment is, to add at the end of section first of the amendment of the committee, the words, "to be recorded," so that it will read, "shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices respectively, and to the General Land Office at Washington city, within ninety days after the completion of the same to be recorded."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. The next amendment is to incorporate, at the end of section third, such words as have been incorporated in other similar bills:

"Which lands shall from time to time be offered at public sale to the highest bidder, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall not be subject to entry until they shall have been so offered at public sale."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. That makes the bill conform to other bills of this character.

The question was then taken on striking out the original bill, and inserting the amendment reported by the committee as amended; and it was agreed to.

The further consideration of the bill was then postponed till to-morrow.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852.

Mr. PEARCE addressed the Senate for two hours and a half, in reply to the remarks made by Mr. GWIN some days ago, on the governmental administration of affairs in California. Without concluding he yielded the floor at the request of Senators. [Mr. P.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 29, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of the Committee on Public Lands for reports.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GORMAN. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw that motion, that I may obtain the permission of the House to report, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill from the Senate for the settlement of the accounts of General Riley. That distinguished officer has been here for four or five months, awaiting the action of Congress upon this subject. The bill does not propose to take any money out of the Treasury; and it will not take more than five minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object.

Mr. BARRERE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, asked the unanimous consent of the House, that the Speaker might be authorized to appoint an additional member upon that committee.

No objection being made, an order to that effect was entered upon the Journal.

Mr. BARRERE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported, as correctly enrolled, the following bills; which severally received the signature of the Speaker, viz:

1. An act for the relief of Albra T. Tripp;
2. An act for the relief of James Lewis;
3. An act for the relief of Joseph Johnston;
4. An act for the relief of the Monroe Railroad Company and their sureties;
5. Joint resolution approving and confirming an act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon, entitled an "Act to provide for the selection of places for the location and erection of the public buildings of the Territory of Oregon, and for other purposes;" and
6. An act for the payment of the arrears of pension to the heirs of Artemas Conant.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If it is the wish of the House to receive the report of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] with regard to the bill for the relief of General Riley, I will not interpose any obstruction. If there is no objection to receiving the report, I will withdraw my motion to go into committee.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object, because the debate upon the homestead bill is to be closed to day.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. JONES, that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated that the business before the committee was House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting every man who is at the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, for the period therein specified, and that upon that question the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] had the floor.

Mr. WALSH addressed the committee an hour principally upon the subject of the compromise measures, for the maintenance of which he was in favor, and in reciting the wrongs which had been perpetrated upon the South by the past legislation of the country. He also alluded to the manifesto of the Southern Whig members, who had withdrawn from the recent caucus held in the Senate Chamber, and indorsed the sentiments embodied in that paper. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. HENN said he had prepared a speech in favor of the bill, and would hand it to the printer for publication. [It will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, addressed the committee an hour in favor of the bill, arguing to show its constitutionality, and its expediency. He maintained that it was constitutional, and that the whole practice of the Government, ever since, and during the days of Washington, had been to make grants and benefactions of lands. He showed that some of the very gentlemen who had opposed this bill on the ground of the want of constitutional power in Congress to pass it, had themselves, at the last Congress, voted some forty-eight millions by way of bounty to the soldiers who had been engaged in the several wars of the United States, and some twenty millions of swamp lands to the States. He pointed out the good effect the passage of the bill would have upon the agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing interests of the country. He dwelt at some length upon its moral effect upon the institutions of the country; and showed that its tendency would be to make the citizen a freeman in the proper sense of the term. [Mr. J.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN stated that the hour had arrived which the House had fixed for closing the general debate.

Mr. McMULLIN availed himself of his right under the rule, as chairman of the committee who reported the bill, and addressed the committee an hour. He differed with his colleagues [Mr. AVERETT and Mr. MILLSON] who had opposed this bill on the ground of unconstitutionality. He had himself been opposed to this policy, but not on constitutional grounds. He was now in favor of the original bill, but preferred the plan suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN], of allowing occupancy upon the land, and eventual payment to the Government by the settler of a nominal price. He then expressed some views in favor of the compromise measures, and a hope and belief that the Baltimore Convention would select a man as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency known to be in favor of an adherence to the fugitive slave law. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania, inquired whether an amendment to the bill was in order?

The CHAIRMAN said that it was not.

Mr. GOODENOW moved that the committee rise.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr.

HIBBARD) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting every man who is at the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, for the period herein specified, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, the House then adjourned till to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of the citizens of the city of Newark, New Jersey, praying for the improvement of the Newark harbor.

Also, the petition of the citizens of the city of Newark, praying for the improvement of the Passaic river.

Also, the memorial of the Mayor and Common Council of the city of Newark, praying for the removal of the obstructions in Newark bay and the Passaic river.

Also, the resolutions of the Common Council of the city of Newark, asking for an appropriation for the removal of the obstructions at the mouth of the Passaic river.

Also, two resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, for the removal of the obstructions, and improving the navigation of the Passaic river, and Newark bay.

By Mr. HASCALL: The petition of Benjamin F. Hays, of Chicago, Illinois, praying for the passage of an act to authorize him to locate certain lands at Oconto Falls, in Brown county, State of Wisconsin.

Also, the petition of Sheldon Henry, of Pembroke, in the State of New York, praying for the passage of an act allowing him back pay for services rendered in the late war with Great Britain.

By Mr. SIBLEY: The petition of A. E. Ames and 56 other citizens of Minnesota, praying that a pension be granted to Anthony Page.

By Mr. ASHIE: The memorial of John N. Caulsby and others, praying an appropriation for removing obstructions at the mouth of the Cape Fear river.

By Mr. DAWSON: The memorial of James Parson and others, asking the passage of a law to authorize the construction of a railroad, commencing at or near Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river, and extending up the valley of the Platte river to the South Pass in the Rocky Mountains, to California and Oregon; and that the Territory of Nebraska be laid off by suitable boundaries, and wholly appropriated to the purpose of making said road, which they apprehend would be from the forty-first to the forty-third degree of north latitude, and extend the breadth to the Pacific ocean; and that the right and title to the whole of said Territory be by law vested in such company as will make said road, in a style commensurate with its importance to the people of the United States, and who will transport thereon the property and troops and public mail of the United States free of charge.

By Mr. EASTMAN: The petition of citizens of Iowa and Lafayette counties, Wisconsin, for a mail route from Mineral Point, via Darlington and Avon, to Shullsburg.

By Mr. DURKEE: The memorial from the masters of vessels at Chicago, Illinois, in favor of a harbor appropriation at Racine, Wisconsin.

Also, a memorial of the Mayor and Aldermen of Racine, for the same object.

Also, the petition of citizens of Chicago, praying for the same object.

Also, a remonstrance from the Mayor and Council on the same subject.

By Mr. POLK: The petition of citizens of Bedford, Marshall, Giles, Lawrence, and Wayne counties, in the State of Tennessee, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Shelbyville, via Pulaski and Lawrenceburg, to Waynesborough.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 30, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask the consent of the Senate to postpone the business assigned to this day for the present, for the purpose of taking up the deficiency bill; and I will very briefly state the reasons why I ask this. They are partly personal and partly public. My health is very precarious just now, and I do not know that I shall be able on another day to continue the speech which I commenced yesterday. To-day I am able, and desirous of doing so; and, in addition to that, it is very desirable that the deficiency bill should be disposed of speedily. I know the fact, as I learn from the Quartermaster's Department, that there are troops now on their way to Oregon which must be aided if possible.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to know if the Senator wishes to take up the bill named before the expiration of the morning hour?

Mr. PEARCE. Yes, sir, now; and I will be through by the time the morning hour expires.

Mr. SHIELDS. There was a bill on its passage yesterday, which was arrested by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE,] in order that it might be amended still further. I have inquired of the honorable Senator if he cannot as well attach his proposed amendment to another bill, and he has consented to do so. As the bill which I wish to have passed is one which the Senator from California is also anxious to have passed immediately, I hope it may be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. PEARCE. I withdraw my motion, to accommodate the Senator.

The bill entitled "An act to create a Board of Commissioners for the examination and payment of claims against the United States growing out of the conquest of California," was then read a third time, and passed.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. PEARCE. I now move to proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE resumed, and concluded the speech which he commenced yesterday.

Mr. GWIN replied at considerable length.

[These speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. HALE. As the debate on the deficiency bill has taken a very wide range, I wish to inquire of the Chair if it would be in order for me, on that bill, to make some remarks, which I wish to submit, in reference to the policy of the Democratic and Whig parties as to adopting the compromise finality platform. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANGUM occupying the chair.) It would not be in order.

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate meet to-morrow at eleven o'clock, and consider the deficiency bill until one o'clock, when all debate shall be closed, and a vote taken upon the bill and amendments then pending.

Objection being made, it was laid over under the rule.

On the motion of Mr. RUSK, the further consideration of the bill was postponed until Monday.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. RUSK presented the petition of Charles B. Brower, late a lieutenant in the Army, dismissed by a court-martial, praying to be reinstated in his former rank; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Samuel Church, praying remuneration for the loss of clothing and health in the military service of the United States during the last war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HUNTER presented the petition of Octavius Haymond, assistant marshal for taking the Seventh Census in Virginia, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WHITCOMB presented a petition of citizens of Noble county, Indiana, praying an alteration in the mode of calculating time, and the establishment by the United States of an Almanac on a new plan; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition and papers of J. B. Tobey & Co., and others.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Hugh Wallace Wormeley, formerly an officer in the Navy, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of John S. Van Dyke, asking payment of the prize money due his brother in the case of the capture of the French frigate, L'Insurgente, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Combs Greenwell, praying an allowance of pay while suffering from a fall from a United States vessel, while in the discharge of his duty as a machinist at the Navy-Yard, Washington, District of Columbia, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TREATIES.

Mr. ATCHISON. I desire to give notice now, that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to go into Executive session, immediately after the expiration of the morning hour. It is important, or deemed to be important, by the people of Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, that certain treaties now pending shall be acted upon.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. BROOKE gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce two bills—one to attach the county of Attala, in the State of Mississippi, to the southern judicial district of said State, and the other to regulate the liens of judgments of the courts of the United States in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. SEBASTIAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a joint resolution respecting the various laws granting pensions to soldiers of the revolutionary and subsequent wars.

SWAMP LANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. BROOKE, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution giving the assent of Congress to an act of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, appropriating a portion of the swamp and overflowed lands granted to said State by the act approved September 28, 1830; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BRADBURY. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred a bill to provide for the holding of the district court for the District of Columbia in case of the sickness or other disability of the district judge, to report the bill back without amendment.

I have also been instructed by the same committee to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider this bill at the present time. There is necessity for prompt action. Judge Cranch, the venerable chief justice of the circuit court of this District, who is sole judge of the district court, is in feeble health—too much so to hold court at present. There is pressing business of importance in the court, in some of which the Government is interested. I will refer to a case: It is known that during the Mexican war our public vessels made several captures on the Pacific coast, where we had no regularly-organized courts to take cognizance of the subject, and the distance was too great to send home the prizes for adjudication. As a matter of apparent necessity, a temporary admiralty court was organized there, under the authority of the naval and military commanders on that station, with the assent or approval of the Secretary of the Navy; and the captors, in obedience to the orders of their superiors, carried their prizes before this court of admiralty, which undertook to adjudicate, and in some cases to condemn and decree the sale of them. The owners of one of the captured vessels and cargo, the Admittance, have commenced an action against Captain Montgomery, the commander of the vessel that made the prize, since his return to this country, and that action is now pending in court. The Supreme Court of the United States has recently held in the case, that the so-called admiralty court at Monterey had no authority in the premises, but if there was good causes of capture, the captors might justify the taking by establishing that fact; that the district court of this District has original jurisdiction in such cases; and that the captors could proceed and libel the vessel and cargo therein, and if they succeeded in making good, in that process, the cause of capture, it could be given in defense in the action against the officer who commanded in taking the alleged prize. The amount in this case is large, and the proceeds of the sale have been paid into the United States Treasury. It will be seen, without further remark, that it is important that this officer should have the means of making his defense, which can only be done by prompt action of this bill.

Mr. BADGER asked that the bill might be read.

It was read accordingly. It provides that in case of the sickness or other disability of the judge of the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia which shall prevent him from holding any stated or appointed term of the district court, and upon that fact being certified by the clerk of the district court to the Chief Justice of the United States, it shall be lawful for the Chief Justice of the United States to designate and appoint any district judge within one of the judicial districts next contiguous to the District of Columbia to hold the district court for this District.

Mr. BADGER. I cannot give my consent to have this bill acted upon to-day; and for a very obvious reason. I see no necessity for requiring the Chief Justice of the United States to send to some contiguous judicial district for a judge to come here and hold the district court. The chief judge of the circuit court of the District of Columbia also holds the district court for this district. It is proper that provision should be made for holding the district court in case of the sickness or other disability of the chief judge. But the circuit court here consists of three judges; and it would be the simplest provision in the world to say that in case of the sickness or disability of the chief judge, one of the other judges should be authorized to hold the district court. Whence the necessity for requiring the Chief Justice of the United States to send to ask the district judge in another district to come here to hold the district court, when there are three judges of the circuit court, every one of whom is competent to perform the duty? All that is necessary is to have an act of Congress authorizing one of the puisne judges of that court to hold the district court when, from sickness or disability, the chief judge should be unable to hold it.

Mr. BRADBURY. I was solicited to introduce the bill by gentlemen of the profession in this city, who had conferred with the court here; and they adopted the phraseology of the bill which provides for similar difficulties in other courts. The suggestion was made that it would be better to ask the district judge of Maryland to step over here for only an occasional service, because an appeal lies from the district court to the circuit court of this district; and as there are but two judges of that court now able to perform service, it would be an appeal from the decision of a judge to himself. If, however, there is any objection to the present consideration of the bill, it can be laid over, and I hope it will be taken up on Monday morning. An amendment of the kind suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, would reach the difficulty which we are endeavoring to avoid. I think it is immaterial which course is adopted.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator says that this bill adopts the provisions made by other bills. Now, he has proceeded to adopt a provision which was proper in regard to other cases, and to make it applicable to a case where there is no propriety in its application. In the case of a district judge of a State, there is but one district judge, and if you invoke any assistance, it must be the assistance of a district judge from another State. Now, there are three judges of the circuit court in this district. One of them can hold the district court just as well as a judge from another State. As to the idea of the Senator in relation to appeals from the district to the circuit court, here he takes it for granted that the chief judge of the court is never going to sit, which is a presumption not founded on fact, I trust, and which is not consistent with law. I hope the bill will lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid over until Monday.

Mr. BRADBURY. If it is laid over, an amendment can be laid over in the mean time.

Mr. BERRIEN. I am not disposed to urge the present consideration of the bill spoken of by the Senator from Maine, but I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina, in consideration of the importance and pressing urgency of this bill, that he will, in the intermediate time between this and Monday, examine its provisions, and ascertain whether they are really liable to the objections which he urges. The case is this: Officers of the Navy of the United States have made seizures, and have prosecuted to condemnation, before tribunals summarily and irregularly constituted, their several prizes. One of these cases, has been before the Supreme Court of the United States, which has recognized the correctness of the seizures, and the liability of the property seized to condemnation, but requires that the prizes should be libeled. In the mean time, the officers of the Navy have been sued by the proprietors of the vessels seized, and it is to provide for them the protection which this bill affords, that it is submitted to the consideration of the Senate. I would suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, in regard to his objection, that the jurisdiction for which this bill is intended to provide, is original admiralty jurisdiction, which belongs to the district judges of the United States, and does not belong to the circuit judges; therefore it is that the aid and assistance of a district judge from a contiguous district, having original admiralty jurisdiction, has been invoked, and not one of the circuit judges, who does not possess this original admiralty jurisdiction.

The bill was laid over until Monday.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. BADGER, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 30, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Printing, for printing an extra number of the Patent Office Report. It will take but little time.

Mr. FICKLIN. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] is a privileged motion. So is the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIS.] The Chair thinks the motion first made is the one that should be first put to the House.

Mr. GORMAN. It will not take much time to order this amount of printing to be done. It is the usual number.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIS] does not withdraw his motion, it will be put first.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. GORMAN. I report from the Committee on Printing, the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives fifty thousand copies of the mechanical part of the Patent Office Report, and three thousand additional copies for the use of the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Before this question is put, and before I vote upon this matter, I desire to know who is to do this printing, and upon what terms. I am greatly surprised that so much time has elapsed without our being apprised by that committee, which is authorized to report at any time, what arrangement they have made for the public printing. Nearly two weeks since we were told by the chairman of the committee [Mr. GORMAN] that he would make a report to the House on the following Monday, which was Monday of last week, more than ten days since, and inform us definitely what they had done. Since that time he has made no report. If he has made any report it has escaped my notice and that of the House. I am sure he has not. Before we order any document to be printed, I wish to know who is to print it, and upon what terms, and at what time we are likely to get it. These are matters which ought to be understood by the House. I do not desire at this time to go into any discussion upon this question. I trust the chairman of the Committee on Printing will let it lie over until the committee think proper to apprise us what is to be done with the matter of the Congressional printing.

Mr. POLK. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his motion, and let us go to the regular order of business.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I take this occasion to say to the committee again, if they have made any disposition of the public printing it was due to the House that they should have made it known long ere this. They knew of the refusal of the House, with a view of showing its disapprobation of their conduct, again and again to lay upon the table their report. We were tried over and over upon it, and at the instance of the chairman himself. They know that the House recommitted it to them partly upon the statement of the members of the committee, that they would regard a different course as discourteous to them. I have heard several gentlemen say that they voted to send it back to them upon the ground that they did not want to do anything discourteous to the committee; for members of the committee said they would regard a recommitment to another committee as a censure upon them personally. The House sent it to them at their pressing request. Now, it seems nearly two weeks have elapsed, and we do not know whether any arrangements have been made. It is well known that it is now reported in this city that they have given out the printing at an advance of twenty-five per cent. over that for which responsible men offered to do it—men who put in bids, and avowed themselves willing to give bonds in any amount required, to do the printing at those rates. The printing is given out at an advance of twenty-five per cent. upon the bids of those responsible men. I do not affirm these things, but I am told by respectable men, the bidders themselves, that they are true; and I have no doubt of it.

Mr. SWEETSER. I call the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to order. I do not wish to be captious, but I wish to understand if it is the desire of the House that this whole debate should be opened again?

Mr. CLINGMAN. This question is debatable, and I think I am strictly in order.

The SPEAKER. The question of printing is debatable, and the gentleman can debate anything connected with the public printing.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think it would be decidedly better, if the House would do so, for us to get through the special order to-day.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I agree with the gentleman, and I am about to make a suggestion. As I happen to be upon the floor, and as there is a deep interest felt in this printing question, I think, Mr. Speaker, with due deference to your decision, that it is a privileged question; and, inasmuch as that committee is authorized to report at any time, I think the corresponding right exists in the House to call upon the committee at any time for a report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman misunderstood the Chair. The Chair made no such decision.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That at least was my impression. I did not affirm that the Chair so decided; but, as it was held that a two-thirds vote was necessary to get in such a call, of course I supposed the Chair must have held that it was not a privileged motion. I think the Chair, upon the point being directly presented, would perhaps see that a suspension of the rules to call upon that committee for a report was not necessary. If that be the case, we can get it out one of these days. All I desire is this, that gentlemen may now understand that this matter will have to be investigated. I am much surprised that the committee have failed before this to give the House any information upon this subject, considering the reports to their prejudice that are now in circulation. Surely the members of the committee do not mean to wait until the House makes an imperative call upon them directly. They are aware that we are in suspense, and anxious to hear from them. This is all I desire to say now. I had no idea of the subject coming up at this time, and I do not wish it to be smothered or hurried through without notice or investigation. I trust the house will consent to the proposition that it lie over.

Mr. SCURRY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] know whether Gideon & Co. are connected with the Republic further than publishing it?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I suppose there is no doubt about the fact that Gideon & Co. are the publishers.

Mr. SCURRY. Are the owners and proprietors of the Republic the printers of the Cotton Plant?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not know who prints it. I know very well the name of the gentleman who is the editor. He may get it printed at the Republic office for aught I know. I do not see, though, what connection there is between his question and the present subject. The House has a right to know what disposition has been made by the committee of the printing; and I hope this matter will go over until they inform us what they have done with the matter.

Mr. GORMAN. I have introduced the usual resolution which is introduced every year, and which it is my duty to do. Upon it I call for the previous question.

Mr. FITCH. I trust that my colleague will withdraw his call for the previous question.

Mr. GORMAN. I cannot do so.

Mr. FITCH. I hope, then, it will not be sustained.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to lay this motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN,] and the report, upon the table; and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FOWLER. May we have that resolution read?

The SPEAKER. If it be not objected to, the House having divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to inquire of the Chair, what the effect of laying this matter upon the table will be? Unless we take it up by a two-thirds vote, will it preclude the action of the House upon the subject of printing?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reserve to itself the right to decide these questions as they arise. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] is aware that a resolution or any matter laid upon the table in this body generally remains there. That is the usual course. It will be in order for the House, when it is in order to submit a proposition for the purpose, to take it from the table. The Chair will further state, that the right of the Committee on Printing to report at any time, is a very clear one under the rules. Whether that committee could report precisely such a resolution as the one pending before this body is questionable, and the Chair thinks it would be out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Therefore I desire to say to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] that it would be better, in my view of it, to give this matter some other direction. If you put it upon the table, it is not expected that the Committee on Printing will make another report. We had better take some other course.

Mr. POLK. Let it go upon the table, and we will thereby dispense with the printing. Let the gentleman take the responsibility.

Mr. HART. Is it in order to debate this question now?

The SPEAKER. The debate is out of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. As my motion to lay on the table will be in order after the previous question is sustained, I withdraw it for the present.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded tellers; which were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the previous question upon the passage of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. In response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] the Chair informs him and the House, that the immediate question is upon seconding the demand for the previous question on the passage of the resolution, upon which tellers have been ordered.

The question was then taken, (Messrs. VENABLE and CHURCHWELL acting as tellers,) and resulted—ayes 46, noes 87.

So the demand for the previous question was not sustained.

Mr. DANIEL. Will it be in order to move to postpone this matter with the view of submitting another motion?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order to make such motion.

Mr. DANIEL. I move, then, to postpone it until Tuesday next, with a view of transacting private business to-day. We have not transacted any business of that kind for several weeks.

Mr. HOUSTON. Make it Monday.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope that my motion will be submitted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman to put it Monday. We will lose Monday unless we appropriate it to something of a general nature.

Mr. DANIEL. I will, then, modify my motion, and make it Monday, as there seems a general desire that I should do so.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. If this matter is postponed to Monday, will it take precedence of motions to suspend the rules for other purposes?

The SPEAKER. Unless it is made the special order, I think it would not.

Mr. POLK. I trust the gentleman will adhere to his original motion.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will it be in order to amend and make it Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. ROBBINS. I propose to amend the motion, and to postpone this question to Tuesday instead of Monday.

The question was then taken upon Mr. ROBBINS's amendment, and it was agreed to.

The motion, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I renew the motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House upon the private Calendar, (Mr. STUART in the chair.)

OSBORN CROSS.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business before the committee is House bill No. 137, for the relief of Osborn Cross, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury, in adjusting his accounts as a quartermaster in the United States Army, to give him credit for a sum equal to the amount of the Treasury notes of the United States of which he was robbed, in New Orleans, in October, 1842, being about the sum of $3,265 47.

The principal facts of the case, as set forth in the report, which was read, are, that said Cross, as quartermaster, in October, 1842, received three drafts from Government, amounting to $34,000. One of the drafts, for $10,000, was paid out to Peters & Millard, of New Orleans, for a debt due them, and he received the change in Treasury notes, to the amount of over $6,000. He endeavored to place the Treasury notes on deposit in the Union Bank of said city, the usual depository of Government funds, but was refused. On the 8th of October, 1842, before leaving his office, he locked up the said funds, together with $300 of private funds, in an iron safe, and during the night the office was robbed by some negroes, who opened the safe containing said funds, and rifled it of its contents. Mr. Cross succeeded, in a few days, in recovering about $3,000 of said notes. A court of inquiry was afterwards held to investigate the conduct of Major Cross, which, after a full investigation, found that no blame or neglect could be attributed to him.

Mr. MACE. I am satisfied that the passage of this bill will establish a dangerous precedent, and one which might result in great danger to the Treasury of the United States. The facts of the case seem to be, as reported by the committee, and no doubt truly, that Major Cross sought and took upon himself the situation of quartermaster. He assumed the duties of quartermaster, and as such gave to the United States a bond, for the faithful accounting of all moneys which might come to his hands. He alleges that a large amount of money did come to his hands, some of which were in Treasury notes; that while in the city of New Orleans, his safe was robbed by some negroes, and funds to the amount of some $6,000 taken out of it. He therefore claims that the United States should exonerate him from the repayment of this money.

Now, Mr. Chairman, he stands in the precise condition of our State officers, of our sheriffs, administrators, guardians, and other persons who assume the duties and give a bond for the faithful performance of a trust. In case the United States should bring an action against him upon his bond for a full account of this money, it would be no defense whatever to say that it was stolen from him, and the United States must recover a judgment against him. Now, a precedent should not be established by the Congress of the United States, and recorded, unless that precedent is a good one. I have no doubt that this is an extremely hard case, and one that ought to be relieved, unless, as I before remarked, the precedent is one which the Congress of the United States will have to abandon at some other time.

Now, sir, what will be the condition of things, if this bill is passed? The Government of the United States, through its agent, disburses fifty-five, or sixty millions of dollars a year. All this is to pass into somebody's hands. This is certainly an age of progress; and I apprehend, and fearfully apprehend, that if we establish the precedent in this case, that it is a good defense for an officer to set up that he was robbed of the money, we shall have more robberies in the United States, than were ever heard of before.

Mr. SACKETT. I wish to know if the proofs in this case do not clearly establish the fact that the money was stolen? and whether there is any shadow of evidence, tending to show either criminality or neglect on the part of the officer?

Mr. MACE. I will state in reply, Mr. Chairman, that the evidence in this case does establish those facts. And I will state further, that, as a member of the Committee on Claims, I have examined fifty cases where the claim which is put in is fully established by evidence, and by affidavits duly sworn to. I have in my mind one case now, where a man establishes by evidence, that he lost $600,000, because he was not permitted by the Government to go on with his contract, and claims that amount. I say here, that if this was the only case before the Congress of the United States now, or the only case which might hereafter be submitted similar in its character, I would vote for it most cheerfully. But if we say that Major Cross shall be relieved from the payment of this money because of this larceny, let the collector of New York be robbed of a few millions of money under similar circumstances, he would come in and say that because of that robbery he ought to be exonerated. Now, I state these considerations, which operate upon my mind, for the serious consideration of the committee. I think it is a wrong precedent, and I believe it is better that Major Cross, and all others who seek office, and give bonds for the faithful performance of its duties, should be held to a strict account, in the same manner as we hold to account our State officers.

Mr. SWEETSER. I desire to call the attention of my friend, [Mr. MACE,] who has discussed this case most fairly, to a distinction which will most manifestly show the inapplicability of his arguments. The rule which should govern the House in this case is controlled by the fact, that in relation to these paymasters in the Army and in the Navy, they are not surrounded by the Government with those safeguards which attach to the collector of the port of New York, or by those which attach to the officers of our State governments. Their employment necessarily exposes the public funds in their hands to dangers to which other officers are not subjected, who are located in situations of comparative safety, and whose means of safety are ample. This is a claim which addresses itself to the equitable jurisdiction of Congress. Here is a man called into the public service, and his friends give a bond for his faithful performance of its duties, and in the honest discharge of those duties he has lost money in consequence of the precarious position in which he was placed. I can imagine a paymaster placed in a position, in time of war, with an amount of money under his control which might be taken by the public enemy—and such a case would present the same principle as the case before the House. I desire to know if there is any gentleman in the committee who desires to lay down a rule for the government of this House which will defeat a claim of this kind, where there has been no wrong, no neglect, no laches, on the part of the officer, who has been robbed by the public enemy or by robbers? I can say to my friend that the rule which I have established for myself is this, that wherever there is no wrong or neglect on the part of the officer, where he has been placed in a position of great peril, and the public money has been taken from him, and the question comes up here, whether the Government shall lose the money or the individual's security shall pay the penalty of the bond, my vote shall be against the Government, and in favor of the surety. The Government requires faithful discharge of duty only. This House will ascertain first whether there has been neglect or dishonesty. If they find no laches on the part of the public officer, they require no penalties by a bond for misfortune or unavoidable accident.

Mr. MACE. The gentleman's remarks are proper in regard to the safeguards thrown around these men. I do not know what safeguards were thrown around Major Cross, but the record shows that the iron safe was in a certain room in which he deposited this money, in the city of New Orleans. Now, I think it would be better for the Government of the United States to refuse to pay all such demands as this, although it might operate hard upon an individual citizen. The principle contended for by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SWEETSER,] settles no principle. We must look at the peculiar facts of each case, and it might strike the mind of one man that it was right to pay, and another that it was not. We should say sternly to every agent of this Government who is in possession of public funds, that in taking that duty upon him, if he is robbed of that money, he shall be held responsible for it. If we do not adopt that principle, I greatly fear—and I apprehend every other man who has looked into the records of this House, upon the subject of claims, will fear—that we will, session after session, have claims presented for the loss of money without the least show of foundation whatever. I have no doubt that this money was lost, as the report indicates; but I am opposed to establishing the principle that the party shall, in such cases, be relieved. He took this responsibility upon himself when he sought the office, and he knew, or ought to have known, what the law was; and if he was robbed of the money, why, as a matter of course, he ought to be the loser.

Mr. PORTER. I admit the correctness of the proposition laid down by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] that the loss of this money by robbery would not be a legal defense to an action for the recovery of the same from the officer by the Government. And if it were not a correct proposition, Major Cross could have no occasion to apply to Congress for the purpose of being relieved from that strict legal liability. That proposition does not reach the merits of this claim. If it were a legal defense that he was robbed of this money which he held as quartermaster, then he would have no occasion to apply for relief at the hands of Congress as to so much as he failed to recover. And it is precisely for the reason, Mr. Chairman, that the strict iron rule of the law, as applicable to the case, subjected him to this liability, and that it was not competent for the accounting officer of the Treasury to allow him a credit therefor, that he has applied to Congress for relief. I contend that this is a very strong, urgent, and imperious call upon the justice and magnanimity of the Government.

Now, sir, the facts of this case are undisputed, to wit: that Major Cross, as quartermaster, had charge of a certain amount of public funds; that he used all proper and reasonable care in taking charge of and preserving those public funds; there is no pretence on the part of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] and there can be no well-founded pretence on the part of any gentleman, that Major Cross was guilty of a single scintilla or particle of negligence or default in regard to taking care of and preserving these funds from loss. He placed that money in a strong box in the usual place of deposit; he was compelled to keep it in his personal custody because he was needing it from day to day to meet the wants of the Government; he kept it just where his predecessor in office had kept the public funds—in a strong box, in a safe and secure public building, provided for that purpose. A robber entered that building, concealed himself, and unfastened the fastenings of two of the back doors, unknown to the custodian and guardian of the building; he returned at night by stealth, in company with others, got the keys of the safe from the place where they were kept, unlocked the safe and took out the money—the details of which are explained by the report and other papers in the case. There is no pretense that the quartermaster did not use all reasonable and proper care and precaution for the purpose of preserving the public funds committed to his charge. That fact is not only apparent from the evidence before the committee, and from the report of the committee, but it is also verified by a court of inquiry, called at the instance of Major Cross, for the purpose of investigating his conduct, and who reported that he had been guilty of no negligence or default, but had used all precaution. Then, sir, that fact is established.

It also appears, further, that he made use of all possible diligence for the purpose of indemnifying the Government for the loss of those Treasury notes, by notifying the Treasurer of the United States the day after the robbery occurred, of the fact that the notes had been stolen, of the numbers of the notes, and a description of them, so that the Treasury of the United States might refuse to pay the notes when they should be presented.

It appears from evidence in the case, that all possible diligence was used for the purpose of recovering the money which had been stolen, from the robbers, and of bringing them to punishment. Soon after the robbery occurred, he recovered a portion of the money which had not yet been made way with, detected and arrested the robbers, and prosecuted them to conviction. All this is shown by the record in the case, filed with the papers. It appears, therefore, that all possible diligence was used by the quartermaster for the recovery of the money which had been stolen.

Mr. KUHN. I beg leave to ask the gentleman whether the notes that were not recovered from the robbers have ever been presented at the Treasury?

Mr. PORTER. Yes, sir, I suppose they were afterwards presented and paid—for the Department, from the correspondence with Major Cross, seems to have held, that the notes having got into the hands of bona fide holders, uncanceled, it had no right to refuse the payment of them. These are substantially the facts of the case.

The only remaining question to which I will call the attention of the committee, is in regard to the practice of the Treasury, and the rule recognized by the Government in similar cases to the one now pending before the committee. As far back as the year 1791, the rule was laid down by the Treasury Department, and acquiesced in by the House of Representatives. There was a case pending before the House in the year 1791—the case of George Webb, who was a receiver of continental taxes, and who petitioned for further compensation and indemnity for money stolen from him. The committee of the House of Representatives submitted the case to the then Secretary of the Treasury, in the year 1791, and the Secretary of the Treasury made a report to that committee, laying down the principle which had obtained in practice, and the rule which the Government of the United States should observe in relieving public receiving officers from liabilities, or indemnifying them. I call the attention of the committee to an extract which I have made from that report, which will be found in the volume of American State Papers, entitled "Claims," at page 32. It reads as follows:

"It is a principle which has been admitted in practice at the Treasury, upon the strength of legal opinions, officially given, that where a receiver of public money, as a mere agent, is robbed of such money which may have been in his keeping, the loss is to be borne by the Government; but from the very great danger of abuse to which a principle of this nature is liable, it is conceived to be essential to the public safety that the utmost strictness and exactness should be observed in the manner of proceeding. Several circumstances appear necessary to be insisted upon: due caution and care on the part of the agent; full, precise, and unexceptionable proof of the theft, and immediate notice of it to the proper superior or Department. In the last particular, this petitioner altogether failed; no notice was given—no notice of the robbery was given to the Treasury till several months after it had happened," &c.

Now, sir, the rule is laid down in general terms, that where a receiver of the public money is robbed of that money, the Government will indemnify him or relieve him from the consequences of that robbery. But in order to protect the Government, and in view of the principle laid down by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] as to the danger of setting a bad precedent—and which, to that extent, I admit to be correct—it must appear, in the first place, by unexceptionable evidence, that the robbery was committed. There is no dispute about that point, that the robbery was committed. It must also appear that he used all proper and due precaution to prevent the robbery; and that, after the robbery took place in spite of that precaution, he gave notice to the proper Department, in order that they might be relieved as far as possible from the consequences of that robbery. These facts also appear from the evidence in this case. Major Cross, therefore, brought himself within this rule, which has been considered as the settled practice of Congress from that time down to the present. Then we are not setting a new precedent, as the gentleman from Indiana seemed to intimate, by allowing this claim, but simply seeking to follow in the track of the sound and safe precedent then set. Major Cross is only asking that he shall be relieved according to the principles laid down in that report.

Now, the fact that we may open the door to abuse, if we grant this relief, ought to have no weight here. If that argument was allowed to weigh with the committee, it would put an end to all legislation in cases of this description, because there is no claim either upon the justice or the bounty of the Government, the allowance of which may not tend to abuse. We are not infallible; we are liable to be imposed upon; and if that argument was allowed to weigh to defeat a just claim, that we are setting a dangerous precedent, it would, if it proved anything, prove quite too much, and amount to a denial of justice in almost, if not all cases, however hard they might be, where relief could not be obtained according to the strict rules of law.

Now, the case which the gentleman from Indiana has stated of a collector of the revenue, or sheriff, does not at all reach this case; it merely shows that the collector of taxes, or the public receiving or disbursing officer, whoever he might be, would be liable, legally, to pay to the Government the money of which he had been robbed, and that in this case the quartermaster cannot be relieved in the usual course of legal proceedings, from liability for this money of which he has been robbed and failed to recover. But the question is, whether the Government, on principles of justice and equity, should not relieve him from that legal liability, which, without any fault on his part, and by the acts of others which he could not have controlled, by any reasonable care and caution, has been imposed upon him. If a collector of the public revenue in one of the States should be robbed of a portion of the public money, he might appeal to the Legislature of that State for relief; and if it appeared that he had been robbed without any default of his, but by inevitable accident—that he had been deprived of the money by force and violence, or theft, it would present a case somewhat analogous to this.

The gentleman admits that this is a strong case; but the objection to it is, that it is setting a dangerous precedent. I answer that by saying, that we are following out the precedent that has been already set for us. We are only seeking to do to this individual that justice which any magnanimous, liberal-minded man (the law out of the question) would say ought to be awarded to him. It would be much better for the Government, in this case, to lose this small amount than that an honest and meritorious officer should be crushed or ruined by having to pay the same in consequence of the refusal of Congress to relieve him from his existing liability to account for the whole amount which came to his hands.

Let me say, in conclusion, that the question of strict law not being before the committee at all, it being conceded, that according to the strict rules of law this claimant is liable to have this amount coerced out of him, I contend that not only upon principles of justice and equity, as between the Government and its officers, but according to the very just and proper rule laid down by the Treasury Department, in 1791, and acquiesced in by this Government since, he is entitled to the relief he asks at the hands of Congress.

Mr. GOODENOW. Mr. Chairman, I am desirous of calling the attention of the committee to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in a case almost precisely similar to the one now under consideration.

I do not rise to oppose this bill, but I feel it to be my duty to present to this committee the law, as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, in order that they may determine whether, in a case of a similar character, they will be governed by that law, or will take up each individual case, and decide it upon its particular merits.

I am not at all disposed to controvert the facts, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PORTER.] I am willing to concede that this is a hard case. But I suppose that in this case, as in all others, Major Cross gave bonds to the Government in the usual form, such as are given by all those to whom public money is intrusted.

In the case of United States vs. Prescott et al., in the 3d Howard's United States Reports, the facts are similar to those in this case, and Mr. Justice McLean, who delivered the opinion of the Court, said:

"Public policy requires that every depositary of the public money should be held to a strict accountability. Not only that he should exercise the highest degree of vigilance, but that he should keep safely the moneys which come to his hands. Any relaxation of this condition would open a door to frauds, which might be practiced with impunity. A depositary would have nothing more to do to lay his plans and arrange his profits, so as to establish his loss, without laches on his part. Let such a principle be applied to our postmasters, collectors of the customs, receivers of public moneys, and others who receive more or less of the public funds, and what losses might not be anticipated by the public? No such principle has been recognized or admitted as a legal defense. And it is believed that the instances are few, if indeed any can be found, where any relief has been given in such cases by the interposition of Congress. As every depositary receives the office with a full knowledge of its responsibilities, he cannot, in case of loss, complain of hardship. He must stand by his bond, and meet the hazards which he voluntarily incurs. The question certified to us is answered, that the defendant, Prescott, and his sureties, are not discharged from the bond by a feloniously stealing of the money, without any fault or negligence on the part of the depositary."

Now, Mr. Chairman, the principles involved seem to have been very clearly laid down there, by Mr. Justice McLean, in a case precisely similar to this; and the question before the committee now is, whether they will depart from those principles of law, and investigate every particular case that comes before them, and decide it according to their own notions of what is just. If that be the opinion of the committee, and they will signify it in such a manner as that it may be regarded as a precedent, I have no objection to voting in favor of the bill. There are many claims before the committees of Congress that involve the same principle as this does, and it seems to me that it would be as well for this committee to settle the principle on which those claims shall be disposed of, at once, as to take up time in discussing every individual case that may be brought before us. I have therefore felt it to be my duty to present this decision of the Supreme Court for the consideration of the committee, at the same time saying that I have no objection to voting in favor of this claim—which, I doubt not, is a meritorious one—if it shall be the opinion of the committee that the law, as laid down by Justice McLean, is not to govern this House, but that each case is to be decided on its own merits.

Mr. SWEETSER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the gentleman who has just taken his seat has been willing to make this case the leading one, in relation to all this class of cases; and inasmuch as he has read a strong case from a high judicial tribunal of the country, and presented a question of some moment, I hope the committee will listen to me for a few minutes. It is well known by the committee, that the courts of the United States could not take equitable jurisdiction for the purpose of granting relief to the sureties, and that the principles that apply between individuals in relation to equitable rights could not be made the ground of equitable jurisdiction in that court. The only reason under Heaven, why this class of cases are before Congress, is that the courts of the United States can only enforce the strict rules of law, and whenever an individual forfeits the penalties attached to his bond, they have no power to relieve him. But this House holds the equitable conscience of the nation, and we are here to-day to determine whether we will hold a public officer, who has faithfully discharged his duty, responsible for public property of which he was deprived, when there are no laches or default on his part, but through the villainy of others. He has lost the possession of public money. And in such a case as that, we are asked to look into precedents, where cases have been decided on the strict rules of law, in order to determine whether we will grant relief in a case like the present. Sir, my conscience is confined by no precedent in this case, or in any similar case. This House of Representatives—this Congress is the only tribunal in the land to which individuals in the public service, who may be stricken down by accident, misfortune, the public enemy, or the felon, can appeal for adequate relief. In the case before us, there seems to have been no default or wrong on the part of this officer. In the honest discharge of his public duties, he has been robbed of a portion of the public funds. He immediately gave notice of the robbery to the officers of the Government, and has done all that duty required to detect the thief, and save the Government from loss, and to protect the Government from the payment of the Treasury notes which had been stolen. Could he have done anything more? An appeal is made to the equitable conscience of the House to discharge this man and his sureties, from the obligation to pay this money, which is the question we are now to determine.

But I rose for another purpose, and that was to enter my dissent from the doctrine advanced by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PORTER,] wherein he seems to admit the obligation of the Government to pay Treasury notes which had been stolen, which seems to be admitted was done after Major Cross had given due notice of the larceny. Now I do not believe that even an innocent holder of stolen Treasury notes, has any right to demand their redemption by the Government. The law merchant does not attach; his remedy is upon the person from whom he received the paper.

Mr. MACE. Suppose the bill had passed this body?

Mr. SWEETSER. That is the very case I put.

Mr. MACE. I understood the gentleman from Ohio to say that the holder would have no property.

Mr. SWEETSER. Not at all. I care not how many hands stolen property may pass through; it makes no difference. Why, cases often occur where bank drafts are stolen from the mail, and are indorsed, and pass into the hands of an innocent person, and are paid to the holder. Yet it is well settled that the owner can compel the bank to pay the money over again, for the reason that the thief acquired no title to the paper, neither can a subsequent holder. This is as strong a case as can be made. I know there is a different rule prevailing here at Washington, to which I dissent. It has been determined in the Land Office that when land warrants have been stolen, and the thief or holder has obtained a patent for the land, that the injured party has no remedy as against the Government. It may be policy so to decide; but in my judgment it is not right, and I will not yield my assent to any such doctrine. I say deliberately and understandingly that if these Treasury notes were stolen, and they can be identified as stolen property, I care not who is the unfortunate man who may buy or hold them, he would have no right to come here and demand payment. If any public officer has paid drafts under such circumstances, he has done it without authority of law.

Now, in relation to this doctrine of precedent, I hold that each bill must stand upon its own merits. You cannot find any two cases which are exactly analogous. I am prepared to say, with regard to this class of cases, where a public officer has been guilty of no negligence or wrong, and where public funds placed in his hands have been taken from him, as is admitted in this case, that he and his sureties should be discharged; and as a member of the House of Representatives, I am prepared to vote in favor of this claim. I shall do so upon considerations of public duty and policy.

Mr. SACKETT. I am a member of the committee which reported this bill, and I am in favor of its passage. The facts upon which the claim rests, have been generally stated by the gentleman who reported the bill. But as there has been a defense set up against those facts, I beg to briefly recapitulate those facts, so that the committee may be able to see how the facts are, and judge the better of the defense.

A public officer is put in the possession of certain funds of the Government, and while thus in possession, he is robbed. The evidence in the case clearly and indisputably proves that he was robbed of these funds, or of a portion of them, without his connivance and not in consequence of his negligence. These are the general facts. Now what is the reason that this officer, thus situated, should not be released? It is that if we do it we set a precedent dangerous to the Treasury of this country. In other words, it is asked that this House shall do "evil that good may come." To do a deliberate wrong, with the facts before us, for fear that wrong to the Treasury in some future, or imaginary case, might result from our doing right in this, it seems to me that is the whole of the matter of the defense. This man has been robbed. He has lost $3,000. He lost $6,000 in the first place, but by his diligence, he recovered $3,000. But he has lost $3,000, and cannot settle his accounts. It was lost by no fault of his. The question then is, whether Congress shall deliberately hold a man responsible to restore to the Treasury what has been taken by robbers in felonious violation of the laws, by those whom the laws of the country have failed to restrain from robbing him of the money? I say we are deliberately asking to compel a man under these circumstances, to account for the money and to relieve the Treasury. What is it except to deliberately do wrong to a citizen, for fear of harm in some other case? Such a doctrine is the height of injustice. The petitioner has done no wrong. He is guilty of no fault? He has lost the money and now comes to ask of the equitable powers of this House to relieve him, so far as to enable him to settle his accounts. That is all. We pay him no money, and we are not asked to pay him any. We are only asked to enable him to settle his accounts.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I beg leave to submit a few remarks to this committee. There are a number of other cases which are similar in their nature to the one now before the House, and I think it is necessary, in order to save time, to settle the principle in our decision upon this case, so as to furnish a rule by which we may be guided hereafter.

I confess that I am against this claim. Taking every view in which its advocates have presented it, I think the whole question resolves itself into one isolated point, and it is this: whether we shall establish a rule against the public policy, in order to relieve an individual hardship in a particular case. It is said that extreme cases are the most dangerous quicksands in the law; and so may it also be said that extreme cases are the most dangerous in legislation. I admit that this seemingly operates unjustly, perhaps against this individual. But suppose the same circumstances existed between individuals. Why, it is conceded, I believe, by every gentleman who has advocated the bill, that if he were a judge, and such a case were presented, he would be bound to decide against the applicants. I ask whether such would not be the decision in a case between man and man? And if the principle be a good one when it is to be applied between man and man, where is the difference when it is to be applied by this House between twenty-four millions of people and one man? Is not the principle exactly the same?

Mr. SWEETSER. If the gentleman will allow me. In the case between individuals there is a benefit supposed to be resulting from having possession of the property, and from the performance of the contract; while in the case of a public officer, he undertakes faithfully and honestly to discharge the duties pertaining to the office to which he was appointed or elected. Now, it seems to me, that if that officer has faithfully and honestly discharged his duty, and yet has been stricken down by a misfortune occasioned by circumstances not within his control, that the Government is bound to relieve him from any responsibility in the matter.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Then if the gentleman is under obligation to do it, there is no necessity for his coming here. The ordinary courts of the country would relieve him at once. It is not the province of the National Legislature to perform the functions of an ordinary court of justice, and decide questions of private right. It could have been done in the local court where it took place, where the sitting of the court would have cost not more than $20 per day, and not have been brought to one the cost of which is $3,000 per day.

But I was about saying that I do not believe there is a man in this body who will say that a case in which twenty-four millions of people were on one side, and one man on the other, should be decided differently from a similar case in which individuals alone were interested. Now, I submit this case to the consideration of this body, and I beg it to be borne in mind that we are the Representatives of these twenty-four millions of people, (and it is admitted, that if this were a case between one man and another, the applicant could not make his case good,) and I ask, whether we are to apply one principle of equity here and another there? If you are to do that, you abandon principle entirely. But the gentlemen who have argued this case have laid down the proposition that this rule was adopted as early as 1791. Well, sir, if it was, it was adopting a bad principle, and the sooner we reject it the better. But if it has not been adopted as a uniform rule of action by which we are to be governed in such cases, then we ought to be extremely cautious in adopting it as a rule now. Why, look at the proceedings in our ordinary transactions. I can readily imagine a hundred cases where the hardship is greater than this, yet our State Legislatures are never called upon to relieve them. In many cases this is a principle fixed. It is a quid pro quo. It is a consideration which men are to look to before they take upon themselves the responsibilities of the office. But, Mr. Chairman, you may rely upon it, there never was a time in the history of the Government, and there never will be, when there will not be applicants to fill all the offices in the gift of the Government, and these applicants must look to the consequences before they take upon themselves the responsibilities of office. Every prudent man will do that. Your officers should be responsible. Nothing should constitute an excuse unless it be an act of God or the enemies of the country. Why, no man, I suppose, ever knew the Legislature of a State, or the judge of a court, to relieve a man because his was an extraordinary case. Why is it that public agents and common carriers are never excused unless it is by an act of God or the public enemies of the country? And when we are about to establish a rule of public policy, it is infinitely better that we should seem to treat an individual case harshly, than that you should make inroads by which frauds in numberless instances will be perpetrated upon the country. I will venture this Government has as many as fifty or sixty thousand recipients of the public money. Now, if a little country postmaster, whose salary does not amount to more than from $10 to $20 per quarter, were to be robbed of his money, and then come here and present a claim—

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask a question of some member of this committee. I have been informed that an iron fire-proof safe was furnished to this man at first, but that it was afterwards taken from him. I desire to inquire whether that is so?

Mr. MOREHEAD. I cannot inform the gentleman. I do not know.

Mr. PORTER. I do not think such was the case. At least nothing of the kind has ever come to the knowledge of the committee.

Mr. SACKETT. The money was taken from the safe when it was stolen.

Mr. MOORE. Was it the first safe the Government furnished him with?

Mr. SACKETT. It was the same safe used by his predecessors. But these are the facts in regard to the money being in a safe. The Government had heretofore been in the habit of depositing large sums of money in the bank, and this officer had deposited it there, but the bank had refused to receive it, and this was the safe he was authorized to keep it in.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Be that so, or not so, the question comes back, Had this receiver contracted with the Government that they should furnish him a safe place to deposit his money? If so, and he had been guilty of no negligence with regard to it, then the Government violated its contract, and there is no necessity for his coming here, because the courts of justice will give all he now asks for. The Government must perform its duty, before it can hold him responsible. I say again, there is, then, no necessity for his coming here. Let the Government sue him upon the bond. If it covenanted with him, if it had contracted to furnish him with a place of safety for the money, then it cannot hold him responsible. But, be that as it may, I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] founds his argument upon the suggestion that the Government furnished him with a safe, and then took it away. Well, suppose it did. Did the Government contract with him to furnish that safe? Was it under obligations to furnish it? And did it violate any obligation by taking it away?

Mr. PORTER. There was a safe there—one which his predecessor had.

Mr. MOREHEAD. That still leaves the case the same as before. Here is a man who undertakes to perform certain duties. He obligates himself to keep the money of the Government safely. He makes no reservations to himself, nor any contingencies by which he is to be excused; and if under these circumstances he loses the money, he is bound in justice to make it good.

But I observed that I suppose there are some fifty or sixty thousand recipients of the public money in the United States. Now, I take it that were a little country postmaster robbed, no matter how careful he might have been—as the highest evidence of his diligence and precaution, we will suppose he had kept it with his own money—but notwithstanding his diligence and prudence, we will suppose $10 of this postage money had been stolen with his own, why he would be laughed at if he were to come here, and ask this Government to relieve him from all responsibility in the case. The only difference between that case and the one under consideration is in the amount. But does the amount vary the principle?

Now, sir, these offices are all intended for the benefit of the people. No man is bound to take upon himself the responsibilities connected with the performance of the duties of an office like this. It is his duty, as a prudent man, to look to the liabilities and the consequences, and to consider whether the compensation is sufficient to warrant him in meeting them. If it is not, let him not touch the office. If it be enough, why, then, let him stand up to them.

I say that it would be wrong in principle, in reply to appeals to this House, to grant relief in all extraordinary cases. I make no imputation in this case. I take for granted every fact that gentlemen have placed before the committee; and in relation to the conduct of the claimant, I put him, as he is by everybody else, above suspicion. Is it not better that in one particular case hardship should be endured than that by granting the relief prayed for in this instance, you should open the door to more than one hundred scoundrels to practice fraud upon the Treasury? Entertaining the views I have here presented, I shall vote against the bill. My vote is based upon a matter of principle. I vote against it because all around me is heard proclaimed that there are many claims waiting adjudication of a similar character—involving the same principle. If the door is now opened, claims of this kind will be pressed and pressed, until Congress will be compelled to close their ears against the admission of extreme cases, or do nothing else but to adjudicate them.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Chairman, an officer of the army, not regular in the staff, but transferred from the line, gives no bond generally. If within a given time under the law, he fails to make a settlement of his accounts, he is liable to be dismissed or cashiered. Under another law—the Independent Treasury law—he is liable to the pains and penalties for defalcation. But, sir, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. MOREHEAD] states that if you grant relief in this instance, ninety-nine others of a similar character may come in, ninety-eight of which may be unjust. There is, I believe, a maxim founded upon justice, equity, and mercy, that you had better let ninety-nine guilty men escape, than one innocent man should be punished. A defalcation by our present Independent Treasury law is declared to be criminal. It is in some instances made a felony. Now, in this case, Major Cross has proved before this committee he lost the money specified in their report, and that it was not because of any default or neglect on his part; that he used all diligence for the purpose of preserving the public money. A majority of the Committee on Claims are satisfied that his case has been fully made out, and that he is entitled at least to a settlement of his accounts before the Department. What has he to do when he presents himself before the Department?

Mr. PORTER. The committee were satisfied of the facts as stated to them, and the only difference was as to the question of public policy, upon which ground a minority opposed the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I understood that he had satisfied the committee of the entire correctness of his proof. When he comes to settle his accounts, the Department acting under law, will require him to produce his vouchers for every dollar that he has expended. They hold his receipts for every dollar that has been deposited in his hands by the Government. If he cannot produce vouchers for every dollar that has passed from him, the balance is charged to his account. He can produce the vouchers for every dollar that he has disbursed, but not for the $3,000 which he says was stolen. He cannot produce proof before the Department upon which to obtain settlement of his accounts, because that Department is not the tribunal clothed with the power to pass upon cases of this kind. They act under a fixed rule of law. There is the law staring them in the face. They say, "when you settle you must present the proper vouchers for what you have expended. If you cannot do that you must then go to the law-making power—you must appeal to Congress to grant you relief and to authorize your proof of the money being stolen, to become a sufficient voucher before the Department." They say that they cannot allow this credit; Congress is the only body which can grant it. It is not within the purview of the principle laid down by the gentleman, of common carrier, that every person is responsible, saving by act of God, or the enemies of the country. Why? He gives no bond. In the second place, there is no liability beyond that of his official character as an officer in the army; and in the third place, he is bound to produce vouchers for every cent that has passed from his hands. The only body that can grant this excuse is Congress. This is the only court he can appeal to. He cannot sue the General Government, and the Government cannot sue him as an officer. He is, however, liable to the pains and penalties of the Independent Treasury law, making defalcation a felony. He has acted throughout in good faith. He has shown the authorities of the Government that he has not misapplied this money—that he has not appropriated it to his own use. He comes forward and proves that this money has not been lost through his own default or neglect. You must give us proper vouchers under the law, says the Department. He replies, I cannot do that; the money has been stolen. This is the only court from which he can get the power of settling with the agents of the Government. What do you do by this bill? You merely authorize the agents of the Government to give him credit for the amount he has lost after he has satisfied them that it has been lost, which fact, the committee fully admit. This should be done, if it is honestly believed that he has lost this money from no default or neglect of his own.

Has it come to this, that when an officer of the Government proves conclusively that his house and goods—bank and Treasury notes—have been consumed by fire, the only tribunal which can, will not interpose to save him from ruin, and as an officer of the Army, to save him from the imputation of default? For, unless he makes his settlement at a given time, he is, under the law, dismissed from the service. He appeals to Congress to grant him relief, and if you refuse to extend it, after he has made out a clear case, what other tribunal, I ask gentlemen, has the power to do so? Is he to suffer. If he can prove that the money was lost by robbery; if he shows the fact that you did not give him—for it is one of the rules of military law, that an officer disbursing the public funds has the right—to a military escort, the relief proposed to be extended in this bill should be granted. He has the right to have armed soldiery to guard the boxes in which are deposited the public money. Did you give him that guard? If you did not, you have not complied with your contract—with your obligation under the military law. Whether there was an armed soldiery guarding it or not, it was by no default of Major Cross that it was lost. Where is your court of chancery to relieve him?

Mr. MACE. With my colleague's permission, I will ask him a question. Would he be willing to change the policy of this country, and incorporate into the law that its officers shall not be liable for public money that has been stolen from them?

Mr. GORMAN. I will answer my colleague, that were the courts of justice opened to the parties, and they could approach the chancery side of the court, and obtain relief according to the equity of their case, I would not relax the rule of law. I will now inquire of my colleague where else than in Congress can this gentleman appeal to get relief?

Mr. MACE. I will answer, that he has no relief at all.

Mr. GORMAN. My colleague replies that he has no relief at all. I again ask, when an officer of the Government is acting in good faith, has the money-chest—the money-bag containing the public money, or other public property, under his care, destroyed by the act of God, or the act of the enemy, where is the court of equity but in the hands of the Representatives of the people? They have the power to relieve him—to authorize that he shall be accredited for the amount lost in the Department. It would be wicked in the extreme—an outrage upon the country—I had almost said a discredit to our national character—to deny relief to him, when we believe he acted in good faith, and had honestly and truly discharged his duty. I have done.

Mr. GOODENOW. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to state that this man, under the military law, had a right to a guard.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a part of the rules and regulations of the Army that an officer disbursing the public funds has a right to a military escort—a military guard.

Mr. GOODENOW. Would it be a neglect on his part not to ask for it?

Mr. GORMAN. During a war, and while he was in the enemy's country, not to ask a guard would be a neglect of duty on his part. If he was in our own country, at a time of peace, with no other liabilities than those to which every man's property and transactions are subject, he would not be guilty of neglect in not requiring a guard.

Mr. MOREHEAD. It certainly was the duty of the officer, the Government, in compliance with its obligations being bound to furnish him a guard, to notify it that he required an escort.

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Chairman, the case cited by the honorable gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Goodenow,] of the United States against Prescott, was an action brought upon the bond of a receiver of public money. Mr. Justice McLean, who delivered the opinion upon that case, explicitly declared that it was not a case of bail—that it was not a case even of special bailment; that it was an action originating upon the bond, and one which must be governed by the stipulations of the condition of that bond. The defendant in that case having expressly stipulated that he would preserve the public moneys, it was no defense to an action upon that bond that the public moneys had been feloniously stolen and carried away. He then went on to remark upon the danger of this policy of relieving all who had undertaken to enter into explicit stipulations to preserve the public money from any accident of this kind. And he expressly comments upon the probability and practice of the receivers of public money combining and colluding with others in order to absolve themselves from their legal obligations. I think it enough, sir, to warrant our voting any bill of this kind, that the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States is not against it. If the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States were against the claim expressly, I should hesitate long before resisting an opinion emanating from so high a source. But I apprehend that the reasons assigned by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN,] are abundantly sufficient to justify the action of this committee in supporting the report of the Committee on Claims. He informs us that quartermasters and paymasters in the Army give no bond; that they do not stipulate to receive and keep the public money safely against all persons, but that, on the contrary, their moneys are confided in their hands as men and as officers, and that the penalties which they are subject to are degradation and dismissal from the service. If such be the case, and it is made manifest to the supreme Legislature that the depositary of the public money in this instance is wholly exempt from blame; that he appears before them with pure hands, entirely unpolluted by the suspicion of fraud, it justifies us in absolving him from the imputation which would otherwise rest upon him and his descendants so long as his accounts remained unsettled at the Department.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we might assume the responsibility even of declaring that that policy which is based upon the presumption that all men are dishonest, ought to be changed by express legislation. High as the responsibility would be, broad as it would be, revolutionary as it might seem in regard to the previous legislation of this Government, I would rather array myself in behalf of so startling a position as that, than be instrumental in convicting an innocent man of a crime of which he was not guilty. If it is the law of the land that all our officers are supposed to be guilty until they are proved innocent, it is time, I think, in the nineteenth century, that the principle should be expunged. But it is not necessary we should adopt any such radical change in our institutions, in regard to those who assume to be the special depositaries of the money of the Government, and who are willing to bind themselves to keep it at all hazards, who receive a compensation adequate to the risk, and take it knowingly, and abide by the consequences; but those who receive these funds collaterally, in the discharge of military duty, and who are subject to military discipline, ought to be exonerated, and especially when they are acquitted, as in this case, by a military tribunal, of all blame. Major Cross has been tried by his peers; he has been absolved from all imputation, and it is only necessary this House should authorize the accounting officers of the Government to grant him this allowance, in order that his record may be pure hereafter. It is not for the paltry sum of $3,000 that he has approached this committee. It is in order that his descendants may hereafter be able to point to him, as one who has left his accounts with the Government entirely adjusted. It is for these reasons, notwithstanding the authority of the case quoted by the honorable gentleman from Maine, and notwithstanding all the high principles of public policy which may be justly involved, according to the circumstances of that case, I have concluded to support the report made by the majority of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a remark or two upon the subject of public policy, that has been so elaborately presented in the consideration of this matter. What is this principle on the part of the Government that holds its financial officers to strict accountability? It is spoken of as something having a degree of latitude of the most unbounded character—as a certain indescribable, unapproachable essence or theory, that compels us to do absolute wrong in each individual case that good may come on general principles. Sir, I do not subscribe to any such doctrine. Is there anything in public policy that requires a public servant to be held unjustly accountable to the Government? I deny the existence of any such policy. I deny that this Government ever adopted any such policy in any case or class of cases. What! the Government adopt as a deliberate and universal principle, to be applied to its public officers, that they hold them accountable as against equity. Where is any such rule to be found? It is against manifest, distinct, and positive justice, that a Government should hold its citizens upon a principle of public policy to any such doctrine as this. I deny, utterly, that there ever was any such doctrine in this or any other Government regulated by law. It is sound policy, it is the universal policy of the Government, to have its citizens governed by law, and to have their interests, rights, liberties, and property regulated by law. But there are cases where the equitable powers of the Government are proper to be exercised in regard to all these rights. Are there not? Shall we abandon such cases? What are we asked to adopt that the Government shall, by its policy of holding officers to accountability, hold a particular officer to accountability, that every man, upon his conscience, will say is an unjust responsibility. It is an inequitable responsibility.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I wish to know if there are not grounds of suspicion, that the man in this case, who locked a colored man in the office, had not preconcerted a plan with this colored man? If not so, how does it happen that that amount of money could not be traced to where it was expended?

Mr. SACKETT. I do not know what the gentleman means by the question, how it comes that the money could not be traced to where it was expended? All there is in the case upon that point is simply this, that the officer had raised three several drafts, and that in payment of one of the liabilities of the Government, he received Government Treasury notes in change for the balance of one of these drafts to the amount of $6,000—that that $6,000 was stolen, and by his diligence and perseverance, he hunted out and secured $3,000 back again. The felons who took the money were traced out and criminally convicted of the offense.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, MAY 4, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No. 77.

Three thousand dollars were recovered, but the remaining $3,000 have never been found, and I wish to say that this claimant at the time was tried by a court-martial who investigated the whole affair, and they reported distinctly, that there is no shadow of suspicion resting upon him in regard to the transaction, and that he was guilty of no neglect.

Mr. CABLE. Do I understand the gentleman to say, that there is no ground of suspicion against the person who was acting for Major Cross, and who had charge of the door and keys, and locked the colored man in?

Mr. SACKETT. As to whether there is suspicion resting against any person for stealing the money, other than those who have been convicted, I have no knowledge. It is a subject of quite too wide a range for discussion here. There is not the slightest suspicion resting on the claimant, and that is all that is important to us. Those who have been proved to be criminally connected with the transaction, have been convicted of the offense. Whether there may be any others who were accomplices, or had any knowledge of it, is beyond my knowledge. There is not the slightest ground of suspicion in any quarter from any part of the evidence, either of the claimant or of any one, other than those who have been convicted.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman. I understood one gentleman—I may not have understood him right—to say that the robber came in, "as the door was left as it was, and obtained the keys and opened the safe."

Mr. SACKETT. I did not report the bill, and know nothing of the details as to the mode or manner in which the robbery was committed.

Mr. PERKINS. I understood the gentleman to remark that the robber obtained the keys and opened the safe. Was it so? The next inquiry is, how came he by the keys? Was it safe to lock up the safe and leave the keys there?

Mr. SACKETT. I understand the keys of the safe were left in a particular place of deposit, which had been used for that purpose before. As to the mode, manner, and detail of this robbery, the gentleman who reported the bill is more familiar with the evidence on that head than myself. He can undoubtedly give the required information.

Mr. PERKINS. What advantage is a safe to put money in, if you leave the keys there for the robber to unlock it? When I put money in a safe I take care of the keys.

Mr. SACKETT. The keys were properly taken care of.

Mr. PORTER. This negro, who was concealed in the office, had been employed there for some weeks previous, but had been dismissed, and a new one had been employed there. Major Cross put this key in a certain private desk, which was locked. When the opportunity occurred for making the robbery the robber had to find the place where the key was kept, break open the desk, and unlock the safe.

Mr. PERKINS. That does not help my friend. I see a deficiency on the part of the officer. As we do business where I live when at home, when we lock up the safe we take care of the key, and do not put it in a drawer, where a robber can take it out and unlock the safe. It is said that this officer is particularly clear of blame, but it seems to me there is some defect or neglect here.

Mr. SACKETT. So far as the details of the mode and manner of the robbery are concerned, I am not familiar with it. It is enough for me to know that the robbery was committed; that it was not committed either collusively or otherwise, by the party here seeking relief; that the felons who committed the robbery have been charged with the offense, and convicted under your laws, and that a portion of the money they took has been recovered and restored to the Government, so that the loss of the money by a robbery is a thing too clearly shown to admit, I think, of cavil. What was the mode and manner the robbers adopted to accomplish their purpose, I am unable to say, nor is it important.

I wish to say one word more as to this policy. Such a policy that requires us to "do evil that good may come," to deny individual justice upon a pretended general principle—such a policy is nothing in the world but the policy of Shylock. It is the penalty of the bond. It is the pound of flesh. There is not one principle of equity or justice in it, and no moral principle can maintain it for one moment. It is nothing more nor less than the Government holding its public officers to an accountability, that every man will say, as applied to this individual case, is a principle of manifest, palpable injustice. Why should this man pay this money? No man can assign one reason why he should be compelled to do so. If we are to go back and investigate elementary principles, the Government is bound by its laws to protect its citizens against felons. They are bound to protect all citizens against robberies and personal violence; and it is the effort of all good government to do so. And it is a strange doctrine, if it fails to hold that its own officers shall make up the losses of its Treasury for its violated laws—such a doctrine is monstrous. If we are to go into examinations of questions of this kind upon general principles, it is a mighty wide field of examination. But it is enough to say in this case, that here is an entirely innocent party asking relief from a power which has the authority to give it. It is true, that in the courts of law, there would be manifestly no defense in the case, whether there was a bond in the case, or the officer was individually liable. Therefore the case presented from the Supreme Court, has not the slightest application to the present case. It is one of the cases, for which this tribunal is to grant relief. A relief against what? Against the arbitrary rules of law, against the obligations of parties which, from any circumstances, no matter what, have become inequitable as between the Government and its citizens. Why do we grant relief in any case? A man has a claim upon the Government; he undertakes to settle his accounts with one of the Departments; and he finds that, according to the strict terms of contract, he is not entitled to an allowance, but there is a manifest case of equity why he should have it. That is the reason he applies here. It is that we may grant relief in a proper case of equity, as against the arbitrary rules of law, and against the general policy that sustains the arbitrary rules of law. That is the very object of applications here in all cases. That is the very power of this tribunal, which could not be as safely deposited anywhere else. So we have a simple application here to grant equitable relief, as against the legal obligation and the legal liabilities of the party. That is plain, I apprehend. This is clear to every man, that the claimant in equity and justice is entitled to relief; I have not heard it disputed by a single opponent to this bill. It is plain to every man that to do justice, we ought to afford the relief asked for in this case.

Mr. KUHN. If this debate is to be protracted, it will cost the Government more than the amount of the claim. If it were in order I should move the previous question.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GOODENOW. I will make a simple suggestion in reply to the argument of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. Bowie,] and also in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Mace.] I find by looking at the Army Register, which I hold in my hands, that Osborn Cross is a quartermaster. He is described in the committee as quartermaster. If he was a quartermaster, I apprehend he was compelled to give and did give a bond as the law requires. I understand the honorable gentleman to state that this is only a case of an officer of the line, and for temporary purposes, acting as quartermaster.

Mr. GORMAN. Quartermasters regularly appointed for that purpose give bond, but if they be taken from the line of the Army, and only acting for temporary purposes, they do not give bond.

Mr. GOODENOW. I hold in my hands the Army Register, which bears his name as quartermaster, with the rank of major. This is the Army Register of 1852.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The question was put, and on a division, there were—ayes 33, noes 59; no quorum voting.

Mr. CHANDLER demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER, and DAVIS of Indiana, were appointed.

The question was then again put, and it was decided in the negative—ayes 54, noes 63.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. MARTIN moved that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCURRY. At the request of many members of the House, I move to take up Senate bill No. 248.

Mr. SWEETSER. I object to taking up any business out of its regular order on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Texas is not in order.

Mr. SCURRY. I seldom trespass upon the House, and should not do it now, were it not that many members of the House are interested in this bill, and desire that it should be taken up.

Mr. SACKETT. I rise to a question of order. It is not competent for the committee, except by unanimous consent, to pass over the Calendar.

Mr. SCURRY. The gentleman from New York may make his points of order if he chooses. I have no objection to it. But his course in the House has brought me to the conclusion that he is the most disorderly man in it.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is out of order.

JOHN A. MCGAW.

The next bill on the Calendar was Senate bill No. 67, "granting relief to John A. McGaw, of New York."

This bill provides for the payment of $1,400 demurrage on a vessel chartered by the United States.

The bill, and the report which accompanied it, having been read, it was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

LIEUTENANT BARTLETT HINDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was House bill No. 149, "for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Bartlett Hinds."

This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to pay the heirs of Bartlett Hinds, an officer of the Revolution in the Massachusetts line of Continental troops, five years' full pay of lieutenant in such service, being the commutation half pay for life, together with interest.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think this bill came up the first Friday of this month, which was objection day. I then objected to its passage, and it went over. I subsequently wrote to the Third Auditor for information upon this subject, and have his answer, which is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE, April 7, 1852.

SIR: I have the honor to return the report and resolution of the House of Representatives on the claim of Bartlett Hinds, and in reply to your inquiry, "Whether he or any other person for him ever received the five years' full pay or half pay for life?" I have to state, that the revolutionary records here furnish no evidence that an officer of that name was returned as having commutation pay due to him. The different Massachusetts regiments are found to have been settled with; and upon returns of balances due, final certificates were issued in the name of each individual claimant for the amount opposite his name. Bartlett Hinds is found returned as a member of Colonel Thomas Marshall's regiment, and certificates No. 32,614 for $4 60, and No. 33,610 for $43 82 issued in his name. His name is not among the officers who received commutation, nor does it appear he was returned as being entitled to such allowances.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

JNO. S. GALLAGHER, Auditor.

HON. G. W. JONES, House of Representatives.

From this letter it appears that Bartlett Hinds was settled with, and that all that was due him was paid. It appears that we have the record of the Massachusetts troops in the Third Auditor's office, and that the name of Bartlett Hinds is not returned amongst those who are entitled to commutation. It appears further from the report of the committee in this case, that he was afterwards placed upon the pension roll. He must have lived, then, some forty years or more after he would have been entitled to a commutation, if entitled at all; and he certainly would have known his rights better than any one else. I thought, when this bill came up on the first Friday of this month, that he could not be entitled to this commutation, and the answer of the Third Auditor, which has been read, confirms me in that belief.

Mr. FULLER, of Pennsylvania. Having reported that bill, with the indulgence of the House I will state the facts in relation to it, which were before the committee, and which induced them to make the report which has just been read. The evidence before the committee showed that Lieutenant Bartlett Hinds enlisted as a private in the year 1776, for the period of one year. After his term of service had expired, he reenlisted, and for his gallantry during the previous year, he was promoted to a lieutenancy. He served up to the year 1780, when he was placed upon the supernumerary list. About three months afterwards he was again called into active service and remained in the army till the close of the war. During his whole period of service he conducted himself, according to the best record we have, with gallantry. He was a brave and meritorious officer. At the close of the war, he became a member of the Cincinnati society, in evidence of which his diploma was before the committee. During his service he was at the battle of Bemis's Heights, where he was dangerously wounded. He was also at the storming of Stony Point, where he led a detachment at a forlorn hope. Indeed, he distinguished himself in every engagement in which he took part.

By the resolution of the 21st of October, 1780, it was provided that the officers who continued to the end of the war, were to be entitled to half pay during life. But another resolution of the same date, gives them commutation pay. It is for this commutation pay, which was pledged by this Government to the officers of the Revolution, which this bill provides. And the evidence which was before the committee, proving that he was in the army during the whole period of the war, from 1776 to 1783, induced the committee to make the report which accompanies the bill.

I know nothing further about this case, and have no interest in it, beyond the fact that it was before the committee with the evidence, the substance of which I have stated. I will, however, say further, that the bill has been before the House at two or three previous sessions, and two favorable reports have been made upon it. It has once passed this body, and I think wisely.

Mr. SACKETT. I understand this bill provides for the payment of interest upon it, from 1780 down to the present time. I ask the gentleman who reported this bill, [Mr. FULLER], what amount the bill entitles the party to, as principal, and for what period of time interest is allowed upon it?

Mr. FULLER. I ask that the bill may be read again.

The bill was again read through by the Clerk.

Mr. FULLER. In answer to the gentleman from New York, I will state that the amount would be at the rate of $26 75 per month. As for the commutation pay, I am not able to answer the gentleman's questions in relation to it; though I suppose it is computed in the usual manner—that it is five years' full pay of a lieutenant.

A VOICE. It is six per cent. upon the principal, from 1789 down to the present time.

Mr. STROTHER. I will state for the information of the committee, if the amount to be paid in this case is to be computed according to past usage, that the action of Congress in relation to these cases has not been uniform. Out of eighteen hundred cases that have been allowed by Congress, in all, except some fifty odd, interest has been allowed; so that almost the entire action of Congress since 1832, has been in favor of the payment of interest upon those claims. I state that fact for the information of gentlemen.

Mr. SACKETT. The gentleman says that interest has been allowed on all, except some fifty cases out of eighteen hundred which have been allowed. Now, I do not know what cases, the gentleman alludes to. I ask the gentleman what class of cases it is upon which he says interest has been almost always allowed?

Mr. STROTHER. I referred to that class of cases in which the party was entitled, at the end of the war of the Revolution, to commutation of five years' full pay, in lieu of the half pay for life which had been provided by Congress. Of all the cases where the party was entitled by the law of 1790 to subscribe his scrip for commutation pay to the national debt, Congress has acted upon this presumption—and it was, in my opinion, a just and fair presumption—that the party would have received his interest if his scrip had been funded stock. But the action of Congress in a few years thereafter debarred the parties from right to fund. Now, as that scrip, or the right to it, was purchased by service, the results of which we now enjoy, was it not wrong that these men, who had drawn and funded their commutation scrip, should suffer the penalty of the action of Congress?

Mr. HALL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia one question. Was not the act of 1790 intended to be applied to those who were entitled to scrip under that act? Did it contemplate the allowance of interest to those to whom the money had been paid in the place of it? Is there anything in that act which conveys the idea that where the individual received money, he should also receive interest? As I understand it, it only provided or intended to provide that where the individual did not receive money, but scrip, that the scrip should bear interest.

Mr. STROTHER. Undoubtedly. The purpose of Congress was, that those debts should be funded, because the Government was not prepared to pay them at that time. I will answer the gentleman's question. The bonds of the Government, the scrip issued, were to bear interest till they were paid. Now, if the class of debts like the one under consideration had been funded, that scrip would have borne interest until these debts had been paid. But they were not presented for payment, because they could not be funded. And why were they not funded? It was because the action of Congress, not long after 1790, debarred the party from the right to fund these debts. And this statute of limitation continued until 1832, when a sense of justice came upon Congress, and this limitation was removed. Since then, these claimants have been here from year to year, seeking the opportunity between the intervals in the debates upon presidential elections for the rendition of justice. Now, I submit that this class of cases upon principles of justice, are clearly entitled to the interest they would have got if their debts had been funded.

Now, as to the question of money, if the money had been paid these men in the first place, they would have received interest or its equivalent, in the ordinary pursuits of business. But the money was not paid, and is still due, and the right to interest is incident to the right to the principal.

Mr. HALL. I have this to say. I understand the law of 1790 never contemplated the payment of interest. Where the debt was paid in scrip, it should bear interest, but where it was paid in money, the law never contemplated the payment of interest, and I do not think it ought to.

Mr. STROTHER. You will remember that as Congress was not prepared to pay money, it gave its bonds, and as the subsequent non-payment of money was an act of Government, Government ought to bear the consequence, and not the individual.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] upon this general question. The act of 1790 never contemplated the payment of money at all, because they had no money. It was all a funding act, and the act of 1791 recognized that wherever the debt was established it was to be funded, and interest went with the scrip until it was paid. It did recognize the great principle that interest went with the debt.

Mr. GROW. In answer to the objection made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES], that the claimant having made application to Government for balances due to him, thirty or forty years after the Revolution, when, of course, he knew his rights, it was evident that he had no claim, because he did not call for it. If we act upon such presumptions, there are few claims that come before this House, for revolutionary services, but what would be thrown out. It is no evidence that a man is not entitled to a claim against the Government, because he did not call for it within a few years of the time when he might first have done so. The evidence is clear that he was an officer in the American Revolution, and the commutation act gives such men half pay. Because he did not call for it is no evidence that he is not entitled to it. It is no objection to any claim that a man chooses to delay the enforcement of his rights, and fails to call for a claim which the Government owes him.

Mr. SACKETT. I apprehend that the class of cases referred to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. STROTHER] are those cases where the Department has given a construction to a general law allowing interest. He does not intend to say that Congress, in separate individual cases, has passed eighteen hundred acts, and allowed interest from the time they would have been entitled, if they had taken under the original law. I apprehend that is intended by the general character of the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. STROTHER.] Now, I wish to state a rule which I apprehend this Government has ever adopted, and I think it is the only safe rule which they can adopt in cases of this kind. If a party intends to apply for, or supposes himself entitled under the resolution adopted in the year 1790, he is to make an application for it; and unless he does make the application, the Government is in no way in default until that application is made. Clearly, then, if this man has slept upon his oars, and never made an application, there is not a shadow of equity in the Government being called upon to pay interest, in consequence simply of his neglect. That is all there is in it touching the question of interest. It would violate the well-established rule in regard to cases of invalid pensions, where soldiers and officers have been wounded, and special provision made for them in various acts. If such a principle is to be adopted, there is no reason in the world why, if a man is entitled to a pension under the act of 1832, and does not get it at the time, he should not be allowed interest back to 1832, for he was clearly entitled to his pension then, if at all. If the one ought to bear interest, the other ought to. I think the question of interest is one which cannot be maintained at all.

But we come back to the question of principal. What is the evidence that this party is entitled to the principal? I wish to see that. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] has furnished direct evidence from the Department, so far as the records of the Government show, that he is not entitled to a pension.

In addition to that, it is shown that at an early day, upon two distinct occasions, he applied to the Government for certain balances which he claimed to be due him, and the balances were struck, and he received the money. Now, it is passing strange—and I think it calls upon the committee for some explanation here—it is passing strange, if long after the conclusion of the war—the last demand being made in 1790—he had applied to the Department for the balances which were his due, and received them, that he should never have made any application under the law for commutation, if he was entitled to it.

There is another question I desire to put to the committee, as a question of law. It appears that at a later period, some forty years after the war, he applied to the Government for a pension, and then he made no application for his commutation of five years' pay. He received that pension as a captain. Now, I ask how is it that he applied here to receive a pension—and must have made out his papers as a captain—and made no application for this commutation pay? Unless there is some explanation of it, I think I can see a reason for it. He may well have been entitled to a pension if he had served six months, but he would not have been entitled to commutation pay, unless he served to the close of the war. It seems to me this requires some explanation at the hands of the committee.

Mr. FULLER, of Pennsylvania. For a period of three years' service, the officers of the revolutionary war received a diploma from the Cincinnati Society; and I find, in looking over a number of cases reported by the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, that a diploma of the Cincinnati Society has been recorded as evidence of three years' service. The evidence is, that he enlisted in 1776, that he served during that year the term of his service. After the expiration of that term, he enlisted again, and served until 1780, when he went upon the list of supernumeraries, and under a resolution of 31st October, 1780, being upon that list, if he had never been called into service at all until the close of the war, he would have been entitled to commutation pay. But at the expiration of three months, he was again called into active service, and remained in the Army until the close of the war, and upon the disbanding of the Army in 1783, he received this diploma from the Cincinnati Society.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman states that if he had not again been called into the service he would have been entitled to commutation pay. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I believe there is a provision that he should have one year's pay.

Mr. FULLER. My impression is, that being upon that list, and subject to the call of the Government at any moment, and being required to enter the Army whenever summoned to do so, he became, under that resolution, entitled to commutation pay. Such, I believe, is the law.

Mr. FOWLER made an inquiry, not distinctly heard by the Reporter, but the object of which was to ascertain whether these supernumeraries were entitled to one or five years' commutation pay.

Mr. STROTHER. I have not the law before me now. There was a class of supernumeraries, who, I believe, under the act of 1778, were to receive one year's pay, and but one. But a subsequent act, which I think was passed in 1781, gave to the supernumeraries their right to half pay, and of course to the commutation pay. For, at that time, the desire of the Federal Congress was to preserve to the Government, by that resolution, experienced officers who could be called into service at any time. They were to continue liable to serve, and liable to be called upon, and the holding of the position of liability was regarded as being in service. They were not required to be actually in service, but subject to be ordered into service at any time. That has been so decided.

Mr. HALL. I have now the extract from the law, upon which this claim must rest. It does not rest under the act of 1790, because it does not cover its provisions. It rests upon the act of 1783, which provides "that such officers as are now in service and continuing therein to the end of the war, shall be entitled to receive the sum of five years' half pay in money or securities bearing interest at six per cent." Now the committee will perceive that this act does not contemplate what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] says it does. It does not contemplate that the scrip shall bear interest from the close of the war, but only from the date of the issuing; and if the certificates were never issued at all, and payment is made in money, then this law does not contemplate that the party should receive any interest at all. The present proposition is to pay this man in money, and therefore he is not, by the provisions of the act of 1783, entitled to interest. If he had a certificate, then he would be entitled to interest.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. I request the indulgence of the committee for one moment. It will be remembered that I have been practicing gymnastics for the last three or four days, trying to get the floor, to submit my views upon the homestead bill, which has been before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration for some time. I am obliged to leave the city within an hour, and I ask permission of the House, like my friend from Missouri, [Mr. HALL] to file my argument under the rule.

There was no objection, and permission was granted.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the bill granting homesteads to actual settlers upon the public lands, to give the soldiers of the war of 1812, without regard to the term of their service, one hundred and sixty acres of the public domain?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, at this time, no amendment can be presented to the homestead bill.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to offer such an amendment as I have indicated, to submit my reasons thereon, and the subject generally, and shall therefore ask that the same privilege may be extended to me as has been extended to my colleague—permission to print my argument. I am in favor of the bill. Being about to start for Philadelphia, I have requested this indulgence, that on this question my position might be placed truly before my constituents and the country.

There was no objection, and permission was granted.

Mr. FULLER, of Pennsylvania. The facts in this case are these: Lieutenant Bartlett Hinds was in active service from the time of his original enlistment, in 1776—being part of the time a supernumerary—down to the disbanding of the army on the 9th of July, 1783. If he was in the service until the end of the war, he would be entitled, under the resolution of 1780, to commutation pay. If he was a supernumerary, he would be entitled to commutation pay under another resolution of the same year, so that in either case—in both cases—he is entitled to the commutation asked for in this bill. With regard to the matter of interest, all we ask for him is, what has been granted to other meritorious soldiers of the Revolution. If they have received interest upon their claims, Lieutenant Hinds, having rendered as valuable, as gallant, and as meritorious services as they did, is entitled to the same interest. We only ask for him equality. We only ask for that justice, for that bounty, if you may call it so, which has been given to other soldiers of the Revolution. This question has been fully discussed, and I trust that no more speeches will be made, but that the vote be now taken.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. GAYLORD. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Will the motion to report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that it do not pass, take precedence of the motion submitted by the gentleman from Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not. If the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is voted down, the motion of the gentleman can then be entertained.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will make but one remark. The letter read at the Clerk's table, from the Third Auditor, is, I think, conclusive that there is no commutation due in this case. Take that, in connection with the fact, that Bartlett Hinds lived until 1820, and then had himself placed upon the pension roll under the acts of 1818 and 1820. How long he lived after he was entered upon the pension roll, the report does not show. I think, from all these circumstances, it is conclusive that the man who would have himself placed upon the pension roll thirty years after it was alleged he was entitled to commutation, would certainly, if he was entitled to it, have applied to receive it. I cannot see how they can make out that commutation is due him.

Mr. HALL. I move to strike out all that part of the bill providing for the payment of interest.

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SACKETT. Is it in order, Mr. Chairman, to postpone action upon this bill until we can ascertain from the Department how he described his services when he made application for a pension under the law of 1818?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the bill could be laid aside for consideration at a future day, by unanimous consent, but not otherwise.

Mr. GOODENOW. I ask if it is in order to move that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, that they may report all the facts of the case?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. There can be no doubt about it. A motion can be made to postpone the bill. It will come up regularly the next day upon the Calendar. That is the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The question propounded to the Chair was, as to whether this bill could be postponed to a particular day by the committee? It is in the power of a majority of the committee to pass by this bill, to the next one on the Calendar.

Mr. SACKETT. It was to enable the committee to get at the facts of the case, that I submitted my motion. I trust it will meet the approbation of the committee.

Mr. FULLER. I have no objection to any reasonable postponement, for the purpose of a full inquiry into the merits of the bill. If it is not meritorious, we do not want it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. GAYLORD. What position upon the Calendar will this bill occupy, if the motion of the gentleman from New York prevails?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be the first business in order. It will stand in the same relation that it does now.

The bill was then laid aside.

PATRICK GASS.

The committee next proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 152, being a bill for the relief of Patrick Gass.

The bill provided for a grant of three hundred and twenty acres of the public land to Patrick Gass, in consideration of his services in the expedition of Lewis and Clark to Oregon.

There being no proposition to amend, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. WELLS.

The committee next took up for consideration House bill No. 155, being a bill for the relief of William H. Wells and others.

The bill was read through.

Mr. SACKETT. I see in the bill already reported that there is a clause left out, which has been uniformly inserted in other bills—"any lands subject to private entry for bounty lands." Under this bill, they may take alternate sections of lands which are specially granted to railroads and canals. It has been usual to insert the clause I suggest in all of these bills; but I see that it has been left out in this, and the preceding case. I move to insert the words, "subject to entry for bounty lands."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I would suggest "such lands as are subject to private entry at the minimum price."

The question was then taken upon Mr. SACKETT's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I would suggest another amendment. It is the business of the Secretary of the Interior to issue the patent, and therefore I move to strike out of the bill the words "Secretary of War" and insert "Secretary of the Interior."

The question was then taken upon Mr. GORMAN's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I am at a loss to understand upon what principle the bill has been disposed of, and I do not know any reason in the world why this man cannot get his land warrant as others do, who were volunteers; I cannot imagine any reason upon which this distinction rests. It is a matter of small consequence, and I do not propose to make any trouble about it. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. MILLER. I did not hear the gentleman's objection.

Mr. STANTON. I cannot understand why this man cannot get his land warrant at the proper Department, as others do who are entitled.

Mr. MILLER. It has been some time since I referred to the testimony in this case, but the committee entertained no doubt, that the heirs of Lemuel Wells were clearly entitled to the benefit of the act of Congress of 1811, granting bounty land to the soldiers who enlisted in the service of the United States for five years and were honorably discharged, or died in the service. The facts, as I remember them, are, that Lemuel Wells enlisted in the year 1814, at the city of New Orleans, and during the war with Great Britain, for the period of five years, and before the expiration of that period, and while in the service, he died. Under this state of facts, the committee believed that the heirs of Lemuel Wells, deceased, were entitled to the bounty provided by the act of 1811. It is clearly right and proper, that his heirs should have the benefit of that act, and I can see no evil that will result from the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] will withdraw his motion. The report fully explains the whole matter, and there is no doubt as to the justice of the claim.

Mr. STANTON. I will not interpose any objections, if the House are disposed to pass it. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move, then, that the bill be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The question was then put, and agreed to. So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

On motion by Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee [Mr. STUART] reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration sundry private bills which they had directed him to report back, some with amendment and a recommendation that they do pass, and some without amendment.

The SPEAKER. The following bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that it do pass:

A bill for the relief of Osborn Cross.

The question being upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time—

Mr. FICKLIN demanded the yeas and nays; upon which motion the House was divided, and there were—ayes 22, noes 58; no quorum voting.

Mr. HART. Is it in order to move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would submit a question to the Chair, that it does not require that there shall be a quorum present to call the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It requires a quorum to do business.

Mr. JONES. It is a constitutional right of one fifth to have the yeas and nays. When you get through with the roll, and there is not a quorum voting, it is a lost vote. That is all.

The SPEAKER. That is a mere experiment. The Chair is of the opinion that the House cannot do business without a quorum.

Mr. JONES. Have we not a right to order the yeas and nays without a quorum? The Constitution says that one fifth may order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Upon such a question as that taken awhile ago, the Chair thinks not.

Mr. JONES. The Constitution says that one fifth of those present shall order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Constitution provides also that it shall require a majority to do business. If brought upon the question of adjournment, the gentleman would be correct, in the opinion of the Chair, and one fifth might order the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES. It is a constitutional question, and I will make a point of order upon it.

Mr. HART. I move that the House adjourn. The question was then taken, and there were—ayes 47, noes 62.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HART. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. FICKLIN. I demand the yeas and nays. Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. There was not according to the last division.

Mr. JONES. Then we cannot adjourn over. The House have ordered the yeas and nays on the passage of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that the yeas and nays were not ordered, only twenty-three sustaining the call for them.

Mr. JONES. Will the Chair have that provision of the Constitution read which relates to the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JONES. I cannot appeal on a constitutional question. It is not a question of order.

Mr. STUART. Is it not in order now to ask for tellers on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HART] that we may determine whether there is a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. STUART. Then I ask for tellers, with that view.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. FICKLIN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn over.

[Loud cries of "Oh, no;" and great disorder prevailed in the Hall.]

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOUSTON (interrupting.) I do not understand what question the Chair is now putting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is dividing the House on the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn over till Monday.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did I not understand the Chair as deciding—

[Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose I have a right to ask a question of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may ask a question of the Chair. The right, however, is not a very clear one. But the Chair is disposed to be very courteous to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood the Chair to decide that there was no quorum upon the proposition submitted before, and to refuse to entertain this motion to adjourn over, made in the face of the fact that there was no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama appeal from any decision which the Chair has made?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir; I do not know what the Chair has decided.

The SPEAKER. Then, debate is not in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am aware of that, but I want to know what decision the Chair has made.

The SPEAKER. Upon the engrossment of the bill, the yeas and nays were demanded. Twenty-three only rising in favor of the yeas and nays, and a number which the Chair does not recollect, but insufficient to make a quorum, rising on the other side, the Chair stated that there was no quorum voting, and that the yeas and nays, therefore, were not ordered, notwithstanding that one fifth of those present had risen for them.

Now a motion is made which is perfectly in order, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday, and upon that motion the yeas and nays are demanded. The Chair, when interrupted by the gentleman from Alabama, was in the act of dividing the House upon that demand for the yeas and nays. There may be a quorum voting upon this proposition, and it is in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. When the yeas and nays were demanded upon the engrossment of the bill, there was a division of the House called for. Twenty-three voted for the yeas and nays, and fifty odd against it. Then, is not the House in a dividing state, under the decision of the Chair, until there is a quorum here? And can any other motion be made when the House is dividing? But I would ask the Chair to permit the third paragraph, of the fifth section, of the first article of the Constitution of the United States to be read.

The Clerk read the paragraph, as follows:

"Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal."

The SPEAKER. That is the constitutional provision, but the construction which the Chair puts upon the provision in reference to this subject is this: that it is competent for the House to adjourn with less than a quorum from day to day, but it is not competent for less than a quorum to pass a bill. There is another provision of the Constitution, the gentleman will remember, which requires a quorum to be present to do business, and, therefore, for the purpose of doing business, less than one fifth of a quorum, in the judgment of the Chair, cannot call the yeas and nays.

Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. JONES. I do; and let the House decide whether one fifth of those present have not a right, under the Constitution, to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Do I understand the Chair to decide, that less than a quorum cannot have the yeas and nays recorded upon any question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does so decide.

Mr. STEPHENS. But the Constitution says, that one fifth of those present may order the yeas and nays upon any question.

The SPEAKER. That is the language of the Constitution. But there is an another provision of the Constitution, the gentleman will remember, which requires that there shall be a quorum present to do business.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is very true.

The SPEAKER. We cannot pass a bill with less than a quorum, and the yeas and nays would be idle, therefore, less than a quorum being present. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then I understand the Chair to decide—

The SPEAKER. The Chair simply decides that in this case the yeas and nays were not ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Although more than one fifth of those present voted for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEPHENS. Ah! that is another question.

The SPEAKER. That is the question on which the Chair had decided. The decision of the Chair would have been very different on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. STUART. I ask for tellers on the appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will further state, in explanation, that it was competent for the Chair, in his opinion, to ascertain, at any time, whether there was a quorum present. It was competent, and perfectly in order, for tellers to have been called upon the division of the House on the demand for the yeas and nays. But as it is impossible that the House can, under the Constitution, do business with less than a quorum, the Chair decides that the yeas and nays cannot be ordered by less than one fifth of a quorum.

Mr. STEPHENS. And that in this case they were not ordered?

The SPEAKER. Yes; and that in this case they were not ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, I think the decision of the Chair is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] insists that the yeas and nays were ordered, and appeals from the decision of the Chair; and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?" On this question tellers are demanded.

Mr. HART moved to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. STUART demanded tellers on that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for the yeas and nays.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays, and on a count, there were, ayes 20, noes 101.

So (one fifth not voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HART withdrew the call for tellers.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay the appeal upon the table, and it was carried in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the House.

Mr. GOODENOW. I move that when this House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. That motion is already pending; and the question is upon ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HART then withdrew the motion.

Mr. EVANS moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. NABERS. I appeal to the courtesy of the gentleman from Maryland and the House to indulge me for a moment. From intelligence I have recently received, it is likely that I shall be obliged to leave the city in a day or two. I have a bill, the notice of which I gave months ago, which I ask leave to introduce merely for the purpose of having it referred. It will take but a single moment. It is a bill to regulate the compensation of certain postmasters.

[Cries of "Leave!" "Leave!"]

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly read a first time by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the reading of any bill, unless there is a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that there is a quorum present.

Mr. JONES. Then I call for the vote upon the other bill, which was pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Tennessee that this bill was introduced by unanimous consent. It has been introduced and read a first time. The Chair therefore decides the objection as coming too late.

The bill was then read a second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. POLK. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. FICKLIN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a point of order. I understood that the motion to adjourn was only withdrawn for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. NABERS] to introduce his bill. I submit that the motion to adjourn must now be put.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding that, the motion to adjourn over was in order, and under the rules must be first put to the House.

Mr. STANLY. I believe the Chair is right in his decision.

The yeas and nays were then ordered, and, being taken, the result was—yeas 67, nays 72.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HENN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw, to enable me to report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. ROBBINS. I will withdraw for that purpose.

Mr. HENN then, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported, as correctly enrolled, the bill for limiting the time for holding the United States district courts in Alabama, and for other purposes; which received the signature of the Speaker.

The question then recurred upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. POLK. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENN. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask whether it is in order to make that motion when we have just voted down the same motion?

The SPEAKER. It is, strictly speaking, in order, inasmuch as other business has intervened.

Mr. FICKLIN. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ROBBINS. I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. POLK. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SACKETT. Is it in order to move to amend the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HART. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet again on Monday next.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask if these two motions can be alternated. Nothing has been done since the last motion was made.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn was voted down by yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Nothing has been done since that, except the motion to adjourn until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is such action as to authorize the Chair to receive the proposition.

Mr. JONES. If this motion fails, they can move to adjourn again, and thus keep on all night.

The SPEAKER. I do not know indeed, what they will do. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENN. I withdrew the motion to adjourn over; consequently there has business intervened.

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about business having intervened, and that very important.

The question was then taken on the demand for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Is it in order to call the other side upon the question for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. It is too late, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the proposition now before the House must first be taken, which is the proposition to adjourn over until Monday.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn until Monday, and there were—yeas 52, noes 41—no quorum voting.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. Is it in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order pending the motion to adjourn.

Mr. St. MARTIN. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was agreed to.

So the House adjourned to meet again to-morrow.

PETITIONS, &c.,

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. NEWTON: The petition of John Henry, of Ohio, for a pension.

By Mr. BRAGG: The petition of Gerald B. Hall, United States assistant marshal, southern district of Alabama, praying for extra compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. WELCH: The petition of 116 citizens of Meigs, Vinton, and Athens counties, Ohio, for a mail route from Wilksville, in Vinton county, to Lee, in Athens county, in said State.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of James McGahey, William Penn Feeney, Edward M. Meader, John Lawlor, and 29 others, practical printers, of Philadelphia, petitioning Congress to pass a law for the establishment of a national printing office.

Also, the memorial of Thomas A. Braceland, John P. McPadden, Edward F. Maddock, John H. Cunningham, and 10 others, practical printers, of Philadelphia, petitioning Congress to pass a law for the establishment of a national printing office.

By Mr. CHANDLER: The resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in opposition to a renewal of the patent for Parker's water-wheel.

Also, the memorial of William S. Hart and many other citizens of Philadelphia, asking an enlargement of the bounty land provisions to soldiers, and to extend them to marines and seamen.

By Mr. THOMPSON, of Virginia: Three several memorials from citizens of Harrison county, in favor of the Wheeling bridge.

By Mr. HIBBARD: The memorial of B. W. Clark and others, citizens of Lyman, New Hampshire, remonstrating against the further extension of the Woodworth patent.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 1, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. The first business before the House is the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill for the relief of Osborn Cross, of the United States Army.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of privilege, in reference to the correction of the Journal. It is stated in the Journal that when the yeas and nays were called upon a proposition, I rose to a question of order. I raised no question of order, and so distinctly stated; but I raised a constitutional question. There is nothing in the rules or orders of this House, as to what number shall order the yeas and nays. The right is one derived from the Constitution, and not from a rule. I hope the Journal will be made to conform to these facts.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. That is still a question of order, based upon the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair still thinks it is a question of order; but the gentleman has submitted a motion to amend the Journal, by striking out certain words pointed out by him, and inserting others.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Journal be corrected, and made to conform to the state of facts, as they were.

Mr. SWEETSER. It is a question of order under the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] submit the precise correction he desires?

Mr. JONES. Will the Clerk read that part of the Journal, and I will state my correction. The proceedings are not reported in the papers this morning.

The Clerk then read the part of the Journal referred to; which was as follows:

"Mr. GEORGE W. JONES moved the point of order, that inasmuch as one fifth of the members voting had voted in favor of taking the vote on the engrossment of the bill by yeas and nays, it was not necessary that a quorum should have voted—the Constitution providing that the yeas and nays—shall, at the desire of one fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal; and that proportion of those voting having expressed such a desire in the present case, he insisted that they were entitled to have the yeas and nays taken."

Mr. JONES. I move to strike out the words "the point of order," and insert "the constitutional right."

The SPEAKER. The Chair regards the question made by the gentleman as a question of order. The reason upon which the gentleman bases his position is, that the right is a constitutional one—that there is a constitutional provision controlling the case; all of which is stated by the Journal. The gentleman moves to strike out the words recognizing his motion as a question of order, with a view to insert a declaration that it is a constitutional right which he demands.

Mr. WOODWARD. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] that he withdraw his motion. It is a rule of order established by the Constitution, and, therefore, an irreversible rule; but still it is a rule of order and procedure.

Mr. JONES. Notwithstanding the opinion of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Woodward,] from which I differ, I must insist upon my motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Was the gentleman entitled to make remarks in explanation of his action, and give his reasons for it, or not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he had.

Mr. JOHNSON. If he did not do so, he cannot add to the Journal his argument in behalf of it to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] gave the grounds upon which he appealed from the decision of the Chair. The gentleman insists that it is not a point of order at all—that it is a constitutional question, and he wants that fact inserted in the Journal. It will be for the House to determine whether or not it would be better to give to the country the history of the transaction.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would inquire how the Journal would read in its amended form?

The Clerk accordingly read the Journal as it would appear as amended.

Mr. JONES. I demanded it as a constitutional right that one fifth of the members present could order the yeas and nays upon any question.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move to lay the motion upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion to lay upon the table is in order.

The question was taken upon the motion to lay on the table the proposition to amend the Journal, and decided in the negative.

The question recurred upon the motion to amend the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if the House will indulge him in his own behalf, will state, that, according to his recollection, the Journal states substantially the history of the matter. It certainly was the object of the Speaker, and of the Clerk, to state it. The Chair thinks that it must at last be a question of order to be determined by the House. The question is, whether the Journal reports correctly all the facts?

Mr. STUART. I desire to inquire as to a fact, which is the only thing that troubles me. I have no doubt that the Chair is correct; but if this motion to lay on the table is entertained, will not the effect be, according to parliamentary law, to carry the Journal with it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. However, the House have voted down the motion to lay upon the table, and that, therefore, cannot be a question now.

Mr. STUART. I had a contrary impression. The question was then put upon the motion to amend the Journal as indicated by Mr. JONES, and it was disagreed to.

OSBORN CROSS.

The SPEAKER. The question first in order is the unfinished business of yesterday, being "A bill for the relief of Osborn Cross," reported from the Committee of the Whole, with the recommendation that it do pass, and upon its engrossment the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. ROBBINS. Would it be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the special order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, inasmuch as the House was dividing upon the bill. They cannot, therefore, be interrupted by any motion of that kind.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit a very brief statement in regard to the bill upon which the vote is just about to be taken. I do not wish to debate the subject. The gentleman who reported this bill, in a statement of fact to the House—

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!"]

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment, until the Chair ascertains if the demand for the yeas and nays is accorded? While the House was dividing, and previous to the adjournment, they were demanded.

The question was then taken, and, upon a division, there were—yeas 22—

Mr. GOODENOW. I call for tellers upon the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. WILLIAMS and INGERSOLL were appointed.

A count being had, the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask the consent of the House to submit a correction of the statement made by the gentleman who reported this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to debate the question.

Mr. SACKETT. I do not wish to enter into a debate of this bill, but simply to correct a misstatement made by the gentleman who reported the bill, owing to a misapprehension. He has examined the facts since, and so have I looked into them. It was stated here on yesterday, that the key of the iron safe which contained the notes stolen was left in an unlocked desk. That statement may prejudice, perhaps, the minds of some members of the House against the bill. The facts are these: The key of the iron safe containing the notes was locked up in a smaller safe, the key of which was locked up in a desk. The key of that desk Major Cross had in his own pocket. These were the facts proved before the committee.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I want to know of the gentleman how the key of the safe was then obtained by the burglars?

Mr. SACKETT. They broke the safe open.

Mr. STUART. I desire to ascertain from the gentleman from New York, or some other gentleman, the fact as to how these individuals became locked in the room where the safes were kept?

Mr. SACKETT. An individual was secreted there clandestinely.

Mr. STUART. How did he get there?

Mr. SACKETT. The proof shows that he was secreted in the building when it was locked up. This fact was brought out in the examination of this case before the court-martial. They examined elaborately all the facts in the case, and reported upon them.

Mr. STUART. It has been stated that he was a man in the employ of this office.

Mr. SACKETT. He had been discharged previously from the employment. He was clandestinely in the house.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman. Do I understand him to state this claimant locked up a man in the building?

Mr. SACKETT. No, sir. This is the fact in the case: When the office was closed that night, as has been ascertained in a subsequent investigation of the matter, there was an individual clandestinely secreted in the building. It was not known he was secreted there. He opened the back door, admitted his accomplices, and accomplished the burglary.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I understand the gentleman from New York to say that the great care exerted was such as to leave the felon locked up in the building. Am I correct about that? I wish the information. I desire to know whether this man who now petitions for relief, was so careful as to lock up the very identical individual who stole the money?

Mr. SACKETT. I wish simply to reply to the gentleman upon that subject, that he had no knowledge of any person being there. He was secreted.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I would like to know how it is that he arrives at the conclusion this man did not know the burglar was there?

Mr. SACKETT. From the report of the court-martial which tried Major Cross, made after a full investigation of all the facts.

Mr. GORMAN. I rise to a question of order. Debate is out of order, as the call for the previous question has been seconded, and the yeas and nays ordered.

The SPEAKER. The call for the previous question was not sustained.

Mr. SAVAGE. I think there is a misunderstanding in relation to the facts of this case; and for the purpose of correcting a statement of the gentleman from New York, I will read the following extract from the report of the Committee on Claims on this bill:

"It also appears that he endeavored to place said Treasury notes on deposit in the Union Bank of said city, the usual depository of the Government funds, on general deposit, so that the funds (being needed for constant and immediate use) might be drawn on, but was refused. On the 8th of October, 1842, before leaving the office of quartermaster, he locked up said funds, together with some $300 of private funds, in an iron safe, (the best that could be procured, the place in which he had been in the habit of keeping the Government funds.) Four negro men, however, had entered into a conspiracy to rob said office; one of them, 'Tohn,' who had been waiting about the office some weeks previous, laid a plan to rob the office. He had made arrangements to conceal another negro, 'George,' in the store room of the lower floor, which communicated with the office; but, as he could not get the porter of the establishment out of the way, he waited till the porter went up stairs to blow out the light and fasten the office windows, when he slipped in the store room, unhooked the back door, (each of which was fastened by a large iron hook,) and disappeared. This was about, or shortly after, dark. The porter left under the impression that all was secure. The said negro man, it appears, returned that night, entered the said store by the back doors, succeeded in opening the safe containing said funds, and rifled it of its contents."

Mr. GIDDINGS. I have frequently found it a hard task in this House to oppose a claim, be it good or bad, but there are certain rules of evidence from which we ought not to depart. I think we should hold our public officers to that strict and careful attention which we, as individuals, exercise over our own property. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] is laboring under a mistake, if I understand the report. The report shows that this quartermaster exercised not even the care and attention to lock up his own premises. He trusted that matter entirely to another individual, and that individual left the back door of the House unlocked and unfastened. The porter, of whom we know nothing, save that he acted as a servant of the claimant, was intrusted with these funds, and whether he shared a part of the spoils, or whether he has a portion of the money now in his pocket, we know not; nor is there a particle of proof to show that he was not accessory to the larceny. As I was about to remark, this porter leaves the house unlocked. Should we say that it was such a care of our funds, that we will now compensate this man for the loss?—that we will impose it upon the people of the United States?—that we will pay it out of the public Treasury? Had I lost those funds in the manner stated, I should never have asked indemnity.

Mr. SWEETSER. If my honorable colleague will allow me to interrupt him. I desire to make the point with him, which I made in the Committee of the Whole yesterday. His mind is now taken up with a question that may not have a controlling influence in the decision of this case. I desire to state that I take the facts, as collected and reported by the Committee on Claims, as true.

It seems to me, that when he admits that the Treasury drafts which were stolen from the safe of Major Cross, at New Orleans, had not been put in circulation, but were transmitted to him to be used at a proper time, there is very little ground for a difference of opinion in relation to the legal rights of the respective parties. I maintain that the thief—or any person to whom he may have negotiated the Treasury drafts—had no title in the same; and that the Government, after having had notice of the larceny, accompanied with a description of the drafts, should have withheld payment and treated the drafts as void; and all persons presenting them, and demanding payment, as particeps criminis. If a bank at New Orleans purchased these Treasury notes of a negro, or an unknown person, they had no right to complain; and if from a responsible person, let them send them back from one to another until they headed the thief. It cannot be contended, with any reasonable hope of success, in this House, that if the Government have paid these drafts improvidently—that in order to make the Government whole, it is justice to insist upon the penalty of Cross's bond.

I confess that the facts disclosed in this case have aroused my sensibilities; and I desire my colleague to answer the legal point which I present, conceiving that the facts warrant the conclusions which I draw from the testimony. Now, I protest against any blinking of this case. Let us meet it fairly, and not sacrifice an innocent man and his sureties, who has done all that the law of the land required him to do in order to save the Government from loss.

Sir, I cannot consent to remain silent and permit—if it is in my power to prevent it—so grievous a wrong.

I hope my colleague will permit the point I make to have its due influence upon his mind, and that this House will not suffer this case to be controlled by surmises and suspicions unworthy of a liberal exercise of the equitable power which they have to sustain an officer who seems to have done his duty, and his whole duty, in the premises.

I repeat what I said yesterday, in relation to the first point I then made. In a case where no laches can be imputed, and when it is a question between an individual and the Government, I will always with my vote place the loss upon the Government, and excuse the individual; and I must be permitted to insist, that if there is wrong in this case, it consists in the conduct of the Government in paying the stolen Treasury notes, and now seeking to enforce the penalty of Major Cross's bond. I thank my colleague for his kindness.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I inferred from the gentleman's remarks that the Government has paid these Treasury notes. I would like to know if the Government has paid them or not?

Mr. GIDDINGS. I will answer the gentleman's question if I understand this case. My colleague [Mr. SWEETSER] has misapprehended it. The Treasury drafts were cashed at one of the banks in New Orleans, and it was not Treasury drafts which were taken from the safe. It was bank paper which was stolen, and not Treasury drafts. If my friend will look at the report, he will find that to be so.

Mr. SACKETT. Treasury notes were received in exchange.

Mr. GIDDINGS. It was not then the original draft of $30,000, but paper already negotiated.

Mr. SACKETT. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question? The gentleman states that the office was left unlocked. He misapprehends the statement of the report; for it is not so stated there. But that is the sense in which the gentleman uses it. The porter—I suppose the person usually employed for such a purpose—was engaged in locking the office and fastening the windows up stairs. The men who entered into the conspiracy were in waiting, intending to slip into the building. After the porter had fastened one door, the back door, and had gone up stairs to fasten the windows, they slipped in, unhooked the hooks which fastened the back door, which the porter supposed remained shut, as he had fastened it not five minutes before.

Mr. GIDDINGS. The porter went out, leaving the back door unfastened, because he did not look to it after he came down stairs, and the thief went in at that door thus left open, perhaps for that very purpose. Am I right?

Mr. SACKETT. I say the gentleman is not right. The evidence shows that the porter had just fastened the back door, and went up stairs to fasten the upper windows. While he was up there the thief entered into the building and instantly unhooked the back door and slipped out.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I believe that almost every member of the House clearly understands these facts. This porter went up stairs, and while in the chamber, the thief came in and unfastened the back door and went out again, and when the porter returned down stairs he went out, leaving the back door unfastened, instead of going to see whether it remained fastened. He left this back door without any examination whatever after returning from the chamber.

Mr. SACKETT. He had just fastened it.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Yes, he had done so the day before, and the hour, perhaps the minute; but he then went out and left it unfastened. My position is this: While that porter left this door unfastened, there was no such caution and care shown by him which a prudent man would exercise over his own property. My friend, or any other man, would not have left his property in that way. I merely made the inquiry of the gentleman, to show that the committee were under a mistake in regard to this man being secreted in the House. He was not secreted there. The porter locked the front door and went out, leaving the back door unfastened.

Mr. SACKETT. The committee reported the facts correctly. I was under a misapprehension as to the report, as I had not seen it for some days. The facts of the case show that the thieves were not able to get into the building except by slipping in and unbolting the door which had just been fastened.

Mr. GIDDINGS. The whole question arises from a misapprehension of our own duties. Instead of facts proved to this House, gentlemen take the say-so of this court-martial, or court of inquiry without law, without any kind of authority, and where but one party is heard. They bring that in here to bind our conscience and direct our judgment. Instead of taking the say-so of that court, the committee should have given us proofs of the facts. It is for us to draw our own conclusions from the proofs. I disregard the opinions of that court altogether, and I am to judge of the facts as they are proven to me. I take the conclusions of no man in such a case as this.

Mr. STUART. I wish to submit a few remarks in reference to this proposition, if I understand it. I may be as unfortunate as other gentlemen, and I may not understand it. But there is one leading fact in this case which seems to me ought to control the House, and that is, there is no evidence in this case, which shows that this officer exercised that care in reference to this subject which a prudent man would have exercised in his own affairs. We have no difficulty whatever in relation to the law of the case. Something was said yesterday about that. Some one remarked to-day that the rule of law that an individual, under these circumstances, cannot excuse himself by pleading larceny, is not only well settled, but a very wise one. Congress ought to be governed by a rule of law universal in its application; and this rule, as laid down and adhered to, will, in almost every case, work properly. It is the peculiar business of the law-making power to relieve the cases which form a proper and legitimate exception. That the courts cannot do; that the law-making power can and ought to do. It will be recollected by gentlemen that this is the best showing of the case that can be made. We should not fail to remember that this is the showing of the party himself. It is the best exhibit that he can make, without any controversy on our side. Now, upon his own showing, he exhibits a degree of neglect that ought not to excuse a bailee; and unless a Government officer can make out a case that shows that he has exercised all that ordinary care and diligence that a prudent man is bound to exercise in his own affairs, the Government of the United States should not relieve him. Now, has he done that? I ask any member of this House to test it by his own prudence. If he had an amount of money in an iron safe, locked up in one of the rooms of his own house, and he, either by leaving the key with his servant, or by his own omission, allowed a burglar to rob him of that money, and he not know it, and thereby lost his property, would he have the face to ask the surrounding community to indemnify him upon the score of charity? Sir, would he not feel that such negligence as he would be obliged to admit would not bear the light of day? It so seems to me; and it seems to me that the present aspect of this case, from the leading facts standing out here upon the officer's own showing—and, I repeat, certainly as good a showing as the case is susceptible of—is sufficient to induce Congress to withhold relief, and place it upon the ground which I shall, in my vote: that this individual has not exercised sufficient prudence—not even that prudence that is due from one citizen to another, or from that citizen over his own concerns. These are my views, Mr. Chairman, and these views will control my vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I desire to say a word or two in regard to this matter, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.] I do not think he places it upon the proper ground. This matter, it seems, has undergone an investigation before the proper tribunal. That tribunal has reported upon the facts; and from the report of that tribunal, it seems to me that this officer made use of the ordinary diligence which his immediate predecessor was in the habit of using—that diligence which was necessary to protect these funds. Now, sir, if he used the ordinary diligence which a private individual would use over his own property, I hold that he has done everything which the law requires him to do as a public officer. Do we not hear every day of private individuals, who have had their stores robbed, precisely in the same way that this public officer was robbed—by burglars and robbers concealing themselves in the day time in some secret part of their store rooms, and after the store was closed at night—the clerks, perhaps, sleeping in that very store—and it has never been contended that the owner of the goods had not exercised a proper and necessary discretion in protecting his property? It seems to me, that all this watchfulness was exercised by this public officer.

But I desire to place it upon another and higher ground, and one which this House cannot, and is not at liberty to disregard; and it is this: Admitting that he was guilty of neglect—concede, for the sake of the argument, that he was guilty of neglect in this case—as soon as he discovered that a burglary had been committed, he informed the Government thereof; he identified the property; he gave them the number of the Treasury notes, so as to enable them to ascertain, when these notes were presented for payment, their identity. What did the Government do under these circumstances? It seems that when the notes were presented, the Government paid them; and upon what principle? Why, at the very time that this property was stolen, it was the property of the Government.

Mr. SACKETT, (interrupting.) With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, I desire to add one word at this point. He not only notified the Government of the burglary, but he diligently ferreted out the felons, and secured $3,000 of the stolen property, and the conviction of the felons.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (resuming.) And not only exercised the energy that was necessary for the discovery of the perpetrators of this act, but he gave to the Government such information as would enable them to detect the stolen property, whenever it should be presented at the Government counter for payment. Now, I hold it to be a legal principle, which, if properly considered, must influence the vote of this House upon this question, that when this property was stolen it was the property of the Government of the United States, and no matter into whose hands it afterwards passed, that property never passed out of the hands of the Government. Larceny, no matter into whose hands the stolen property may pass, never changes the right of property in the article stolen from the original owner. If these notes were the property of the Government when they were presented, the Government had no business to redeem them to the holder, no matter who he might be.

Mr. STUART, (interrupting.) This is a question of equity. I coincide entirely with the gentleman in his ideas of law. They are the same ideas presented yesterday and to-day by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SWEETSER.] But let us try how this thing would operate. Suppose the Government had declined paying this paper, which was in the hands of a bona fide holder, who had paid full value for it. He would have had the legal right to go back upon the man from whom he got it. And so successively would they trace it back until they came to the man who got it from the thief, and he would lose it. Now what would be the consequence, upon the question of equity? Where one of two innocent persons must suffer, the established rule of law is, that he shall suffer who has been the originator of the mischief, so that they would come back to the man who took the notes from the thief, who, being scamps, they would not be able to collect it.

Mr. SWEETSER. Oh, that is begging the question.

Mr. STUART. No, it is not begging the question at all. In this case the man who suffered injury from his own negligence must lose. This is a question of equity, not of law. Adopt the course which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAMPBELL] contends for, and you throw the loss upon the man who had no earthly means of preventing it, for he took the paper from the man who held possession, and prima facie owned it, without any power to determine that he was the thief.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (resuming.) I feel thankful to the gentleman for the views with which he has favored the House. I conceive it makes the claim of this applicant still stronger. He admits the law; he admits that the Government of the United States was not bound to pay these Treasury drafts when they were presented. What did they pay them for? Why it seems that they paid them for the purpose of inflicting a punishment and a penalty upon a public officer, who was charged with being guilty of neglect. Is that the course which the Government of the United States should pursue?

But let us follow the gentleman's argument a little further. He says the equity of the case is against this claim. I deny it. The equity of the case is with the claim. He says that if the Government had refused to pay these Treasury drafts, they would have been traced back from one to another, until finally the thieves would have been discovered. That is the very object we had in view, and that is the very course the Government should have pursued. When they came to the last man they would have required of him to have examined into this matter. When he received Treasury drafts, of a large amount, from negroes—I believe they were negroes that stole this money—it should have been sufficient to have put him upon inquiry, whether or not it was right to receive that money.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to submit an inquiry to him. If it be true, as contended by the gentleman, that the officer in this case used such diligence as an ordinarily prudent man would have used in taking care of his own property, will not that furnish him a good defense at law? If that be true, what is the necessity for special legislation in the case?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Government is on one side. It is shown here that the Government has paid money which it had no right or authority to pay, and then it turns round and denounces and harasses an individual, because it has done an act itself which it was not justified in doing under the law of the land. Is that a correct principle? Is it a principle in equity? This is not a question between individuals. The claimant comes here and makes a question between the Government and himself, and he asks relief. I think if ever there was a case before this House, which entitled an applicant to relief, it is this case. If the Government has lost anything it was by its own act. And when it does that, I cannot see where there is any equity in the Government turning round and calling upon the individual to reimburse it.

Mr. SACKETT, (interrupting.) There has been considerable said here about the question of the diligence and care of this claimant. I should like to know what sort of standard this House intends to set up? The evidence is that he exercised all the care and diligence that had been exercised by the public officer who had previously occupied the same place, in pursuing the same business.

It is proved, in the first place, that he could not deposit the money in the banks, because they refused to receive it. Then certainly he is not to blame for that. It is proved that he deposited the money in a secure iron safe. Certainly he was not to blame for that. It is proved, too, that the safe was locked, the key of that safe locked up in another safe, and the key of the latter safe locked up in a desk, and the key of the desk in his own pocket. Certainly he is not to blame for that. I should like to know what sort of standard gentlemen would set up?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I cannot yield to any more interruptions. I have but a few words more to say. I put it upon this ground: that if the claimant was guilty of neglect; if he did not exercise that strict watchfulness over this money which, perhaps, an individual might exercise over his own property—yet, I maintain, that so far as we have the facts before us, he did so—and that his conduct afterwards, in giving the Government notice, to enable them to identify this property whenever it was presented to them, and the Government discharging him of all responsibility which he owed to this Government in relation to the particular amount of money he had in his custody.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I think this debate has gone far enough. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question now was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 91, nays 49; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, William Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Bell, Bockock, Bowles, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Conger, Curtis, George T. Davis, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Evans, Fitch, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Gorman, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hebard, Henn, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Jackson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Mason, McCormick, McDonald, McNair, Meade, Miller, Millson, Miner, Morrison, Murphy, Nabers, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Porter, Powell, Price, Sackett, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Snow, Stanley, Alexander H. Stephens, Stone, Strother, Sweetser, Taylor, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Walbridge, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—91.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Babcock, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Churchill, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Culion, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Eastman, Ficklin, Floyd, Giddings, Grow, Hall, Isham G. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, John W. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, Mace, McLanahan, McQueen, Morehead, Murray, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Polk, Robbins, Savage, Skelton, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, Stuart, Townshend, Watkins, Wildrick, and Woodward—49.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was read the third time.

Mr. SACKETT moved to reconsider the vote just taken, by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. There has a large amount of business accumulated upon the Speaker's table, which, as every gentleman must see, it is very necessary should be taken up and disposed of in some way. I move that we do now proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. SACKETT. I hope the gentleman will not press that motion, at least until he allows this bill to pass.

The SPEAKER. This being private bill day, and there being private business upon the Speaker's table, reported by the Committee of the Whole House, it is the opinion of the Chair that the House is now engaged in its regular business, and that the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Howard] is not in order.

Mr. HOWARD. But the Chair will recollect that to-day is Saturday.

The SPEAKER. But it is private bill day, nevertheless.

The question was then taken, and the bill passed.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it in order to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. ROBBINS. I make that motion.

Mr. HOWARD. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn—yeas 52, nays 70.

Mr. ROBBINS. I now insist upon my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion for a single moment.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am appealed to by several gentlemen round me not to withdraw the motion, and with all due respect to the gentleman, I decline.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to inquire of the Chair if it will be in order at this time to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. If this motion be voted down, it will then be in order.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not in order to make the motion now?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes the motion, the question must be first put upon going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the special order.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, sir, I make the motion now, so that it may come up if the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union fail.

The SPEAKER. The motion will come up if the pending motion be voted down.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I inquire of the Chair whether there are other bills upon the Speaker's table which were reported from the Committee of the Whole House on yesterday?

The SPEAKER. There are several other bills upon the Speaker's table.

Tellers were demanded upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but refused.

The question was then taken and the House refused to go into committee.

Mr. FOWLER. I now ask for the question on my motion, to go into Committee of the Whole upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. DANIEL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there are only two bills remaining upon the Speaker's table yet to be acted upon. I hope he will withdraw the motion till they are disposed of.

Mr. FOWLER. I am perfectly willing to do so if we can go on with those bills.

The SPEAKER. They are the business regularly in order.

Mr. FOWLER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move that the House do now adjourn, and upon that motion I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, and FOWLER were appointed; and the question being then taken, the tellers reported—yeas 62, nays 38.

Mr. STUART demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and the question being taken the result was—yeas 58, nays 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, John Appleton, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bell, Bockock, Busby, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chastain, Clingman, Conger, Culion, George T. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Dockery, Eastman, Edmundson, Gaylord, Goodenow, Grey, Hall, Hart, Henn, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kurtz, Landry, Mace, Mason, McNair, McQueen, Miner, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Nabers, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Powell, Scudder, Skelton, Snow, Stone, Sweetser, Thurston, Townshend, Ward, Addison White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Williams, and Woodward—57.

NAYS—Messrs. William Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bowne, Bragg, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Cabell, Caskey, Chapin, Churchill, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Evans, Ficklin, Fitch, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Giddings, Goodrich, Gorman, Grow, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hebard, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kuhns, Mann, McCormick, McLanahan, Meade, Miller, Millson, Morrison, Newton, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penniman, Perkins, Porter, Robbins, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, George W. Thompson, Washburn, Watkins, and Welch—80.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. FOWLER. I now renew the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. McMULLIN. If it is in order, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order.

The question was put, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GAYLORD. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE demanded the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

The question was then put and the motion was agreed to, and

The House adjourned till Monday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 3, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretaries of the Treasury, of the Interior, of War, of the Navy, and the Postmaster General, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, calling for some plan of classifying, compensating, and appointing clerks in the several Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented four memorials of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the bounty land law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, two memorials of citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, praying the establishment of a national printing office; which were referred to the Committee on Printing.

Also, a petition of citizens of Wayne county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the memorial of Joseph Hopkinson, praying to be allowed the difference between the pay of a passed assistant surgeon and that of a fleet surgeon, and surgeon, for the periods he performed the duties of the latter grades in the East India squadron; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BORLAND presented a petition of citizens of Scott and Sebastian counties, Arkansas, remonstrating against the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of citizens of Waldron, Arkansas, praying the establishment of a mail route from that place to Fort Smith; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HAMLIN presented four petitions of citizens of Bangor, Maine, praying the erection of a fog-bell on the Monegan, and buoys on the Old Man's Ledge, and the improvement of the Penobscot river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER presented a resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying a renewal of Uri Emmons's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the petition of Amelia Miller, widow and legal representative of George S. Miller, praying the appointment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Also, five petitions of citizens of Greene county, New York, remonstrating against the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which were referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. MALLORY presented the petition of the guardian of Ellen H. Wood, heir of James Hall, deceased, praying for the bounty land and money to which said Hall was entitled under the resolves of September 16, 1776, and May 15, 1778; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. WALKER presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land to aid in the construction of certain railroads in that State; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, the petition of Frederick Rikow, praying an increase of pension, and to be allowed the amount of money of which he was robbed while in Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted additional documents in relation to the petition of Leslie Combs; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

LABORERS ON THE CAPITOL.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, I have been requested to present a memorial which makes a very strong appeal, at least to my feelings. It is this: To the honorable members of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the laborers, who were employed in working on the Capitol, would again most respectfully and most earnestly call your attention to our distressed condition. We humbly beg leave to make this truthful statement to you:

A large majority of us are from different parts of this country. We came to Washington, and went to work on the Capitol under the belief that our employment on the same would last for years. But so far from this being the case, we were thrown out of work on the 13th December last, and were not again employed until 15th of April, and we now find ourselves discharged; and that without giving us any previous notice, and that without any fault on our parts as far as we know, and other men have been employed in many of our places.

This has been done, though, during the last winter, we were led to believe, from the manner of our discharge, that we would be again employed and continued in such employment. Under this belief we continued in Washington, and were necessarily forced to contract debts during the past winter and spring for our support, expecting to pay the same out of the proceeds of our labor during the present season. You will thus see our unfortunate position; many of us, far from our homes, and our families, and without means of returning to the same, and in debt here, and those of us who live in Washington are also sufferers; for we, too, have contracted debts, expecting to meet the same when the work on the Capitol should be recommenced; and, believing that we would at that time be thus employed, we did not endeavor to get work elsewhere. All of us are thus thrown out of work unexpectedly, and at a time when the necessities of life are very dear in Washington. We would, therefore, most respectfully and earnestly ask you, who are the representatives of the rights and the wants of the people, to take our case in consideration, hoping that you will deem it just to allow what we do by this petition most respectfully ask, namely: the usual wages for the time that we were unemployed on the Capitol, and waiting to be employed on the same—that is to say, from the 13th of December, 1851, up to the 15th of April, 1852.

JEREMIAH SHEAHAN, } Committee on MICHAEL O'CONNOR, } the part of the JAMES COLLINS, } laborers.

WASHINGTON, May 1, 1852.

It is the memorial of certain persons who have been employed in work upon the Capitol, asking that some measure may be adopted by Congress to afford them relief in their present destitute and suffering condition. It will be recollected—I think it proper to give this explanation before presenting the memorial—that, when the joint resolution making an appropriation to continue the work upon the two wings of the Capitol was before the Senate, an amendment was made to it, giving to the workmen who had been engaged on that work an allowance for a portion of the time that they had been detained here without work, but promised and expecting it. Before that amendment was made, the advocates of the appropriation to continue the work on the extension, made a very strong appeal both here and elsewhere in behalf of these poor men, who were represented as being in a suffering condition, who had been kept here expecting work, who had incurred debts, and who were suffering exceedingly for the means of living. The appeal was made to Congress; the men were brought into our galleries; their sufferings were so strongly represented as to appeal very powerfully to the sensibilities of Congress, and were held up, by those who desired the appropriation to continue the work to be made, as a means of obtaining support for the measure. To what extent that appeal was influential upon the minds of members, I am not prepared to say; I know very well, however, it was a very strong one to my own sensibilities. At any rate, the advocates of the measure made use of it as a means to accomplish their purpose. Under the feeling raised, and from the consideration suggested, by the appeal, I was a warm advocate, with others, for a provision in the appropriation to afford some relief to those suffering men. The amendment which was made here went to the House of Representatives, and there failed. Opposition was made to it here and elsewhere upon the ground that the laborers had abandoned all desire or expectation, and withdrawn their petition for relief in the way of back pay; that all they wanted was work. Give them employment for the future, and they would be satisfied to put up with the privations of the past. This was said to be all they wanted. This statement, although not authorized by a large majority of those men, was freely made use of, and seemed to be sufficiently influential to defeat the proposition to afford them relief at that time, and in that way. It was deemed sufficient that they should have employment for the future; that that would satisfy all purpose.

But what has been the consequence? All the individuals then employed, and in whose behalf the appeals had been made, who failed to come forward and say that they did not wish any back pay, have now been summarily dismissed from work, and persons not employed before have been substituted in their places. Those very individuals, with all the inconveniences and sufferings that they have suffered, by having been thrown out of work in winter, which sufferings were made use of as an appeal in support of the appropriation to carry on this work, have been thrown upon the world without employment, with prospective suffering added to their past privations. They now come forward with their memorial, present their case to the Senate of the United States, and ask that it may be taken into consideration and some relief afforded. I present the memorial, and ask that it may be laid on the table and printed.

The PRESIDENT. The motion to print goes to the Committee on Printing.

PETITION WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. UPHAM, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition of certain clerks in the Second Auditor's office.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill granting to the State of Arkansas the right of way and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Gaines's Landing to Fulton, in said State, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the memorial of Charles Mason, judge for Des Moines county, Iowa, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to refund to the county of Des Moines, Iowa, certain expenses of the district court which were paid by that county; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLEMENS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill to refund to the State of California the expenses incurred in suppressing Indian aggressions in that State, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, reported them back without amendment:

An act to authorize the Legislature of Mississippi to sell the lands heretofore appropriated for the use of schools in said State; and

An act to legalize certain entries of public lands made in the State of Florida.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred numerous memorials in favor of a modification of the bounty land law, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the documents in relation to Jim Capers, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and, by unanimous consent, was ordered to a second reading.

The Secretary commenced reading the bill.

Mr. HALE. I object to the second reading of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair stated expressly that it could be read a second time only by unanimous consent, and no objection was made in time.

Mr. JONES. It is a negro bill.

Mr. HALE. I object to the second reading.

Mr. JONES. You are too late.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that I am too late.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair stated that unanimous consent was required, and no objection was made.

Mr. HALE. I want to make a suggestion for the benefit of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MANGUM,] who, when in the Chair the other day, sustained the objection, made by his colleague, to the reading of a bill the second time, after the reading had commenced.

Mr. JONES. I apprehend my friend from New Hampshire does not know that the bill is for the relief of a negro. He was one who served his country gallantly, and in consequence of his faithful service, the committee have reported this bill for his relief.

Mr. HALE. For that very reason I objected; because I thought it indecorous for the Senator from Iowa to suggest that I would be governed by different principles in respect to my action for one man, from those which influenced me with regard to another. Therefore it was that I insisted on my objection.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the objection came too late.

The bill was then read a second time.

It provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place the name of Jim Capers upon the list of revolutionary pensioners, and pay him annually the sum allowed as the pension of one who served as a musician during the revolutionary war; said pension to commence on the 3d day of August, 1850.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from Iowa will consent to lay aside that bill, that we may take up the special order of the day.

Mr. JONES. I hope the bill will be considered now.

Mr. HALE. Let the report be read.

The report states that documents were referred to the Committee on Pensions, setting forth the fact that Jim Capers served in the capacity of a drum major, in the revolutionary war, and that the testimony with regard to that fact was quite satisfactory to the committee. Among the documents was a letter, dated June, 1850, from the Hon. B. Fitzgerald, before whom Capers made his declaration, in which he states that there are papers among the documents, relating to the case of Capers, which speak of him as a slave; but that the time when he was mustered into the service and out of it can be proved, as well as the fact of his freedom now, and when he left the service. The committee reported, therefore, that there was no conclusive ground to suppose, that during his service or since, he was a slave, and accordingly reported a bill for his relief.

Mr. HALE. I would like to know from the committee, as I see it is made a great point in the report, if this man had been so unfortunate as to have been a slave, notwithstanding he had established such a character as to have been made an officer in the Army, whether that circumstance would have debarred him from receiving a pension? I do not know of any such rule; and if there be such a rule, I should like to know it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Question!

The bill was then reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOWNS, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way and a donation of the public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Shreveport to the Mississippi river, in said State; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill entitled "An act for the relief of Osborn Cross, of the United States Army;" also, that it had passed the bill from the Senate for the relief of Charles G. Hunter, and a bill from the Senate entitled "An act for the relief of Jane Irwin," with an amendment.

On motion by Mr. BERRIEN, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill for the relief of Jane Irwin, and concurred therein.

The amendment is to add at the end of the bill the words "without interest."

URSULA E. COBB.

Mr. HALE. I move to suspend the morning business for a few minutes, for the purpose of taking up a bill for the relief of Ursula E. Cobb. It has been ordered to be engrossed by the unanimous vote of the Senate; but the Committee on Enrolled Bills saw that the name of this lady was put on the list of pensioners under an act that had been repealed. The committee have ordered a change to be made, and as the bill has been ordered to be engrossed, I hope it may be taken up and amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I now propose to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be required to place the name of Ursula E. Cobb, widow of the late Charles Cobb, a gunner in the Navy of the United States, on the list of navy pensions, and pay her at the rate of half the pay which her husband was receiving at the time of his death; said pension to commence on the 9th day of May, 1848, and to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think this is a suitable occasion to settle the question, whether we shall have pensions granted which are retrospective in their operation.

Mr. HALE. Then I move to amend the amendment by striking out "1848," and inserting "1852."

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The rule adopted in the Department, and carried out under existing laws, is to pay the pensioner up to the time he completes his testimony. The Committee on Pensions have adopted that rule for themselves, and they agreed in this case to give the pension up to the time when the testimony was completed. I think the rule is a fair and correct one, and that the pension should be paid to the time when he ceased to discharge his duty. It is the duty of the pensioner to show the time to which he is entitled to it. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. HALE. I make it to help the woman.

Mr. JONES. I wish to help her still more, and I hope the pension will be given for the full time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When this bill was before us the other day, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions did not view the rule which he now states as that by which the committee had been governed. The objection then, to all the bills granting pensions, and which were laid over, was, that we were about to make a different rule from that which has prevailed in the Department. Now, if it is understood that our action is to be the same as that at the Department, I have not a word of objection to make. The principal ground of objection the other day was, that Congress was making or applying one rule, and the Departments another; the rule at the Departments being that the pension shall take effect from the time the proof is completed, and which I am willing to adopt. If the gentleman shows that she completed her proof on the day referred to in the bill, then it is all right.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my motion to amend the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment concurred in.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the word "widowhood," and insert the word "life," so that the pension shall be during life.

The PRESIDENT. It is too late to make an amendment now, as the amendment made in committee has been concurred in in the Senate. It can only be amended by a reconsideration.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

RAILROADS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. WALKER. I now move that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill granting to the State of Wisconsin the right of way and a donation of the public land for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Fond du Lac to Janesville.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to know if the Senator will consent to lay the bill aside at one o'clock, if it is not disposed of at that time.

Mr. WALKER. Certainly. It is not my intention to go beyond that hour.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALKER. All the amendments proposed were agreed to on Thursday last.

Mr. SHIELDS. When the bill was under consideration the other day, I desired some time to prepare a slight amendment. The bill, as it now stands, proposes to aid in the construction of a railroad from the boundary line of the State of Wisconsin to Lake Superior; and I think there can be no objection to that road. It runs through an open and a very fine country. The amendment which I propose is merely to extend the road from the boundary line of Wisconsin to Chicago in Illinois. As the Senate are aware, Chicago is a very important point, and my proposition is merely to continue the road for a short distance in my own State to Chicago. I will offer my amendment, stating at the same time, that, as is well known to the Senators from that section of the country, the road will run through a portion of the country where there is no public land, and that the amendment only proposes the extension of the road to the important point which I have named. I propose to add the amendment as an additional section.

"That the said road be extended from the southern boundary of the State of Wisconsin to the city of Chicago in the State of Illinois, and that the same rights and privileges be granted to the State of Illinois for that purpose, as are already granted to the State of Wisconsin, and subject to the same restrictions, conditions, and limitations, as those imposed upon the State of Wisconsin: Provided, however, That the lands for this purpose shall be selected in the State of Illinois."

Mr. WALKER. I regret somewhat to see this amendment offered, and would be glad if it might be withdrawn. It is true that the design of the amendment is, to extend this road from the southern boundary of Wisconsin to Chicago. It then operates as an extension of the Central Railroad from your own State, Mr. President, through Wisconsin to Lake Superior. This bill concerns Wisconsin alone, and I could wish that nothing else might be attached to it. Very nearly the same amendment was offered to a bill on the subject of the Central Railroad, which I have named. I was one who then helped Senators to defeat that amendment, and I hope, as this only concerns the State of Wisconsin, this amendment may be withdrawn. Illinois has already had large grants made to her; and although I do not believe this bill so amended would give a single acre of land to the State of Illinois, still it will look like it, and may prejudice the bill. Illinois, as I said, has had large grants, while Wisconsin has had nothing. As the Senator from Illinois has remarked, the road passes through an extent of country where I do not believe there is an unsold acre of land that will sell for five cents an acre. I cannot, therefore, see the necessity of the amendment, and I am sure the Senator does not wish to embarrass this bill. The road will terminate in Chicago, at any rate; but I believe it will be injurious, and even disastrous, to the State of Wisconsin, to have it terminate outside of that State. It will have the effect to drain the State of its very marrow and vitality, as it were; but the Legislature of Wisconsin have acted in favor of the measure, and it is not for me to oppose my wishes to theirs. I do, however, sincerely believe it is an Illinois road, that it pours into the State of Illinois, and takes from the State of Wisconsin almost every interest she has. I am, however, under instructions to aid the passage of the bill, because the people of Wisconsin are in favor of it. I must say that the proposition seems to me to be calculated to embarrass the bill, though I have no idea that he designs to prejudice it. On the other hand, I believe he wishes it success, and I do also, for the reasons I have stated; but its success will be more certain, if the amendment is not incorporated in the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will state one fact, which may have some influence on the mind of the Senator from Wisconsin with regard to this bill. When I was first consulted with regard to this measure by its friends, the bill proposed to extend the road to Chicago. As I happened to live there, and knew that there was not an acre of land to be granted to Illinois, and that probably the word "Illinois" would raise a prejudice in the minds of some who have supposed that Illinois was getting more than she was entitled to, I suggested to strike out Illinois altogether, and that if this road could be made to Lake Superior, it must be made up to Chicago without any aid, and that we do not need any. And if we did, we could not get a particle by this bill. As the bill does not help us at all, I still think it will be better for our reputation not to have the amendment attached to it, for we have now too much of the feeling against us, that we get bounties when we do not. In consequence of these facts, I appeal to my colleague to withdraw the amendment, although I admit it would be a far more national road to have it so connected with other roads as to terminate at Chicago.

Mr. SHIELDS. I certainly did not offer the amendment with a view of embarrassing the bill. On the contrary, I hoped it might give it some little strength; in other words, that it would give this road a connection with other great roads that have been undertaken. But as it is the opinion of my colleague, as well as that of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the name "Illinois" may prejudice the bill, and as I have no wish to embarrass it, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BRADBURY. It would seem from the remarks of the Senators from Illinois, that this road is not an Illinois road, nor is it designed to confer any substantial benefit on that State; and the Senator from Wisconsin states that, in his opinion, it must be prejudicial to the interests of his State—in which opinion I think he is correct. I therefore move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. BADGER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. BRADBURY. I understood the question. The bill, as it would appear from the statement of Senators, is one which will benefit nobody; and I therefore hope that it will not pass.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine has moved that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. BRADBURY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator's comprehension of what I said is very imperfect, if he supposes I said that this road will benefit nobody. I said that the State of Illinois would not derive an acre of land from the adoption of the proposed amendment to the bill; and as I did not desire to create the impression that we did get benefit, without obtaining the reality, I desired that the amendment might be struck out. So far as the construction of a railroad from Chicago to Lake Superior is concerned, it will be of immense benefit not merely to my State, but to all the Eastern roads connecting with the Atlantic coast. The advantage conferred will be immense; but so far as it relates to a grant of land to Illinois, the bill will not benefit that State to the value of a cent.

Mr. WALKER. I wish not to be misunderstood. I wish it to be understood that my opinion is that this road will be most prejudicial to the interests of my constituents, and I state it here now; in order that when it shall be seen to be so, they may know that was now my opinion. This road is merely an extension of the great Northern and Eastern route, and in supporting the bill now before the Senate, I am acting on the principle of obedience to the people and Legislature of my State, because I do not desire to set my opinion up in opposition to theirs, although I am convinced that it will be a sacrifice of their interests. I therefore hope that the Senator will allow the question to be taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed.

Mr. BADGER. As I understand the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, he is decidedly of the opinion that the bill will be injurious to his State; though I learn that the people of his State entertain a different opinion. Now, I am called upon to vote upon a measure which the Senator thinks will be injurious to his State. I have the greatest regard and the highest respect for his State. I wish his State well; I wish it every good, and no evil. I have more confidence in his opinion on this measure, than in that of the Legislature; and as the question is to be determined, not by wishes, but by considerations of actual good or evil, I cannot give my vote for the bill. I therefore renew the motion made by the honorable Senator from Maine, to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish simply to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether this railroad route has ever been surveyed.

Mr. WALKER. It has; and something like ninety miles of it are now under contract.

Mr. DAWSON. Is that the whole extent?

Mr. WALKER. No, sir. Only ninety miles are under contract.

Mr. HALE. I call the Senator to order.

Mr. DAWSON. There is no disorder in that.

Mr. HALE. I call both the Senators to order.

The motion to lay the bill upon the table was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I now renew my motion to take up the special order of the day.

The PRESIDENT. The special order comes up as a matter of course.

Mr. ATCHISON. I hope that the special order will be postponed, and that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT. Two motions cannot be blended. The Senate must proceed to the consideration of one at a time.

Mr. ATCHISON. I trust that the Senate will vote down the motion for taking up the special order, and that we may proceed to act on certain Indian treaties in executive session.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator is aware that the special order comes up without motion.

Mr. MANGUM. What is the order?

The PRESIDENT. The deficiency bill.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move to postpone the further consideration of that bill?

Mr. MANGUM. I hope the Senator will not press that motion. The Indian treaties are certainly of importance, but they cannot be of so much importance as to render it a consideration of any consequence whether they are discussed to-day or next week; but the deficiency bill is of immediate importance, and should be acted on at once. I hope it will not be postponed. The public service is suffering from delay; and really, without any reference to party connections of any sort or description, as it is a question in which the whole country is interested, I trust it will be taken up at once.

Mr. ATCHISON. I am aware that the deficiency bill should have been passed a week ago. I admit the necessity of its passage, but I cannot see any end to that bill. I can assure the Senator from North Carolina, although it may not be proper to give the reasons in open session, that it is highly important that the Sioux treaty should be acted upon, and that immediately. I am urged by the Delegate from Minnesota, and by Representatives from Iowa and Wisconsin, on this subject; and I receive letters daily containing the proceedings of public meetings in relation to this matter; and I have letters, also, from the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and Indian agents, all urging action upon this treaty. It is important that the treaty should be acted upon, whether it be ratified or rejected, that the people of that section of the country may know what to depend upon.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that the motion for the postponement of the special order will not prevail. I have received numerous letters, urging immediate action on it a week ago. With reference to the argument used by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Atchison,] I would reply, that these Indian treaties may occasion debates, and no one knows how long they may continue.

The question was then taken on the motion to postpone the consideration of the special order; and, on a division, there were—yeas 13, nays 22.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The Senate then resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852—the pending question being on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance, as follows:

"For additional compensation for increasing the transportation of the United States mail between New York and Liverpool, in the Collins line of steamers, to twenty-six trips per annum, at such times as shall be directed by the Postmaster General, in conformity to his last annual report to Congress, and his letter of the 15th of November last, to the Secretary of the Navy, commencing said increased service on the 1st of January, 1852, at the rate of $23,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance, the sum of $235,500."

Mr. RUSK. I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I make a few remarks on the pending amendment, which I regard as very important. In doing so, I shall be as brief as possible.

The question does not concern merely the continuance of the Collins line of steamers, but it in reality involves the issue, whether we shall continue or abandon the system of ocean mail steamers altogether. It is very evident to me that the opposition to this amendment is not so much to the increase of service upon this line, as it is to the whole policy of ocean mail steamers.

I think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] has not brought to its consideration his accustomed fairness, but has raised against it the cry of "monopoly," "protection," and other arguments of the same class. The subject has been treated with reference solely to one of the objects which Congress had in view in adopting this policy, and has been considered merely as a means of making or of losing money.

At the time when this policy was adopted, in 1845, the British Government, as is well known, had been for some time engaged in the contract system, not merely for the purpose of conveying the mails to different countries, but at the same time—and perhaps this was the most important object in view—to provide, at a cheaper rate than it had hitherto been possible to do, a strong steam navy in case of war, as well as to extend her commerce, which has always been the chief element of her great prosperity and power. The arguments made use of at the time the law, under which this contract was made, was passed, were the necessity for providing means to carry the mails, facilitate intercourse with Europe, extend our commerce with other nations, and also to provide a cheap and reliable arm of defense on the ocean in case of war; and, it seems to me, that unless these propositions are met, and it be shown that this line has failed to effect the objects proposed, the argument in opposition to it becomes a failure.

One charge, and perhaps the most grave one, in the mouths of the opponents of a republican form of government is, that it is unstable, subject to sudden changes, and incapable—dependent as it is upon the popular will—of pursuing any steady system of national policy. Are we now to make good this charge? This system has been adopted after mature deliberation, and is intended to accomplish great national objects, and has been in operation but a little over two years. Scarcely any policy, in so short a time, ever gave promise of such great results; and with an overflowing Treasury, we are asked suddenly to abandon it, without giving it anything like a fair trial. Such a course, I think, would be unwise. There is no monopoly in this matter; and to set at rest that objection, I will read a section or two of the law under which this contract was made:

"That the Postmaster General of the United States be, and he is hereby authorized, under the instructions and provisions of the existing laws, to contract for the transportation of the United States mail between any of the ports of the United States and a port or ports of any foreign Power, whenever, in his opinion, the public interests will thereby be promoted; and it shall be his duty to report to the next ensuing Congress a copy of each of said contracts, with a statement of the amount of postage derived under the same, as far as the returns of the Department will enable him to do. And such contracts may be made, if it shall appear to the Postmaster General to be required by the public interest, for any greater period than four years, and not exceeding ten years.

"And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General shall, in all cases of offers to contract for carrying the mail between any of the ports of the United States and any foreign port or place, give the preference to such bidder for the contract as shall propose to carry the mail in a steam ship or ships, and the said contractor stipulating to deliver said ship or ships to the United States, or to their proper officer, upon demand made, for the purpose of being converted into a vessel or vessels of war; the United States being bound, on their part, to pay to said owner or owners the fair, full value of every such ship or vessel, at the time of such delivery; said value to be ascertained by four appraisers to be appointed, two by the President of the United States, and two by the owner or owners; and in case of disagreement among said appraisers, the President of the United States to select and appoint an umpire, who shall fix the value."

That law exhibits no partiality for any particular company. There is nothing like a monopoly established. The law leaves the contract open to capital and enterprise, wherever found, instead of being confined to any particular section or place. As the Senator will recollect, (for I believe he was a member of the other House at the time,) a good many other reasons were urged and deemed to be conclusive, in favor of the adoption of the policy in question by the Government of the United States. Some ten years previous to that time, the British Government had established several lines of mail steamers, under what is called the contract system. They had contracted with a company to carry the mail between Liverpool and Boston, at a high rate of compensation. The result of the operation of that system was to take all the mail matter from sailing vessels; to take all the traveling and a considerable portion of the freight of light and valuable articles of merchandise; and from calculations made at the time this law was under discussion, it appeared that the "Cunard line," as it is called, not only paid back to the Treasury the amount received on the contract, but also the additional sum of $5,286,800, in the shape of net revenue to the Government, within six years after its establishment.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator be good enough to mention his authority for that statement? I have frequently heard it made before.

Mr. RUSK. It is contained in the speech of Mr. King, a member of the House of Representatives some years ago, founded upon statements obtained by him from the postmaster at Boston.

Mr. HUNTER. I suspect that is a mistake. I called at the Post Office Department this morning, and could find nothing of this kind. They have no data to show the amount received by the British Government.

Mr. RUSK. I do not apprehend that there was any mistake. That was the amount derivable from the single item of postage alone; and if the Senator will reflect for a moment on the number of letters which passed between this country and England in the Cunard steamers, and the enormous sum charged on them for postage, he will, I think, perceive that there could be very little, if any, mistake in the amount stated. Mr. King investigated this subject very fully, and obtained all the information in his power relative to the number of letters received and dispatched by those vessels. That statement went into a report then, has since appeared in another report, has met with no contradiction from any quarter, so far as I know, and I think it is to be relied on.

There was another matter that entered into the discussion on this subject, and that was, that the Cunard line had the monopoly of all the travel, and of a large portion of the carrying trade between this country and Great Britain. On that subject there is no mistake. We had no steam marine; we had nothing then that could be compared with the Cunard ships in accommodation for travelers; and the result was, that every individual who desired to go from this country to Europe, by steam, paid for his passage in the Cunard line; and all who had freight to pass between the two countries, which required rapid dispatch, paid for it at the prices of that line. By these means we were furnishing an active capital, transporting it from our own citizens to the pockets of British subjects, and, at the same time, encouraging the latter in the establishment of a strong steam marine. But this was not all. The British Government had, at that time, and had had for several years, a contract with another company, called the "West India and Gulf of Mexico Company," to which they were then paying, and have continued to pay annually since, $1,200,000 per annum, or within $200,000 of the entire amount that we pay for all the lines that we have at this time. The ships of this line, built suitable for war purposes, strong and substantial, the best ships in the contract service, were visiting our ports constantly. That line was to consist of twenty ships. They visited Mobile, then Orleans; and, in fact, we were dependent upon them for our intercourse with the neighboring country of Mexico. They were visiting our coasts constantly; and who does not know that every British officer and seaman, wherever he stops, is on the look-out for all the information which may be made available to his country in time of war? What was our condition, then? Sailing vessels were beginning to be superseded by steam; and whether the steam-ships referred to would have answered for war purposes or not, one thing is very certain, their celerity of motion would have enabled them to keep out of danger; and in case of any rupture between Great Britain and this country—and our defenseless condition would have been the strongest inducement to such a rupture, if she had had any national object to accomplish—what would have been the condition of our Southern coast? Every city there would have been liable to be burnt at the shortest notice. This state of affairs required that we should put ourselves in a condition for defense; and, in order to effect this, we had to do one of two things: we were obliged to strengthen our steam marine, by adopting the ocean mail-contract system; or by adding, at an immense cost, to our steam-navy proper, a large additional number of steam-ships. The experience of Great Britain on the subject, had shown that the contract system was better than the construction of ships for the navy proper; that it was less expensive, and that, at the same time, it produced equally as good, or perhaps better, vessels, and furnished them with a large number of engineers, who could be employed in managing vessels of that description in time of war.

Under these circumstances this contract was made. Who at that time supposed, when the British had had ten years the start of us, that we should be able, within two years after this man Collins and his associates made the contract, even to compete with the British line, with its immense capital, its immense Government pay, and ten years experience! Who ever imagined it! No man was found daring enough to hazard such an opinion. The man would have been considered as visionary then who would have said, that in two years "you would bear off the palm from your adversary who has always boasted of being the mistress of the seas, and that even she would admit your victory, so soon after you put this machinery in operation." I say, such a man would have been considered more wild and visionary than I can be in hazarding the declaration now, that twenty years will not have passed before steam will have in a great measure superseded sails as the great motive power on the ocean. Under these circumstances these men entered into the contract for the purpose of establishing this line.

I know it is said that they have not complied with their contract, and, therefore, we should abandon it. I know it is said that they have not built vessels suitable for war purposes, and, therefore, the enterprise should be abandoned. I know it has been said that it is not an economical measure; that we shall lose money out of the Treasury if we continue the system, and that therefore it had better be abandoned.

As economy is the order of the day, suppose we take up, in the first place, the financial portion of the system. The Collins line has received, in two years, $770,000. It has returned to the Government, in postages on letters, up to the 1st of March, 1852, $373,337 80. I know that in some speeches made upon this subject—I believe in one made by the Senator from Virginia—the latter amount is reduced to something like $313,000, by taking away three twenty-fourths of the sum, which, under the postal treaty goes to Great Britain. I know the gentleman did not intend to argue unfairly. By the postal treaty, we are entitled to five twenty-fourths of the postages received by the Cunard line, which more than offsets the amount paid to Great Britain by the Collins line out of the $373,000.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator from Texas did not understand me: $373,000 was the entire amount of the sum of ocean postage received for letters transported by the Collins line. Out of that, I say, the Collins line can only be fairly credited with two thirds—that is, sixteen cents on each letter. Five cents on each letter go to the United States for inland postage. The Collins line does not earn that; that is necessary for inland transportation. Three cents on each letter go to England for inland postage. The Collins line does not earn that. All that it earns is sixteen cents on each letter—that is, two thirds of the whole amount, which is all that should be credited to them.

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir; and with that very statement we have, under the postal treaty, received from the Cunard line an amount which more than counterbalances the sum paid to Great Britain, for which no credit has been allowed to the Collins line.

Mr. HUNTER. We would not transport these letters through this country for nothing. We must be paid for it.

Mr. RUSK. And how are the letters or the pay for them received except by the Collins line? and but for its existence we should not receive, as we now do, a part of the earnings of the Cunard line. So that, so far as that matter is concerned, the calculation which the honorable Senator made falls, and the Collins line is entitled to a credit of more than $373,000 on their letters. It is a matter of small moment, however.

The Government dispatches have been estimated for one year at $3,200; and now there have been two years since this line was set in operation. I feel confident that the estimate is about as correct as the estimate for the franking of documents—that it is about one half of what it should be, for it is a mere estimate. No account has been kept of it, although it was furnished from one of the Departments, and is for one year; and the ships have now been running two years. Then, the closed mails have amounted to the sum of $39,151 58; newspaper postage to $46,858 88; leaving a balance against the United States Government of the enormous amount of $256,459! which is the balance left from this ruinous expenditure, in return for which we have four of the finest ships that float on the ocean, and the reputation of having surpassed the English in two years upon their favorite element. But there are other considerations of high moment and importance, to which I shall allude hereafter.

In 1850, the first year this line was in operation, the postages amounted to $169,907. In 1851 it amounted to $343,641; showing an increase in the second year of their running, over the first, of $183,734. Remember that this increase took place in the face of the fiercest opposition that could possibly be waged against any enterprise, and in the face of ruinous disadvantages. In the first place, the Collins line made but one trip to the Cunard line's two; and does not everybody know that it is a matter of importance to commercial men to transmit their communications with celerity and promptitude? Hence the delay took letters from the Collins and gave them to the Cunard line. But that was not all. Every effort was made to break them down in every way. It was said that their ships were unsafe. Every man knows that Englishmen, from the highest to the lowest, will stand to the last by their own country, and its industry and productions. I hope the time will soon come when America will stand as fast by theirs. Every effort, then, was made to break down the Collins line. Freight, which was £8 per ton in the Cunard line, came down, when they went into operation, to £4 per ton. More than that: I have seen, by the advertisements, that when a Cunard ship was to sail from Liverpool, and there was no ship of the Collins line there, freight would run up to £7, and when one of the Collins line was there it would run down to £4, and even lower. In many instances freight was transferred from Havre to Liverpool, free of charge, for the purpose of getting it in the Cunard line.

Collins and his associates, then, have contended against this opposition; and when they have accomplished vastly more than was promised by the law when it was passed, they are fiercely encountered in the Senate of the United States, with those words so potent, "economy" and "monopoly."

Sir, I know but little of Mr. Collins; but I understand that this is not a monopoly with him; that any gentleman can purchase stock in the enterprise who chooses to do it; and that it has been a losing business with him. I understand further, from official authority, that he has produced four of the finest ships that float on the ocean. I know besides—and I know it from English testimony—that he has succeeded in distancing English ships upon the ocean, and in producing better vessels, which have greater speed and more safety, which, to my mind, is a consideration of great importance. I know these to be facts; and for them, he is charged with being a monopolist. He would be very differently treated if he were an Englishman, and had accomplished such a victory over any other rival Power, as that which America, through his means, talent, and capital, has accomplished over the Power that has claimed, for ages past, to be the mistress of the seas. There would have been no man in England who would have charged him that he lived in a particular section; that he had fine mirrors in his ships; that he was an aristocrat; that he was a monopolist. There would have been no man in Parliament who would have charged him with any of these things. No, sir; but there would have been men there to have heaped honor and distinction upon him, for having, at an immense cost to himself, as I will show, maintained the honor and reputation of his nation against the rivalry of a strong company, supported by a foreign Government.

But, say gentlemen, it is a monopoly. Well, sir, if I were going into monopolies, this would be just such a one as I would like to keep out of. All had a chance to go into it. All had a right to come forward, and endeavor to obtain the contract, and risk their capital in it. But it seems that none availed themselves of it but Mr. Collins and his associates. The ships of the Collins line have made twenty-one voyages between New York and Liverpool, at an average expense of $65,215 44 a trip. The whole expense of running the ships amounts to $1,369,528; and the whole cost of the ships to $2,944,142. The entire amount of money which has been expended is $4,313,671. They have received per voyage $48,286; or in all, for passage-money, freight, and mail pay, $1,014,023 85; so that they are left upwards of $2,000,000 minus in their operations. This is a sort of monopoly which it seems to me they need not be very thankful to Congress for having conferred upon them.

It has been said that they have not complied with their contract, and have not produced ships that will answer for war purposes. I desire, from official documents, to prove the contrary. I read, in the first place, from what Commodore Perry said in 1850, before the vessels commenced operation:

"The delay in the completion of the vessels that have actually been commenced under the contract with E. K. Collins and associates, and A. G. Sloop, may be chiefly ascribed to the overpress of work at the steam engine manufacturing in the city of New York—the demand for steam machinery having been greatly increased by circumstances growing out of the accession of territory to the United States; and probably the manufacturers, unaccustomed to the construction of engines of such magnitude—some of them almost unprecedented as marine engines (in extent of power) in any part of the world—may have miscalculated the time that would be required to complete them. The contractors used every means of hastening the completion of the engines. Such as have been put in operation reflect high credit on those who constructed them.

"It will appear, from the reply to the first question, that most of the vessels contracted for have been somewhat larger than was probably contemplated by the contracts, and, of course, are proportionately more costly; but they have not been rendered thereby less effective for the transportation of the mails, or for war purposes. The cost of the hulls of these vessels may be estimated as coming within fifty-five to seventy dollars per ton, according to the value of the materials and manner of construction."—Commodore Perry and Cunningham, 12 June, 1850, p. 12.

Captain William Skiddy, January 21, 1849, says:

"Mr. E. K. Collins's specification and agreement with the Government call for much less than has been executed, such as iron diagonal framing only one way; whereas they are double, crossing each other at right angles, and well bolted to timbers, and riveted together; also the filling in amidships has been extended the whole length of the ship, with many other additions.

"The dimensions of these ships are: length of keel, 274 feet; on deck, 280 feet; extreme beam, 45 feet; depth, 31 feet; between decks, 8 feet; middle deck, 7 feet 9 inches; orlop, 7 feet; and the custom-house tonnage about 2,700. They are well built and thoroughly fastened. It is to be regretted that live oak could not be procured for their entire frames, as they are mostly bolted with copper throughout.

"The engines constructed by Messrs. Stillman, Allen, & Co., and J. P. Alaire & Co., are, for each ship, two engines of 95 inches cylinder, with 9 feet stroke, equal to 800 horse nominal power.

"These ships have great buoyancy, flat, broad floors extending well forward and aft, with sharp ends, and are considered beautiful models.

"They have spacious deck-room, and could carry guns of the largest calibre on the gun or middle deck. They are now preparing to launch.

"These ships can all, in case of emergency, be converted into fast war steamers. They would by law be received by appraisement on their original cost, and their efficiency as to strength and materials.

"The necessary alterations included, would cost the Government much less—perhaps one half the amount required to build or purchase for the occasion.

"In case of war, there would be no time to build; and these are the only ships of sufficient strength and size in the United States that could be converted into war steamers, with two or three exceptions."

Commodore Perry, January 30, 1849, again says:

"The contract of Mr. E. K. Collins and associates is in progress of completion. Two ships, the 'Atlantic' and 'Pacific,' are nearly or quite ready for launching, and their engines and boilers are sufficiently advanced for commencing the work of putting them on board. Great pains have been taken to make the engines of these vessels, as well as those of the 'Georgia' and 'Ohio,' worthy the high reputation of the respective establishments at which they are being constructed.

"As the contract with Mr. Collins does not refer to any particular vessel as a guide for the model or manner of construction of his ships, he has availed himself of the best materials at command, and of his well-known judgment and experience in ship building, in producing two very superior sea-steamers. The deviations from the provisions of his agreement are, in some respects, that his vessels are, according to the statement of Captain Skiddy, better fastened than was contracted for, and instead of engines of direct action, he also has preferred the side-lever engine. These will be, of nominal power, about nine hundred horses, but of sufficient capacity to work conveniently at a higher rate.

"The several contracts provide that all these steamers shall be so constructed as to be easily converted into war vessels, should the Government exercise its right of taking them into the public service, under certain stipulations. So far as respects their suitability for convertibility, it may be remarked, that in view of the service which they are expected to perform to their present owners, in the transportation of the mails, with passengers and freight, they will be fitted with numerous cabins below and above deck. These, or most of them, would be necessarily removed for the reception of an armament and the requisite crew of a vessel of war, and it would also be necessary to arrange magazines, shell-rooms, shot-lockers, and other secure lock-up places in the hold, for which there would be ample space.

"Steamers are more easily armed than sail vessels, inasmuch as they have greater space on deck for heavy pivot guns, which are decidedly preferable for vessels of this description, possessing, as they do, greater facilities of motion, and consequent choice of position. Very little time would be required in arming and equipping them for war service, as nothing more would be wanting than the removal of their light deck and cabins and the arrangements for the armament, munitions, and stores, with some necessary strengthening of the gun-deck.

"On the whole, therefore, I feel myself free to observe, that as a first experiment, the three contracts above referred to promise to result to the United States, and to the contractors, as favorably as could have been expected under all the circumstances. The undertaking is one of vast magnitude for individual enterprise, and of momentous character to the commercial interests of the country—an undertaking alike creditable to the liberal views of the Government, and the public spirit of the contractors; and though it may not be possible to accomplish, according to the very letter, all the stipulations originally contracted for, yet enough will be done to reflect honor and credit upon both contracting parties.

"If the vessels are not constructed with as much care and expense as those at our navy-yards, it has been in some measure because the best materials could not be obtained; and whether they are as substantially built or not, they are only to be taken into the public service at an appraised valuation.

"They will have the merit of possessing the great essentials of capacity, buoyancy and fleetness, and capability of carrying effective armaments; and if taken for their estimated worth at the time of transfer, the Government will be the gainer at a period of emergent want for such vessels."

NEW YORK, April 5, 1850.

STR: In obedience to your instructions of the 29th ultimo, we have inspected the new steamship "Atlantic," recently built under the contract with Mr. E. K. Collins and his associates, authorized by the act of Congress of 3d March, 1847, for the mail service therein contemplated, and have the honor to report that, in our opinion, she has been built in conformity with the requirements of the act of Congress above referred to. Although not in accordance with every particular stipulation of the contract, as has already been made known to the Department by the superintendent in charge, she is constructed of suitable dimensions, build, and finish, to conform with the contract for carrying the mails on her destined route; and, with the preparations and additions of suitable war appointments, she could be easily converted into a war steamer of the first class.

The "Atlantic" is now ready to receive the officers of the Navy provided for by the third section of the act above indicated.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,
M. C. PERRY.

The Hon. WM. BALLARD PRESTON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

NEW YORK, October 8, 1850.

STR: In obedience to your instructions of the 23d ultimo, we have inspected the new steamship "Arctic," recently built under the contract with E. K. Collins and his associates, authorized by the act of Congress of 3d March, 1847, for the mail service therein contemplated, and have the honor to report that, in our opinion, she has been built in conformity with the requirements of the act of Congress above referred to.

Although not in accordance with every particular stipulation of the contract, as has already been made known to the Department by the superintendent in charge, she is constructed of suitable dimensions, build, and finish, to conform with the contract for carrying the mails on her destined route, and with the preparations and additions of suitable war appointments, she could be easily converted into a war steamer of the first class.

The "Arctic" is now ready to receive on board the officers of the Navy provided for by the third section of the act above indicated.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,
M. C. PERRY.

The Hon. W. A. GRAHAM, CHAS. H. BELL,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

I concur in this report, as to her being a mail steamer of the first class.
JOHN LENTHALL.

NEW YORK, November 2, 1850.

STR: In obedience to your instructions of the 30th ultimo, we have inspected the new steamship "Baltic," recently built under the contract with Mr. E. K. Collins and his associates, authorized by the act of Congress of the 3d March, 1847, for the mail service therein contemplated, and have the honor to report that, in our opinion, she has been built in conformity with the requirements of the act of Congress above referred to.

Although not in accordance with every particular stipulation of the contract, as has already been made known to the Department by the superintendent in charge, she is constructed of suitable dimensions, build, and finish, to conform with the contract for carrying the mails on her destined route, and with the preparations and additions of suitable war appointments, she could be easily converted into a war steamer of the first class.

The "Baltic" is now ready to receive on board the officers of the Navy provided for by the third section of the act above indicated.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,
M. C. PERRY.

The Hon. WM. A. GRAHAM, CHAS. H. BELL,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

I concur in this report, as to her being a mail steamer of the first class.
JOHN LENTHALL.

Commodore Perry says, April 9, 1850:

"The mail steamers of the contracts of Howland & Aspinwall, of George Law, and of E. K. Collins, can be easily converted into war steamers for temporary service, in cases of particular emergency. These vessels, with little strengthening of the decks, can be made to carry each a few guns of heavy calibre, and may be rendered useful in convoy, in the transportation of troops, carrying dispatches, conveying public functionaries, &c., &c., but their service could only be contingent, and, as before remarked, temporary."

February 18, 1852, he says:

"According to my calculation, the cost of the conversion of either of the before-mentioned vessels, exclusive of armaments, repair of machinery, and ordinary repair, would not, or certainly ought not, exceed, for steamers of the first class, $30,000, and for those of the second class, $15,000; and it could be readily done for this at any of our navy-yards, provided that useless alterations were not made.

"It should be taken into view that those mail steamers, if called into service as war vessels, would be considered as forming an auxiliary force to the regularly-constructed ships, and hence the impolicy of expending much money on them. The requisites of sound hulls and powerful engines, with efficient armaments, should alone be considered, leaving superfluous ornament out of the question.

"The armaments of the respective vessels would, of course, be a separate cost; and to arrange the guns on the upper deck, it would only be required to close up three or four of the hatches or sky-lights; to strengthen the deck by additional beams and stanchions; to cut ports, and construct the pivot and other carriages; probably it might be desirable to shift the capstan and cables.

"With respect to the description and weight of the respective armaments, I am clearly of opinion that the first-class steamers already named could easily carry each four 10-inch Paixhans guns on pivots, two forward and two aft, of the weight of those in the Mississippi; ten 8-inch Paixhans, as side guns, ditto.

"The second-class steamers could with equal ease carry each two eight-inch Paixhans on pivots, one forward and one aft, and six 6-inch ditto, as side guns.

"With the additional strengthening recommended, I am perfectly satisfied that the armaments suggested would not, in the least, incommode the vessels. Indeed, the weight of armament would be actually less than that which would be taken away by the removal of the upper decks and cabins; and the miscellaneous articles usually stowed on one or the other of two decks—such, for instance, as ice, of which not less than forty tons is generally packed in one mass; nor would the munitions and provisions required for the war vessel be of greater weight than the goods now carried as freight, saying nothing of the provisions and stores carried by the steamers for an average of one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty souls, including crew and passengers."

Captain Kiddy says, February 18, 1852:

"STR: I herewith acknowledge your communication of the 10th instant, to Commodore M. C. Perry and myself, relative to United States mail steamers built under contracts with the Navy Department, and others carrying the United States mails.

"In reply, I will commence with the first-class ships, which are the 'Atlantic,' 'Pacific,' 'Baltic,' and 'Arctic,' of Collins's Liverpool line; the 'Franklin' and 'Humboldt' of Mortimer Livingston's Havre line.

"These ships, although equal in strength, probably, to any steam-ships afloat, are not suitable for immediate war purposes, but can be made efficient in four or six weeks capable of carrying the armament or battery of a first-class frigate—say four 10-inch guns and twelve 8-inch guns. These alterations would consist of the removal of the deck-houses, spar or upper deck, forward and abaft the paddle-wheel boxes, fitting the after and forward bulwarks in sections, cutting port-holes, fitting hammock cloths or nettings, putting in extra beams and knees and stanchions, moving the windlass below, building magazines, shell-rooms, officers' rooms, &c., &c. The cost of all these alterations and fixtures would not exceed ($15,000 or $20,000) $30,000 each ship. These ships would then be relieved of about one hundred and fifty tons' weight, or nearly double the weight of guns and carriages, with less resistance to water and wind, adding an increase to their already great speed."

House document 91, page 2, Mr. Graham, Secretary of the Navy, March 8th, 1852, says:

"The contractors of the Liverpool line engaged to build five steamships, of not less than 2,000 tons measurement each, for the transportation of the mail between New York and Liverpool, and each with steam machinery of one thousand horse-power, or thirty-three cubic feet of cylinder to every one hundred tons register, each ship to be of sufficient strength for war purposes, and to be so constructed that she may be converted, at the least possible cost, into a war-steamer of the first class; the materials, dimensions, and full specifications of the hull of said ships, and their steam machinery, being contained in two schedules, which belong to and form part of the contract; the first of the steamships to be ready for service in eighteen months from November 1st, 1847, and three others as soon thereafter as each may be required, and the fifth to be commenced and built as early as may be practicable thereafter. The service stipulated under the contract is as follows: 'And said Collins and his associates further agree, that they will carry said mails, as aforesaid, in said steam-ships, twice each month, (that is to say, twice from New York and twice from Liverpool,) during eight months of the year, and once a month, (that is to say, once from New York and once from Liverpool,) during four months of the year; and for the service, as stipulated, they are to be paid 'the just and full sum of $385,000 per annum; the contract to continue in full force and virtue for the term of ten years from the commencement of service, the contractors agreeing and binding themselves to sell, convey, and deliver said steamships to the Navy Department, whenever they may be required for public purposes; that the said Department shall at any time have the right to take them for the exclusive use of the United States, and the proper value of the said ships, when so taken or sold as aforesaid, to be ascertained by appraisers, two of them to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, and two by said Collins and his associates, which four, in the event of disagreement, shall elect a fifth, and the valuation to be then fixed by a majority of the appraisers, and to be paid by the Government for the vessels so taken. By the seventh section of the act approved March 3d, 1849, the Secretary of the Navy was authorized so to modify the contract with E. K. Collins and his associates, as to postpone the commencement of the mail service stipulated to be performed, until as late as the 1st day of June, 1850, which was accordingly done.

"This line has had a powerful competitor in the Cunard line of mail steam-ships, under liberal patronage from the British Government; but has thus far been victorious in the speed of its passages across the Atlantic, having, in several instances, performed them in less than ten days."

"While the discussions of these officers justify the conclusion that vessels of this description cannot be relied on to supersede those modeled and built only for purposes of war, it is respectfully suggested that a limited number of the former, employed in time of peace in the transportation of the mail, would be found a most useful resource of the Government on the breaking out of war. If conforming to the standard required by these contracts, their readiness to be used at the shortest notice, their capacity as transports for troops and munitions of war, and their unequalled celerity of motion, which would enable them to overhaul merchantmen, and at the same time escape cruisers, would render them terrible as privateers or guerrillas of the ocean, if fitted with such armaments as could be readily put on board, even in their present condition."

These statements come from officers who are not at all prejudiced in favor of the system of contract steamers, and whose regard for the truth cannot be questioned.

I desire now to call the attention of the Senate to some extracts which will show what the British Government thinks on this subject. Captain William H. Hall, of the British Navy, in the course of his examination before the special committee of the House of Commons, says:

"I some time ago sent to the Admiralty a plan for making the whole of the merchant steamers available in case of need; and if there were an act of Parliament that these ships should be strengthened forward and aft to carry guns, it might be then done with a very trifling expense; that would give this country more power than any other country in the world. We have nearly one thousand steam vessels, half of which, at least, might be made available in case Government required their services. Our merchant steamers are some of the finest in the world, and five hundred of them might be turned to account. They should all be numbered and classed, so that Government would merely have to ask for the number of vessels they wanted, when they might go to Woolwich, or other places, and put the guns on board, and then they would be ready for service."

Here is the opinion of a Captain in the British Navy with reference to the availability of steam-vessels for national defense; and what a lesson does it teach us in America, where steam navigation is found penetrating every portion of the Union, and spreading itself on our maritime and lake frontier in every direction! Here is found no expression of apprehension lest the mercantile steamers might interfere with the growth or efficiency of the navy to which the witness belonged. This opinion, moreover, is expressed in a country where, according to the testimony before the committee already named, there were, in 1848, 174 war steamers, with an aggregate horse-power of 44,480 horses; and where Mr. Alexander Gordon states, in a letter addressed to the same committee, the steam navy had then cost the country £6,000,000 sterling, or $30,000,000, "exclusive of all reinstatement and expenses during commission;" the same gentleman also alleging that the annual repairs amounted to..... £108,000
Annual cost for coals..... 110,000
Depreciation at a moderate allowance..... 600,000

Making the total amount of annual cost..... £818,000
Or..... $4,094,000

The regular employment of the best engineers on board of contract vessels, and the great experience they would acquire from being constantly on active duty, would furnish to the naval service, in the event of a war, a corps that would be invaluable. In speaking of the superiority of the engineers on board of contract vessels in the employ of the British Government over those on board of the Queen's ships, a witness before the select committee of the House of Commons says:

"Last year there was a universal complaint of the inferiority of the engineers and all persons connected with steam employed in her Majesty's service. It was explained, and very easily explained, by the superior advantages in the merchant service, and particularly the high wages paid. In all contract steam-packets, they have men on board the vessels who are competent to superintend any alterations or repairs in the machinery which may be required."

Mr. HUNTER. What was the date of that examination?

Mr. RUSK. It was in 1847. Since that time a number of additional contracts have been made by the British Government.

There is one thing here to be remarked in relation to this agent—steam. I know that it is said that it cannot be applied to war purposes; and the opinion of officers of the Navy, who are prejudiced against it, have been cited in support of this opinion. But with the steam power which the British Government possesses at this moment, if it became her policy to do so, I hazard but little in saying that she could sweep the commerce of any nation from the ocean—not even excepting her great rival, the United States. In 1847 she could bring nearly a thousand steamers into service, and twenty-seven of them she had upon our coast, all suitable for war purposes. All the steamers which are built and put afloat upon the ocean by the British, are so built, under their laws, that they can be used for war purposes. This is not the case with us. We have not twenty steamers belonging to the Navy proper, that we can use for war purposes. Without the steamers which we have under the contract system, we have not twenty that can be so used; and, including the contracts, we have but about forty that can be applied to war purposes. Our ordinary steamers cannot be so applied; and why? It is because of that sort of economy which neglects, in time of peace, to prepare for emergencies that may hereafter happen. The British Government permits no vessel to be propelled by steam that is not inspected, and required to be of a certain amount of tonnage, and of sufficient strength. We, on the contrary, go in for cheapness, and for the saving of money. The experience of the two countries has displayed itself fearfully upon that subject. We may, perhaps, have made money; but we have sacrificed human life to an awful extent.

Then, sir, under these circumstances, considering the disproportion which exists between our steam marine and that of England, what are we to do? Must we abandon this enterprise? When the victory is in our hands are we to throw it away, and say that it is too costly to keep it? and that, too, at a time when any reasonable man, who will examine the case, must see that these lines, so far from being a charge on the Treasury, will not be ten years old before they will bring a large revenue to the Government. Are we, then, to put ourselves in a position to invite foreign Governments to be our rivals? for it must be remembered that the British Government is not the only one that is making use of this mighty power of steam. Are we, under the cry of economy, which is so potent just before a presidential election, to abandon everything which looks toward putting ourselves in a position to defend our rights upon the ocean? Are we now, for temporary purposes, to abandon a system, which, in my opinion, will, in a very few years, not only extend our commerce, but which, without additional expense, will furnish us on the ocean, as we have on the land, with strong arms and stout hearts, ready to defend us, which are not quartered upon the Treasury of the United States.

Sir, we are extending our commercial relations. The world is extending its commercial relations. If we would build a Chinese wall around our country, we cannot stop the enterprise of our citizens. They will go to every country under the sun, and they will trade; and our commerce will be exposed on every sea. Shall we take no step to put ourselves in a condition to defend it? We are liable at any moment, in the present disturbed condition of the world, if all that we have heard here about intervention, and the outburst of slumbering revolutions in favor of the liberal principle in Europe be true—and probably there is some truth in it—to be involved in a rupture with some foreign Government. What would be the result? We would have to allow our merchants to be robbed upon the ocean, or we would have to adopt another system. If we should not adopt the contract system in time, we would have to do as England did before she adopted it, and spend thirty or forty, or perhaps an hundred millions to increase our Navy proper.

Much has been accomplished by this line. Its proprietors have fully complied with their contract. It is so stated by your own officers. The outlay which you have made is only $126,000 a year, and that under circumstances which show you that the next year you will be paid back a part, or the whole of it; and that in a very few years, especially if you put this line on an equality with the Cunard line, it will be a source of revenue, even if we increase the compensation to the amount asked for. Of this I have no sort of doubt. This system has, then, produced you four of the finest ships in the world. There are no finer ships afloat. It has not only done that, but it has put you in a condition which it would have taken you five years, by the operation of the Government, to attain, in order to defend yourselves in case of a maritime war. At the time Collins and his associates went into this business, there were no machine shops here; machinery for steam-ships, before that time, had to be imported from England.

There were no engineers in this country who could be trusted to carry a steam-vessel across the Atlantic. This company have, by their outlay of capital, and at a ruinous loss to themselves, created machine-shops here that can vie in their productions with England or any other country, and they have now engineers who can be more safely trusted than even those who have been educated in England for a lifetime; because they take the kind of materials out of which they can make those who are not bound down to certain rules, but who have a spirit of enterprise and experiment, and reason as well as learn by rote. This company has changed the direction of millions on millions of capital from the pockets of British subjects to American citizens. It has raised up mechanics who would be indispensable to us in case of a rupture with any foreign nation. It has created a school of engineers, which will also be important, and who will reflect high credit upon the American name.

Sir, as I said before, you cannot stop this. Steam has revolutionized the world; it is bringing men of different nations face to face; it is bringing distant nations close together, and it draws after it in its train, consequences which the most daring statesman cannot now foretell, or foresee. You must control it, or it will control you. In the hands of others, it will control you. Controlled as it is in our power to control it, it will become the element of infinite prosperity to us, but in the hands of rival nations it must become the source of national degradation and loss to us. Before the enterprise of these men; before they run this risk—and a great risk it was; before they applied their capital and ingenuity and talent to the production of this line of steamers, you were paying just whatever price a British Company chose to ask of you for the transmission of your light and valuable freights, and for the passage of every citizen of this country who chose to visit Europe. You were taking out of the pockets of American citizens and putting into those of a British Company millions upon millions of capital, while you were paying taxes and expenses to make Great Britain the strongest naval Power upon earth.

Gentlemen have cried out that if we adopt this proposition it will be protection. It is a protection to all. As you extend your commerce, every man that will work is protected by it.

Under such circumstances it would be very ridiculous, in my conception, to abandon a measure of such vast national importance. The British Government would laugh at you. It has been too much the case that they have availed themselves of American inventions heretofore. The cry of monopoly has broken down a great many useful institutions in this country; and the cry of monopoly will be and has been raised against these vessels. Steam is your own invention, and England is using it. I think the Senator from Virginia said he was in favor of free trade and an "open ocean." Sir, I could not regard the ocean as very open when a thousand British war vessels were hovering upon our coasts, and we have but forty to meet them.

This is a sort of openness of the ocean, from which, may God deliver me. It would indeed be open to England, and our ports would be open to her too. This, however, is a kind of "open ocean" and free trade, against which I solemnly protest.

A great deal has been said about sectional feelings in this matter. Now, it seems to me, that of all parts of the country, the Southern portion is more interested than any other in this system. In the Northern part of the Union there are many towns and a dense population; and there are means of transportation between different parts of the country, so that a force could soon be concentrated to defend any particular point of attack. In the South, however, it is altogether different. There there is a sparse population over a great extent of country, without the means of rapid concentration at any particular place. Thus, with the advantage of ocean mail steamers in the hands of an enemy, all the Southern coast towns could be reached and burnt before you could get a national vessel near them, or could concentrate the power and force of the country to defend the coast. It seems to me, then, that opposition to this measure on sectional grounds comes strangely from the Southern section of the country. Southern opposition seems to me strange upon another ground. It is evident that the multiplication, as far as possible, with wisdom and without extravagant cost to the Government, of the means of commerce with foreign nations will enlarge our commercial relations to a vast extent. Our commerce has been greatly increased within the last few years. Is that any damage to the South? What section of the Union is most interested in the extension of commerce? Certainly the producing portion of the country. When it is remembered that the Southern section produces two thirds of all the exports that go from the country, it is a most suicidal policy for it to oppose anything that tends to extend, as far as possible, our commercial intercourse with the balance of the world. We have nothing to fear, but everything to hope from such a source. Our prosperity is involved in it. The defense of our towns depends upon it. We must do something for our self-protection, either by expenditures of this description, or by an enormous outlay for the increase of the navy in every case of emergency. Is it not wiser to expend a few hundred thousand dollars now, even if there should not be any expectation of its being returned to the Treasury, than to have to expend millions in case of an outbreak in Europe or elsewhere? But there is no fear that every dollar that you invest in an enterprise of this description, when wisely invested and upon proper lines, will not be returned a thousand fold into the Treasury, in the shape of postages and duties upon importations, on account of increased commercial intercourse with foreign nations. Even should the cost be great, would it not be wiser to put yourselves in a situation of defense beforehand, by the encouragement of this system, than to run the risk of having to do it at an enormous expense in case of emergency?

If you abandon this system, you will not have the proper kind of mechanics or machine shops, nor proper safeguards to human life. Ships will be built on the cheap plan, and will be slaughter-houses on the seas. They may be built at one half or one third the cost of the Collins steamers, but as soon as they get into a storm upon the ocean, down they will go, and will carry thousands upon thousands to their watery graves. Unfortunately, such has been too much the case with all our operations with steam in this country. Since peace was concluded with Mexico, there have been more widows and orphans made by this agent—steam—within the jurisdiction of the United States, than were made during the war with that country. It was done because we have not acted wisely upon this subject. We have the right to control this matter, but we have left it to unrestricted private enterprise, and we have seen what the consequences have been. We have been economical with money, but we have displayed more recklessness with regard to human life than any other civilized country on the globe.

Our people will travel upon the seas—we have the power, and it becomes our duty to provide for the safety of human life.

This system has been in operation for more than two years. We have twenty-four noble ships in the service, capable of adding much to our general prosperity in peace, and dealing heavy blows to an enemy in war. To these ships, so far, no accident has occurred involving the loss of life. Although there have been two or three instances in which the most thrilling anxiety has been felt for persons on board, yet, in the end, they have been restored to their anxious families, after having passed in safety through the perils of the ocean.

We have many steamers upon the economical "open sea" plan; in what manner have they succeeded in this respect?

Sir, the bitter tears of widows and orphans can answer this question more feelingly and more eloquently than I can.

There is, to my mind, a vast advantage in extending this system. It brings your citizens into immediate intercourse with all the nations of the earth; and, as they unite with those nations, as they mingle with them, they will bring back for the improvement of their own country whatever they may find worthy of imitation; while whatever they may see worthy of their condemnation will but make them the more strongly attached to that liberty and those institutions which they so happily enjoy.

By assuming the place that Providence seems to have designed for our common country, we should effect, not by war, not by interference with foreign nations, but by extending a commerce which shall be profitable to our own citizens, and furnish them with employment, and by using steam, which is your own invention, do more towards enlightening and christianizing the world, if we are true to ourselves, in the administration of the powerful resources which Providence has thrown into our hands, than the boldest statesman would dare now to prophesy. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that we cannot abandon this system. I must hear some better reason than I have yet heard, to induce me to do so. I feel certain that it will remunerate the Treasury, if you will give it a fair opportunity. While the British Government is paying the Cunard line $696,000 a year—and I am informed that that amount has lately been increased nearly $500,000 more; and while it is paying $1,200,000 more to lines to visit the waters in our immediate neighborhood, within $200,000 of all that you pay for ocean mail steamer service, has the Senate of the United States become so economical, so fearful of increasing monopoly, that it will refuse to make an appropriation of less than one fourth of that amount, without which these noble ships must be drawn off their station, and the supremacy of the seas acknowledged still to rest in England?

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, if no one wishes to say more on the same side of the question on which the Senator from Texas has spoken, I should like to close the debate. My views have been a good deal assailed, and I feel bound, in justice to myself, to say something in reply to the various gentlemen who have spoken on the question. If, however, there be any gentleman who desires to speak in favor of the amendment, I shall decline speaking now, and wait until he has done. I would prefer to say what I have to say now; I would like to close debate immediately, as I seem to be almost alone in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. President, I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Virginia that my colleague [Mr. JAMES] was desirous of delivering his views upon the subject, and obtained the floor for that purpose during the last week, but was called away. He will probably be here by tomorrow. The day is now pretty well spent; I think there is hardly time enough for the honorable Senator from Virginia to close his remarks to-day; I think that it would therefore be proper to postpone the further consideration of this subject until to-morrow, and we could meet the views of the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ARCHISON,] by going into Executive session for the remainder of the day. If my colleague does not return by to-morrow morning to deliver his views to the Senate, the Senator from Virginia can take the floor and proceed with his remarks.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I do not understand exactly the position which my friend from Virginia occupies on this subject. He says he would be glad to close the debate. Now, if he had reported this amendment from the Committee on Finance, and had supported it, I could understand him. But this is an amendment reported from a committee of which he is a member, and he opposes that amendment. Yet he says he wishes to close the debate upon it, after those who are in favor of it shall have said what they wish to say. I had supposed that the parliamentary usage or courtesy referred to would enable the member of a committee who reported an amendment or a bill, to close the debate upon that amendment or bill, and in support of it. I do not exactly understand how it is that the Senator from Virginia, being opposed to the amendment, claims the privilege of closing debate upon it.

Mr. HUNTER. Of course, I claim no right or privilege upon the subject. Almost all of the speaking on the amendment has been on one side of the question. I am very willing to go on now, if it is desired by the Senate.

Several SENATORS suggested that it would be desirable to have an Executive session.

Mr. HUNTER. As it is evidently the desire of the Senate to have an Executive session, I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow, at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

On the motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 3, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

LIEUTENANT CHARLES G. HUNTER.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. POLK,] last Monday, to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the Senate bill for the relief of Charles G. Hunter.

Mr. STUART. I wish to appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee to allow me to submit a motion that the House proceed to take up and dispose of all the business on the Speaker's table. It certainly ought to be done. The business of the country is suffering from neglect.

Mr. POLK. I would like very much to accommodate the gentleman from Michigan, but really this bill is one which requires immediate action. The object of the bill is to do justice to a gallant naval officer.

A MEMBER. It is not in order to discuss it now.

Mr. POLK. I know it is not in order to discuss it now; but I hope the House will take up the bill now and dispose of it. It is a meritorious bill. There is nothing complicated about it. It can be understood merely from its reading. It was reported unanimously by the committee in the Senate, to which it was referred, and passed the Senate unanimously. It is for the relief of as gallant a man as there is in the world.

The question was then put; and two thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended.

The bill was then taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

The bill, which was then read through by the Clerk, authorizes the accounting officers to allow the said Hunter, in adjusting his accounts, the sum of $7,949 88, being the amount of losses sustained by him while commander and acting purser of the Scourge and schooner Taney.

The question now being, "Shall the bill pass?"—

Mr. POLK demanded the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Has the bill ever been referred to a committee in the House?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill, and it has not been referred.

Mr. STANTON. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. I want the bill to be examined by a committee before I vote for it.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. CARTTER. It is a Senate bill, and has been thoroughly investigated there.

Mr. STANTON. I will withdraw the motion to refer.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there a report from the committee in the Senate? If there is, I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. There was no report accompanying the bill sent here from the Senate. The Chair is not informed whether there was a report made to that body or not.

Mr. POLK. The matter was thoroughly investigated in the Senate, and there was no difference of opinion in relation to the merit of the claim.

Mr. DANIEL. I should not like to vote on it in the dark.

Mr. FOWLER. I should like, before I vote for this claim; to know something with regard to it. I hope the gentleman [Mr. POLK] who brings the bill forward, will make a statement of the case, so that we may know upon what it is we are called on to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that debate is not in order during the pendency of the demand for the previous question.

Mr. FOWLER. I am aware that it is not; but I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question until he has made his statement in relation to it.

Mr. POLK. When the previous question is adopted I will explain it.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to know what the merits of the case are, before I vote upon it.

Mr. DANIEL. It is said now to be all fair, but when we come to investigate it, we may find a different state of affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must interpose, and remind gentlemen that this subject is not debatable during the pendency of the previous question.

Upon seconding the demand for the previous question, sixty-one rose in the affirmative.

Mr. CARTTER. I ask for tellers.

Mr. DANIEL. I rise to a question of order. I ask if this bill does not make an appropriation, and whether, under the rule, it must not go to the committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it does not make an appropriation.

Tellers were then ordered, and Messrs. CARTTER and FOWLER were appointed, and a count being had, the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 42.

So the previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to, and received its third reading.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. POLK. I call for the previous question.

The previous question received a second; and the main question being on the passage of the bill was ordered to be put.

Mr. EVANS. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FOWLER. I now ask the consent of the House, that the gentleman who introduced this bill may make an explanation of it.

Mr. CARTTER. I call the gentleman to order. The question is not debatable.

Mr. STANLY. Is there any report from a committee?

Mr. CARTTER. It is recommended by the unanimous vote of the Senate.

Mr. STANLY. It is a proverb, "The Senate passes anything." I should be glad to hear something about this case. Let us know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The main question having been ordered to be put, discussion is not in order. Whether there was a report in the Senate upon this subject, the Chair is not informed. The Clerk will again read the bill.

The bill was accordingly read by the Clerk.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to call the attention of the Speaker to the bill, to see if it does not include an appropriation, which makes it necessary that it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It evidently takes from the Treasury $7,000.

Mr. POLK. It does not take a dollar from the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does not contain an appropriation.

Mr. POLK. If the House will allow me—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] rises to a question of order, and the Chair begs leave to respond to that question of order. The Chair would inform the gentleman from Maryland that it has been uniformly held that a bill, for instance, fixing the salary of officers, does not involve an appropriation within the meaning of the rule which would require it to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair thinks this bill is of the same nature, and need not, under the rules and practice of this body, go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed. That will present the opportunity for gentlemen to tell us something about this bill.

Mr. HART. Is it in order to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. It is; but the question is not debatable.

Mr. HART. Then I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. OLDS. I rise to a question of order. My point of order is, that after the House has ordered the main question to be put upon the passage of the bill, we are under the operation of the previous question, and the motion to reconsider cannot be debated.

The SPEAKER. That has been the decision of the present Speaker of the House upon several occasions.

Mr. COBB. Is that the Speaker's decision now?

The SPEAKER. It is; for the Chair is not very apt to disregard his own decisions.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. HART, to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; and it was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I should like to know why it is that gentlemen wish to press this bill through the House without some explanation.

The SPEAKER. Any explanation or discussion upon the subject of the bill must be by unanimous consent of the House, the main question having been ordered to be put upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I move that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. POLK] have the unanimous consent of the House to make an explanation of this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I object. The previous question has been ordered.

The question was then taken on the passage of the bill, and there were—yeas 104, nays 56; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Ashtie, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Bartlett, Beale, Bockock, Boyne, Bragg, Breckinridge, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Carter, Caskey, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Clingman, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Doty, Duncan, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Fitch, Floyd, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goode, Gorman, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hubbard, Hobaday, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Jackson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glaney Jones, Kurtz, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, McCormick, McDonald, McLaanahan, McMullin, Meade, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penna, Polk, Porter, Powell, Robbins, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Ward, Watkins, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Williams, and Woodward—104.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allison, Averett, Babcock, Barrere, Buell, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Cullom, Daniel, Dockery, Eastman, Evans, Ficklin, Fowler, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Harper, Hascall, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Hillyer, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, John Johnson, George W. King, Kuhns, Lockhart, Mace, Mann, Martin, McNair, McQueen, Metcalf, Miller, Miner, Morehead, Murphy, Newton, Pennington, Perkins, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Townshend, Tuck, Walbridge, and Wallace—56.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. POLK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JANE IRWIN.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. The committee have had it in hand for two months, seeking an opportunity to make a report.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would inquire if it is the bill for the relief of Miss Jane Irwin?

Mr. McDONALD. It is.

Mr. STEPHENS. I hope the House will permit the bill to be reported.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

Mr. McDONALD. I move that the rules be suspended, to enable me to report the bill.

The question was put upon the motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD then, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred Senate bill No. 171, for the relief of Jane Irwin, reported that they had adopted the report of the Senate, as to the facts of the case, and instructed him to report the bill, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was then read by the Clerk, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Jane Irwin, for services and losses sustained by her father, Colonel Jared Irwin, an officer in the war of the Revolution, half pay as captain for the period of thirty-five years.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move to suspend the rule of the House which requires this bill to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and there were, upon a division, yeas 112; noes not counted.

So the rule was suspended.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the report will be read. The report, which was read by the Clerk, shows that Jane Irwin is the only surviving child of General Jared Irwin, who was an officer in the war of the Revolution; that he was in many sieges and battles, in each of which he distinguished himself for his bravery and gallant conduct; that he continued in service during the whole war, and contributed much valuable aid in the struggle for independence; that such was his zeal and activity in the cause of his country, that he rendered himself peculiarly obnoxious to the enemy, who omitted no opportunity of laying waste his fields, burning, and destroying, and carrying off his property; that at one time he lost one hundred head of cattle, a number of valuable horses, also two negroes, very valuable; that he built a fort, called Fort Burke, in which the inhabitants all took shelter, at his own expense; that from all that is known, it does not appear that he received any remuneration for his services, or for the heavy losses he sustained, either from the General Government or from Georgia, except a bounty of two hundred and fifty acres of land from the latter. That after the close of the revolutionary war he was much engaged in suppressing Indian hostilities on the borders of the State; that in order to protect the citizens he built and garrisoned, with four hundred men, with his own means, for two months, a fort at White Bluff; that during these border difficulties, himself and family suffered many losses and hardships; that he had much of his property destroyed and carried off, and his wife and family were often compelled to leave their home and seek safety in the swamp, in which they remained all night in great peril and exposure; that it does not appear that Colonel Irwin ever received any pay for his services, or remuneration for the money expended or losses sustained in quelling these disturbances, or protecting the citizens. It is further shown that Jane Irwin, the petitioner, has been reduced from affluence to dependence, and is now almost entirely destitute.

Mr. McDONALD. I move that the bill be put upon its passage, and upon that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. HALL. I ask of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. McDONALD], who reported this bill, if there is any provision in it which provides that interest shall not be paid upon the amount specified in the bill? If the bill is passed in its present form, I have no doubt but that interest will be paid upon it.

Mr. McDONALD. If the House will allow me, I will reply to the gentleman from Missouri, that no Department of the Government can have any pretense for the payment of interest under this bill.

The SPEAKER. Demand has been made for the previous question, and debate is out of order during its pendency.

Mr. HALL. I will request the gentleman from Maine to withdraw his call for the previous question, that I may be able to propose as an amendment, the addition of the words "without interest."

Mr. McDONALD. I will interpose no objection to the gentleman's amendment, provided the unanimous consent of the House be granted for the introduction of the amendment, without the withdrawal of my call for the previous question.

There being no objection, the words "without interest" were ordered to be inserted in the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to propound a single inquiry to the gentleman from Maine, who reported the bill, and it is this: For what time will half pay be given by the bill?

Mr. McDONALD. Thirty-five years.

Mr. DANIEL. Why did not General Irwin make a demand for the half pay to which he was entitled during his life?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I will answer the gentleman. It was because General Irwin at that time was a man of affluence. He built these forts, and expended all the property for which indemnity is asked out of his own ample funds. He did not during his lifetime need it.

Mr. DANIEL. How long did he fail before his death?

Mr. STEPHENS. He did not fail at all. He died a man of wealth. His family since have become involved in difficulties.

The call for the previous question was then seconded, and the main question, which was on the third reading of the bill, was ordered to be put.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be read a third time. The bill was then, according to order, read the third time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. DANIEL. Upon the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question being taken, the bill was then passed.

Mr. POLK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. COBB. There are a great many bills from the Senate and Executive communications upon the Speaker's table, awaiting reference to the committees, and I think it is better that we should proceed to their consideration. I therefore submit the motion that the House proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. McMULLIN. Would it be in order to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House upon the state of the Union on the special order?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order, provided the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] is not agreed to.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. COBB. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, that I may be able to submit my motion.

The question being taken upon the motion to suspend the rules, it was agreed to—yeas 101, noes not counted.

Mr. COBB. I now submit the motion, that we proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I trust the gentleman from Alabama and the House will yield their unanimous consent to the introduction of a bill merely for the purpose of reference.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection.

Mr. STUART. Until the Speaker's table has been cleared, I object to the transaction of any other business.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER, according to order, laid before the House the following Executive communications, which were severally read, viz:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I invite the attention of Congress to the state of affairs in the Territory of Oregon, growing out of a conflict of opinion among the authorities of that Territory in regard to a proper construction of the acts of Congress approved the 14th of August, 1848, and 11th June, 1850, the former entitled "An act to establish a territorial government in Oregon," and the latter entitled "An act to make further appropriations for public buildings in the Territories of Minnesota and Oregon." In order to enable Congress to understand the controversy, and apply such remedy with a view to adjust it as may be deemed expedient, I transmit.

1st. An act of the Legislative Assembly of that Territory, passed 1st February, 1851, entitled "An act to provide for the selection of places for the location and erection of public buildings of the Territory of Oregon."

2d. Governor Gaines's message to the Legislative Assembly of the 3d February, 1851.

3d. The opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, of 23d April, in regard to the act of the Legislative Assembly of the 1st February, 1851.

4th. The opinion of the supreme court of Oregon, pronounced on the 9th December, 1851.

5th. A letter of Judge Pratt, of the 15th December, 1851, dissenting from that opinion.

6th. Governor Gaines's letter to the President, of the 1st January, 1852.

7th. Report of the Attorney General of the United States on that letter, dated 22d March, 1852.

If it should be the sense of Congress that the seat of government of Oregon has not already been established by the local authorities pursuant to the law of the United States for the organization of that Territory, or if so established,

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 78.

should be deemed objectionable, in order to appease the strife upon the subject which seems to have arisen in that Territory, I recommend that the seat of government be either permanently or temporarily ordained by act of Congress, and that that body should, in the same manner, express its approval or disapproval of such laws as may have been enacted in the Territory at the place alleged to be its seat of government, and which may be so enacted until intelligence of the decision of Congress shall reach them.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1852.

On motion by Mr. LOCKHART, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of the 31st ult., I have the honor herewith to transmit a report from the Secretary of War, accompanied by the original manuscript report of Captain Thomas J. Crane, dated February 3d, 1844, on the best mode of improving the navigation of the Ohio river at the Falls of Louisville; together with the original map accompanying the same.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, April 6, 1852.

On motion by Mr. TAYLOR, referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 18th instant, I transmit a copy of the correspondence with John P. Gaines, Governor of the Territory of Oregon, relative to the seat of government of the said Territory.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, March 26, 1852.

On motion by Mr. GAYLORD, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of the Inspectors of the Penitentiary of the United States, in the District of Columbia, for the year ending 31st December last.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, April 2, 1852.

On motion by Mr. FICKLIN, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

As a further answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 5th of January last, requesting information in regard to a circular of her Britannic Majesty's Secretary of State for colonial affairs, in respect to the encouragement of the emigration of colored laborers from the United States to the British West India Islands, I transmit another dispatch addressed to the Department of State by the Minister of the United States at London.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, March 25, 1852.

On motion by Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

At the close of the commission to adjudicate upon the claims of citizens of the United States, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, I directed a list to be made of papers which had been presented to that commission, and, pursuant to the act of Congress approved 3d March, 1849, the papers themselves to be carefully arranged and deposited for safe keeping in the Department of State. I deemed all this necessary, as well for the interest of the claimants, as to secure the Government against fraudulent claims which might be preferred hereafter. A few days since, I was surprised to learn that some of these papers had been fraudulently abstracted by one of the claimants, and upon the case being made known to me by the Secretary of State, I referred it to the Attorney General, for the purpose of ascertaining what punishment could be inflicted upon the person who had been guilty of this offense. I now communicate to you his opinion, and that of the attorney of the United States for this District, by which you will perceive that it is doubtful whether there be any law for punishing the very grave offense of fraudulently abstracting or mutilating the papers and public documents in the several Departments of this Government. It appears to me, that the protection of the public records and papers requires that such acts should be made penal, and a suitable punishment inflicted upon the offender, and I therefore bring the subject to your consideration, to enable you to act upon it, should you concur with me in this opinion.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, March 26, 1852.

On motion by Mr. SWEETSER, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communications, viz:

I. A communication from the Department of State, transmitting tabular statements, agreeably to an act of Congress of March 2d, 1819, regulating passenger ships and vessels; showing the number and designation of passengers that arrived in the United States from the 30th September, 1850, to the 1st January, 1852, compiled from the returns made to that Department by the collector of customs; which, on motion by Mr. SEYMOUR, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

II. A communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting from the Second Auditor's office, copies of such accounts as have been rendered by persons charged or intrusted with the disbursement and application of the money, goods, and effects, for the benefit of the Indians, for the two fiscal years terminating, respectively, on the 30th June, 1850 and 1851, together with statements containing lists of the names of persons to whom goods, moneys, and effects, have been delivered within the same period, specifying the amounts and objects for which they were intended, &c.; which,

On motion by Mr. SWEETSER, was referred to the Committee on Public Expenditures and ordered to be printed.

III. Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting a report from the First Comptroller, covering copies of the correspondence between that Department and E. Hamilton, Secretary of Oregon Territory, as required by resolution of the House of Representatives of the 18th ultimo; which,

On motion by Mr. STUART, was referred to the Committee on the Territories and ordered to be printed.

IV. Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting a report from the Register of the Treasury, with a transcript of the accounts of Trenholm & Belt, for the printing executed in their names for the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-first Congress, in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 26th ultimo; which,

On motion by Mr. ROBBINS, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

V. Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting, at the request of the Secretary of War, an estimate from the Commissary General of Subsistence for the service of his department for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1853, which he desires shall be substituted for one for the same object transmitted to Congress at the commencement of the present session; which,

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

VI. Also, a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing that the appropriations of the 28th and 30th September, 1850, of $10,000 cash, made by Congress for locating the life-boats, &c., on the coast of the United States, had been expended in pursuance of the law, under the direction of the Life-Saving and Benevolent Association of New York, by authority of this Department, in building boat-houses, purchasing boats, life-cars, and other articles for the saving of life and property from shipwreck on the coast; and that many persons had been rescued from imminent peril by means of these boats being located at different points on the coast. The report asked for a further appropriation of $20,000.

On motion by Mr. SEYMOUR, it was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

VII. Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, covering a letter from the Secretary of War, showing that a reduction of $525,522 52 can be made in the estimates submitted at the commencement of the present session from the War Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852; which,

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

VIII. A communication from the Department of the Interior, transmitting, in obedience to the requirements of the 11th section of the act of the 26th August, 1852, a list of the clerks and other persons employed in that Department and its bureaus during the last year, and showing the time employed, and the amount paid to each; which, on motion by Mr. CARTTER, was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

IX. A communication from the Post Office Department, transmitting, in obedience to the requirements of the 4th subdivision of the 22d section of the act to change the organization of the Post Office Department, and to provide more effectually for the statement of the accounts thereof, a statement of the finances of the Post Office Department for the year ending the 30th of June, 1851, duly certified by the Department of the Treasury for the said Department; which,

On motion by Mr. OLDS, was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

X. Also, a communication from the Post Office Department, transmitting, in obedience to the same act, statements from the Contract Office, duly certified by the Second Assistant Postmaster General, of the contracts preceding the first day of July, 1851, other than those let to contract at the annual lettings of mail contracts; which,

On motion by Mr. OLDS, was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

XI. Also, a communication from the Patent Office, transmitting the agricultural portion of the report for the year 1851.

Mr. CARTTER. I move that the report lie upon the table and that it be printed; and I give notice that, when the printing question is settled, I will move the printing of an extra number.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to inquire whether the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] is not to print the report?

Mr. CARTTER. That was my motion; but I stated that as soon as the question of printing was settled, I would make a motion for the printing of extra copies. I now make the motion that one hundred thousand extra copies of the report be printed. That is the number which was ordered by the House last year.

The SPEAKER. By an express rule of the House, any motion to print extra copies must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CARTTER. Well, I make the motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move to refer his motion to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. CARTTER. No; I move that one hundred thousand extra copies of the report be printed.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is in order; but as soon as he makes the motion, that rule itself refers the motion to the Committee on Printing. If the Chair thinks it necessary, I will move to refer the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The motion must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CARTTER. I make a motion simply for the printing of a hundred thousand extra copies. The reason why I do not move the reference to the Committee on Printing is, as is known by every one in the House, that the question of printing is, at this time, undisposed of.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman must go to the Committee on Printing, and the Chair will so order.

Mr. CARTTER. If that is the operation of the rule, of course I cannot object to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that has been the practice, but he is not quite sure.

Mr. HASCALL. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, by adding after the word "hundred" the word "fifty," so as to make it read one hundred and fifty thousand extra copies.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hardly thinks that that amendment can be entertained. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio is simply to print an extra number of copies, and under the rule it must go to the Committee on Printing, to be considered and reported on. When the Committee make their report, it can be amended.

Mr. CARTTER. I would inquire of the Chair what disposition has been made of my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that under the rule, the proposition must go to the Committee on Printing. The Chair does not remember what has been the practice of the House under that rule.

Mr. CARTTER. Has any motion to refer been made?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion has not been made. A motion to print extra copies having been made by the gentleman from Ohio, that proposition must go to the Committee on Printing. The Chair thinks, however, that it would be more regular that a motion to refer should be made.

Mr. CARTTER. It appears to me so, and I move to refer the agricultural report to the Committee on Printing, with instructions to report to the House in favor of printing one hundred thousand extra copies.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio propose to instruct the committee?

Mr. CARTTER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair is half inclined to think that the motion must lie over for consideration.

Mr. CARTTER. Then let it lie.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be considered, in the opinion of the Chair, in the shape in which the gentleman from Ohio has proposed it. The gentleman from Ohio proposes to instruct the Committee on Printing to order certain extra copies to be printed.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I suppose a motion to refer to the Committee on Printing is not in order, because it implies the power to vote down the reference, and the rule is absolute, that a motion to print extra copies shall go to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The rule is imperative that every proposition to print an extra number of copies—no matter what the number—must go to the Committee on Printing. What the practice of this body has been under that rule, the Chair does not remember; the rule is not a very old one. The gentleman from Ohio proposes to instruct the committee to order a certain number of extra copies, to be printed, and the Chair thinks that that motion must lie over.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order. This House cannot instruct the Committee on Printing, which is a joint committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion is out of order. It is not competent for this House to instruct that committee.

Mr. CARTTER. Then I move that the report be laid upon the table and printed.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. I desire to arrive at the same result as the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTTER], and I would therefore inquire of the Chair if it would not be in order to instruct the Committee on Printing to inquire into the expediency of reporting that a certain number of extra copies of this report shall be printed, thus indicating to the committee the sense of the House on the subject? If it be in order, I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is hardly competent for this House to instruct that joint committee. There is a joint rule which requires that all propositions to print extra copies shall go to the joint committee. That is under the general law. If, therefore, the gentleman submits a proposition to print an extra number of copies, the Chair must rule that that proposition must go to the joint committee under that joint rule, which is the law governing both Houses.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Maine will accomplish his object by making a simple motion to print an extra number of copies; and it matters not whether the number be ten thousand or one hundred thousand. That motion, under the joint rule, to which the Chair has correctly referred, carries the subject to the Committee on Printing. It is made the duty of that committee to take up the whole subject connected with the document and report to the House what number they think ought to be printed.

The SPEAKER. What was the precise motion made by the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CARTTER. My first motion was to lay on the table and print.

The SPEAKER. That has been ordered.

Mr. CARTTER. I will withdraw my subsequent motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to print one hundred thousand extra copies.

The SPEAKER. That motion, under the joint rule, goes to the Committee on Printing.

The following bill from the Senate was taken up in its order, and read a first and second time by its title, viz:

"An act (No. 157) for the relief of the securities of Elijah J. Weed, late quartermaster of marines, deceased."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The question was first put upon Mr. STANTON's motion; and, on a division, there were—ayes 12, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Mr. CARTTER demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. FULLER of Maine, and STANTON of Tennessee were appointed; and the question being again put, there were—ayes 44, noes not counted.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question was then put upon Mr. DANIEL's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

IOWA LAND BILL.

The following Senate bill, coming up in its order, was read a first and second time by its title, viz:

"An act (No. 1) granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in aid of the construction of certain railroads in said State."

Mr. CLARK. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be made the special order for the second Tuesday in June, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. HOUSTON. Can we have a division of that question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a motion to make a special order is not in order, without a suspension of the rules.

Mr. CLARK. Then I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOUSTON. We are acting under a suspension of the rules now.

Mr. HIBBARD. Is it in order to move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Iowa by striking out that part of it which proposes to make this bill the special order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion to make the bill the special order for a particular day is not in order.

Mr. CLARK. I would ask the Chair for what reason it is not in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair must reply that the rules of the House do not allow it.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for information, in order that I may know if I can make the motion so as to be in order.

The SPEAKER. If we were engaged in clearing the Speaker's table in the ordinary way under the rules, it would be competent for the gentleman, on Monday, to move to suspend the rules for the purpose he desires. But it is not in order now, for the reason that we are acting under a suspension of the rules, and the Chair does not see how it can well admit of a motion to suspend the rules a second time upon business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. CLARK. If we are acting under a suspension of the rules, it does not exactly appear to me why my motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. We are acting under a suspension of the rules, which enabled us to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion has already been submitted by the gentleman from Iowa, and that gentleman further submits a motion that the bill be made the special order for a particular day. The Chair thinks, upon reflection, that the gentleman may move to suspend the rules for the purpose of submitting the latter proposition.

Mr. CLARK. Very well, sir; then I make that motion.

Mr. FOWLER. Will it be in order to move to amend that motion?

The SPEAKER. In what way?

Mr. FOWLER. By striking out what proposes to make the bill the special order for a certain day in June. If it is in order, I will submit that motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not amendable, until it is before the House. The motion now is, to suspend the rules to enable the gentleman to submit that motion.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I desire to move, that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and I submit that whilst in the execution of a special order, under a suspension of the rules, we cannot be arrested by another motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. This motion to suspend the rules, is in connection with the business for which the rules were suspended and the order made, and the Chair thinks that we cannot well separate the motion proposed to be made by the gentleman from Iowa, from the business before the body.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Would a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, take precedence of the motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let me inquire whether the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is an entirety, or whether there are two motions embraced in his proposition?

The SPEAKER. They are separate and distinct motions. One is to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; the other is to make it a special order. The question will first be taken on referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARK. My proposition, then, resolves itself into two motions?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. CLARK. Then I withdraw the motion, and move to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was so referred.

The following Senate bills were respectively read a first and second time by their titles and referred as indicated below, to wit:

An act (No. 33) for the relief of Mrs. E. A. McNeil, widow of the late General John McNeil. [By Mr. HIBBARD, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.]

An act (No. 152) for the relief of John F. Callan, administrator of Daniel Renner, deceased. [By Mr. COBB, to the Committee on Claims.]

An act (No. 153) to authorize T. H. McManus to enter by preemption certain lands in the Greensburg land district, Louisiana. [By Mr. HALL, to the Committee on Public Lands.]

An act (No. 285) appropriating a sum of money for the completion of the interment of officers and soldiers who died in Mexico, in the American cemetery near the city of Mexico. [By Mr. CARTER, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.]

An act (No. 87) to grant the right of preemption to settlers on the public lands known as the "Maison Rouge Grant," and for other purposes. [By Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, to the Committee on Public Lands.]

An act (No. 158) for the relief of Nancy Wright. [By Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.]

An act (No. 159) for the relief of Robert Jemison and Benjamin Williamson. [By Mr. CABLE, of Ohio, to the Committee on Claims.]

An act (No. 160) for the relief Nathaniel Kuykendall. [By Mr. FAULKNER, to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.]

An act (No. 166) to provide compensation to William Woodbridge and Henry Chipman, for services in adjusting titles to land in Michigan, and for other purposes. [By Mr. STUART, to the Committee on the Judiciary.]

An act (No. 168) for the relief of Sarah Flinn. [By Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.]

An act (No. 169) for the relief of Thomas D. Jennings. [By Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, to the Committee on Private Land Claims.]

An act (No. 173) for the relief of John McReynolds, of Detroit, in the State of Michigan. [By Mr. STUART, to the Committee on Commerce.]

An act (No. 177) for the relief of Samuel Bray. [By Mr. CABELL, of Florida, to the Committee on Commerce.]

An act (No. 178) for the relief of Thos. Rhodes. [By Mr. ROBBINS, to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.]

An act (No. 3) granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State. [By Mr. HALL, to the Committee on Public Lands.]

An act (No. 36) to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the land to which that State is entitled under the act of 8th of August, 1846, to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers. [By Mr. HALL, to the Committee on Public Lands.]

An act (No. 109) making an appropriation for the erection of a marine hospital at Portland, Maine. [By Mr. APPLETON, of Maine, to the Committee on Commerce.]

An act (No. 121) granting to the State of Arkansas the right of way, and a portion of the public land, to aid in the construction of railroads in that State. [By Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, to the Committee on Public Lands.]

A resolution (No. 23) to provide for straightening the eastern boundary line of the naval hospital lands at New York. [By Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.]

An act (No. 163) for the relief of G. Thomas Howard. [By Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.]

An act (No. 181) for the relief of William C. Easton. [By Mr. SWEETSER, to the Committee on Military Affairs.]

An act (No. 186) for the relief of Bryan Callaghan. [By Mr. HOWARD, to the Committee on Military Affairs.]

An act (No. 250) to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States therein. [By Mr. NEWTON, to the Committee on the Judiciary.]

An act (No. 39) to authorize the payment of invalid pensions in certain cases. [By Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.]

An act (No. 53) to compensate the owners of certain military lands in the State of Kentucky, granted to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia State line of the army of the Revolution, which have been taken by paramount claims. [By Mr. HALL, to the Committee on Private Land Claims.]

An act (No. 271) amendatory of existing laws relative to the half dollar, quarter dollar, and half dime. [By Mr. HOUSTON, to the Committee of Ways and Means.]

An act (No. 52) increasing the salary of the district judge of the United States for the district of New Hampshire. [By Mr. HIBBARD, to the Committee on the Judiciary.]

An act (No. 324) to enable the proper accounting officers to complete a settlement with Captain Henry L. Kinney. [By Mr. HOWARD, to the Committee on Military Affairs.]

An act (No. 328) for the relief of Seneca G. Simmons. [By Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.]

An act (No. 333) to change the name of Joseph Lewis Breese, a midshipman in the Navy of the United States. [By Mr. CHANDLER, to the Committee on the Judiciary.]

An act (No. 331) to grant to certain settlers on the Menomonee Purchase, north of Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, the right of preemption. [By Mr. HALL, to the Committee on Public Lands.]

An act (No. 314) for the relief of James Jones. [By Mr. ROBBINS, to the Committee on Private Land Claims.]

An act (No. 227) for the relief of Francis E. Baden. [By Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.]

An act (No. 2) to grant to the State of Ohio the unsold and unappropriated lands remaining in that State. [By Mr. SWEETSER, to the Committee on Public Lands.]

WILLIAM A. CHRISTIAN.

Senate bill No. 162, for the relief of William A. Christian, was next taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAYLY. I know the character of the bill. It concerns a purser in the Navy, was referred to that committee in the Senate, and I think ought to go to that committee in this House.

Mr. STANTON. I beg leave to say to the gentleman that it does not go to the Committee on Naval Affairs more appropriately than did a bill which the House a little while ago referred to the Committee on Claims. I hope the House will be consistent with itself, and refer it to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COBB. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] and the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] that the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business have not a solitary bill before them; and if nobody else will take this bill, I presume they will not object to taking it. [Laughter.]

The question was first put upon referring the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it was not agreed to—ayes 31, noes not counted.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Claims.

WILLIAM SPEIDEN.

Senate bill No. 217, for the relief of William Speiden, was next taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would ask, from the peculiar circumstances connected with this bill, that it be put upon its passage. It is the case of a purser in the Navy, who desires that his accounts may be settled before he goes to sea. I ask that the bill may be read through, for the information of the House.

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

Mr. CARTTER. I would inquire if that bill does not make an appropriation?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. CARTTER. Then we cannot put it upon its passage now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be glad if we could get the bill upon its passage in some way. I think it is a bill which demands our immediate action.

Mr. CARTTER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The question was put and the motion agreed to.

LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Joint resolution No. 15 of the Senate, authorizing the purchase of the ninth volume of the Laws of the United States was next taken up and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. JENKINS. I hope that resolution will be put on its passage. I ask that it may be read for the information of the House.

The resolution was then read through.

Mr. JENKINS. I would remark with regard to that resolution, that no officer of the House, nor any committee of the House, has a single copy of this ninth volume. And from the great inconvenience, not only to the committees of the House, but to the officers of the House, arising from the want of this volume, I hope the resolution will be put upon its passage, and that it will be passed.

[Cries of "Move the previous question?"]

Mr. JENKINS. Well, I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put, and under the operation thereof the resolution was read a third time and passed.

Mr. JENKINS. I move that the vote by which the resolution was passed be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie on the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

Senate bill No. 14, granting to the State of Alabama the right of way and a donation of public lands for making a railroad from Selma to the Tennessee river, was taken up and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. COBB. I move to refer that bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not propose to interfere with my colleague's disposition of that bill; but I would suggest that, inasmuch as all the other bills of that nature have gone to the Committee on Public Lands, the condition of his bill would be better if he would allow it to go there also.

Mr. COBB. The condition of it will be bad enough any how, so far as our reaching it is concerned. I, however, prefer that it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I will not make any other motion.

The question was then taken, and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Senate bill No. 179, for the relief St. John's church, in the city of Washington, was next taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. POLK. That bill seems to be for a charitable purpose, and I think we might as well dispose of it now. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of putting it upon its passage.

The bill was read through by the Clerk for information.

The SPEAKER. The bill contains an appropriation, and must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. My own impression is, that it involves an important legal question, and ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. My own opinion is, that as a church is not a corporate body we cannot transfer the land to it. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

SALARIES OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Senate bill No. 175, relating to the salaries of officers of the Territories of the United States, and to repeal the proviso in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1852, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851, was next taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. STUART. I move to refer that bill to the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I move to put that bill upon its passage. The Committee on the Judiciary have had a copy of that bill under its consideration, and they have instructed me to report it in the form in which it now stands. I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] will withdraw the motion to refer to the Committee on the Territories, and allow the bill to be put upon its passage.

Mr. STUART. This bill has not been directly considered by the Committee on Territories, but incidentally it has. It may have been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. But I think it involves certain inquiries which belong exclusively to the Committee on the Territories—certainly questions which are highly important to the Territories themselves. This question of how long territorial officers, and especially judicial officers, may be absent from our remote Territories, has become a very important one; and I think this measure, which proposes to change the law from what it now is, ought to be considered by that committee, and all the facts of the case ought to be brought fully before the House before any bill is passed upon the subject whatever.

This provision, which it is sought to repeal, as I understand it, is a provision prohibiting these officers from leaving the Territory under certain restrictions; and among those restrictions is one, if I mistake not, which takes from these their pay. Now, the Committee on the Territories have a sufficient amount of evidence before them in regard to this matter to enable them to say to this House that at this time this very act is one fraught with a vast amount of evil; and before a change is made in the law as it now stands, or before any bill making that change is passed into a law, I think the matter should be fully investigated and fairly submitted to the House. I beg the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McLANAHAN] to consider that I mean to show no disrespect to the Committee on the Judiciary, when I say that this subject is much more legitimately under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Territories than that of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I trust this bill will take that direction. Inasmuch as a week is set apart for the consideration of territorial business—the third one in May—there is no danger of any delay that will be deleterious to the interests of the public. This business comes up as a special order, and can be acted on by the House at that time advisedly.

Mr. McLANAHAN. In passing the general appropriation bills, the 3d of March, 1851, a proviso was inserted depriving Territorial officers, who should absent themselves for more than sixty days, of all their salaries. This bill proposes to repeal that proviso, and in its stead proposes to enact that, if any officer shall be absent from the Territories without the leave of the President of the United States first obtained, or without afterwards furnishing to the President satisfactory proof that his absence was necessary, shall not receive, during said absence, the pay to which he would otherwise have been entitled to under the law.

It is well known that the extraordinary circumstances which occurred, within the last year, in the Territory of Utah, have induced two of the judges to desert their positions. It is impossible for them, under the existing law, to obtain any compensation for any services they have rendered, or may render hereafter. These judges thus remain here unpaid, and it is impossible, under the circumstances, for them to receive any remuneration until they return to the Territory in which they preside. The bill now before the House provides for their payment for the time they are absent. Whether they had sufficient cause to induce them to leave their positions or not, I will not now pretend to determine. If this bill shall become a law, it will provide that they shall receive some compensation for the time for which they have held their offices. As the law now stands, it would be impossible for an appointee to return home to look to his family, or for any other purpose whatever, so as to be absent for more than sixty days, without being deprived of his entire salary.

Now, sir, the Judiciary Committee in the Senate had this bill under charge, and it passed the Senate, as I have heard, with but one vote against it. A copy of the bill was informally handed to the Committee on the Judiciary of this House, which, after considering its provisions, instructed me to report in its favor; and it is for that reason, sir, that I moved the amendment I did to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART], that this bill be now put upon its passage. It strikes me, sir, for the reasons I have suggested, as well as for the general propriety of the modification of this law, that this House ought at once to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. SIBLEY. In reference to this subject, I wish to state that the clause appended to the appropriation bill at the last session of the last Congress, was inserted by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY], and met my approbation. My own Territory had suffered so much from the absence of its officers, for months together, that I was willing to bring the subject, in some manner or other, to the notice of this House; and when that proposition was introduced here, it was passed without any serious opposition; indeed, almost unanimously. I have been spoken to frequently in regard to the operation of this law upon the more distant Territories. I am not here to speak with reference to those Territories; nor have I anything to say in connection with the law referred to, except so far as the interests of my own constituents are affected thereby.

Now, sir, I have prepared an amendment to this resolution, which, if it is put upon its passage, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. McLANAHAN], would do away with the effect intended by that resolution, and leave the enactment as it now is, making it, however, optional with the President of the United States, in case of absolute necessity, to excuse an officer for being absent more than sixty days. I think that the original proviso, withholding salary from any officer who is absent for more than sixty days from his Territory, without good cause can be shown for such absence, is a proper and just one. And I hope that that clause in the bill, if it is now put upon its passage, will be left as it now is in the last appropriation bill. By the present resolution, if an officer is absent from his post for sixty days or upwards during the same year, without permission of the President, he merely loses his pay for the time of his absence. The difference between the two is a very essential one, and I do not believe the provisions of the proposed resolution are sufficient to keep these officers at home, if they have a desire to absent themselves.

Mr. HALL, (interrupting.) I suppose the gentleman understands this matter, and I wish to ask him if, according to his recollection, the abuses under the old law were not so enormous, that this House unanimously passed the provision which this bill proposes to repeal?

Mr. SIBLEY. I have just stated to the House that this clause placed in the appropriation bill met with my approval, and that the abuses complained of were of so grave a character, as to demand some action on the part of Congress.

Mr. HALL. I wish to ask the gentleman if he finds that the provisions of the present law acts injuriously upon the people of his Territory?

Mr. SIBLEY. I reply, that so far as my own Territory is concerned, I do not believe that it does operate injuriously; but I am not prepared to speak for the people of other Territories, or of the operations of that clause of the bill, within their limits.

Mr. HALL. I would ask the gentleman from Minnesota, if, so far as his knowledge extends, the present law is not a beneficial one in its operation upon the Territories?

Mr. SIBLEY. I beg leave to answer the gentleman by repeating, that I am insisting upon that very fact. I do not wish any law of Congress to have a special bearing upon the officers of Minnesota Territory. Such action would justly be regarded as reflecting upon them. I desire the officers of all the Territories to be included in the same category, and that they may all be subjected to the same penalty, for absents themselves for more than a reasonable time from their posts.

Mr. STUART. I merely wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that this subject of territorial officers, and of their conduct, especially those connected with the Judiciary, is one of much greater magnitude than gentlemen may seem to suppose, from what has fallen from honorable members in this House to-day; and inasmuch as there is no evil to grow out of it by postponing it for two weeks—that is no considerable evil—when the House will be advised thoroughly of the whole effect of it, I certainly think the reference which I have moved ought to be made.

Now, I refrain purposely from expressing any views in regard to the conduct of these judicial officers. I do not think that the sentiment of this House should be affected by any previous announcement upon the subject. I will say that I have from the President of the United States, incidentally, that this subject has given him more trouble than any other one that has come under his supervision within the year. It is one of great magnitude, and one which requires the attention of Congress. I insist, therefore, upon my motion; and for the purpose of determining the question, as well as of preventing its consuming the time of the House, I call for the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I trust the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] will allow me to say a few words.

Mr. STUART. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to giving the gentleman an opportunity to make any statement. I made the motion because it seemed to be the sense of the House. If the House is disposed to hear the gentleman, I have no objection, and will withdraw my motion; but I hope he will renew it.

Mr. STANTON. I will renew the motion. I do not see how this question requires the grave consideration, or at least the length of time for consideration, which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] seems to desire for that purpose.

Now, sir, it is the simple question whether the officers of a Territory shall be permitted to absent themselves for a longer time than sixty days; and in the next place, whether, if they do so, the President should not have the power to pay them their salaries notwithstanding, where the circumstances would justify; or whether you should say peremptorily, and without qualification, that when an officer does absent himself he shall not be paid, whatever may be the circumstances, and however urgent may be the cause which induced him to be absent for that length of time. In regard to the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART], in reference to the propriety of sending this particular bill to the Committee on the Territories, the House knows, and everybody knows, that the conduct of the judicial officers of the Territory of Utah, or the report of those officers to the President of the United States, has been before that committee for a number of months, and they have not reported anything in regard to it. Those officers traveled from this portion of the country to Utah; and on their way to that Territory they were robbed by the Indians of all of their property, and even their very clothes were taken from their backs. When they got to that Territory they were virtually driven away, and during the whole of this time they have not, on account of the provisions of that law, been able to receive one dollar of their salaries. I do not think this bill ought to be longer postponed. It should be put upon its passage at once. I think there is no provision in the bill that can require more than a moment's consideration, if it is understood. It proposes simply to change the operation of the former proviso, so as to put it in the power of the President to excuse officers from the operation of that proviso.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to inquire if the gentleman proposes that those judicial officers who run away from the Territory ought ever to be paid their salaries? The object of this bill is, that they shall be paid. I give the gentleman notice that I am against it. I am against paying any officer that runs away from the discharge of his duty. I not only would not pay them, but I would have them discharged.

Mr. STANTON. I take a view of this question different from that taken by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.] I think the judicial officers of the Territory of Utah were forced to leave. I think that they had no alternative left, and that no honorable man who regarded his character would have remained there under the circumstances.

Mr. STEPHENS. Did not one of the judicial officers remain there?

Mr. STANTON. Yes; but he joined the Mormon Church shortly after going there, and was placed in a position to remain there. But I conceive that the other gentlemen could not stay. They were forced to go away; and I conceive the President of the United States has scarcely done his duty in making no recommendation in relation thereto, and in taking no steps to maintain the laws in that Territory. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] insists upon it, I call for the previous question.

Mr. STUART. Certainly I do.

Mr. STANTON. Then I am under the necessity of calling for the previous question, as I am pledged to do so.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART], that the motion may be withdrawn.

Mr. STUART. I consent to it.

Mr. STANTON. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. JONES. I have but a few words to say upon this bill. It is composed of two sections. The first one proposes to enact, or rather to reenact, what the second section proposes to repeal. The first one proposes to make as a permanent law what is now the permanent law in the proviso which that second section proposes to repeal; and the first section, if I understand anything about this bill, is placed there as a pretext for carrying through the second one.

Some gentlemen here say I am mistaken as to the effect of the first section. The first section proposes to provide that no territorial officer who shall have absented himself from the Territory for a longer period than sixty days, shall be paid his salary, except under certain circumstances.

Mr. SIBLEY. This bill from the Senate proposes that if any territorial officer shall be absent in any one year for the period of sixty days, he shall not receive any pay for the time he shall be absent. There is an essential difference between this clause and the law of last year, which specified that if any officer was absent for sixty days in any one year, he should receive no salary for the whole year.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman must be mistaken with regard to that proviso.

Mr. SIBLEY. I am not mistaken. Such is the construction given to it by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES. The second section proposes to repeal that proviso, so that it would give to certain officers of one of the Territories their salary for the time they have been absent from the post of their duty, and, perhaps, for the whole year, if the construction the gentleman puts upon it is correct. Now, sir, I am opposed to paying officers any salary except for the discharge of the duty intrusted to them. If these officers left the Territory under circumstances which would justify their absents themselves, they should have, when they returned with no intention of going back again, resigned their commission and allowed the appointing power to select others. Then the laws of the country might have been administered, and men who discharged the duties received the salary. If these judicial officers have left the Territory under justifiable circumstances, some committee of the House ought to take the subject into consideration, and report a bill providing for the payment of their expenses and such compensation as they are entitled to. But, here this bill makes a general provision covering all of the Territories, and all their officers hereafter, when only one special case is to be provided for. In compliance with requests of gentlemen around me, I renew the call for the previous question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I think the passage of this law should not be interrupted by an attempted application of its provisions to a particular case. The proviso of the law of 1851, attempted here to be repealed, applies to the whole salary of the judicial officer, no matter what the cause of his absence may be from the seat of his duties. It is not within the competency of the President of the United States or any other officer of the Government, to afford relief or to give leave of absence for any cause. And should an officer be absent from the Territory for sixty days, no matter for what reason, his salary for the whole year is forfeited. That is manifestly unjust, and the first section of the bill is intended to remedy it. The remedy is applied in two ways. First, it only takes from him the salary pro tanto—the salary for the time which he was absent; and second, it affords to the President the right to give him leave of absence, and in which case deduction is not made from his salary at all. It brings upon the Executive head of the Government the responsibility of judging of the validity of the cause for which a party may be absent from a Territory. These are the simple provisions of this section. I think the repealing clause is manifestly just and proper, and that the true and fair basis is urged by the emendation of the law as afforded by the first clause. I do not see what the case of the Utah judges have to do with it.

Mr. STUART. I wish to state to the gentleman from Kentucky, that did I deem it proper at this time, I could satisfy him beyond all question, that the effect of this law upon certain individuals is entirely wrong. While it is true certain other individuals ought to be, and I trust will be, exempted from its effects, I think when the evidence is before this House, which ought to be, and can be, if the reference for which I have asked is made, it will be seen that there is a clear distinction between the officers of the respective Territories of this Government. Some of them ought to be relieved, and some of them have no pretext for it whatever. This law affects them indiscriminately.

Mr. MARSHALL. I take it for granted, that the first clause of this bill provides a rule by which the President or Secretary of the Treasury will act hereafter.

Mr. STUART. Hereafter, if you repeal that provision of the law which cuts off the payment of certain men now in office.

Mr. MARSHALL. The salaries of such officers which have heretofore accrued, shall be paid, in the language of the proviso; and, on the contrary, if they have absented themselves even without cause heretofore, this second section relieves them from the effect of the proviso; and the law for the future is established upon the basis suggested by the first section.

Mr. STUART. There is no fault to be found with it, so far as the future operation of that law is concerned, but it affects cases which have passed by repealing this provision of the law now taking away their salary. It affects them indiscriminately; and for the purpose of benefiting a particular individual who ought to be benefited, it confers the same thing upon others who have no right to it whatever.

Mr. MARSHALL. I understand, Mr. Speaker, the only case in point to which the gentleman refers, is that of the Utah judges. They now labor under the disability imposed by this proviso. They cannot now draw their salary, even for the time they did actually serve, and their absence, whether with or without cause, operates as a forfeiture of all they did earn. I think that it is better we should withdraw this case beyond the action of the proviso, in order to remedy the injustice which the proviso certainly would work. A man starts with a judicial commission in his pocket. His destination is the Territory of Utah. It takes him ninety days to reach that destination. He serves nine months, and from some cause, whether sufficient or insufficient, he absents himself for the last sixty days. The effect of the existing law would be, to forfeit his salary for the whole year. Is that fair, is it just, upon the part of the Government towards those persons who have honestly earned ten months' wages? And is it not better to repeal the proviso, than to let a law stand upon the statute-book, which operates such manifest hardship and injustice? Now, I do not pretend to go into the question about the Utah judges. I feel very much like the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] that they should have remained at their posts.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. With the permission of the gentleman, I will draw his attention, besides what he has been presenting to the House, to the inequality which the law works. The judges, or any other officers of the Territory of Minnesota, can avail themselves of this sixty days' permission. They can leave the Territory of Minnesota, and transact business in various parts of the United States, and return within the sixty days' limit. Not so, however, with either the officers of the Territory of Utah or New Mexico. In respect to the officers of those two Territories, it amounts to almost an absolute prohibition. They cannot for one day, or one hour, leave their place of business to go elsewhere, without a forfeiture of their whole year's salary; for there is no place to which you can go, out of the Territories of New Mexico or Utah, from which you can return within sixty days.

Mr. GENTRY. I think it is not a sound principle of legislation to repeal a general law, the general effects of which are salutary, because of the occurrence of a case of individual hardship under it. All that has been said in this debate satisfies me of the propriety of referring this bill, that it may be subjected to the consideration of a competent committee. I think a committee would, doubtless, be able to present to the House something better than the bill before us—perhaps something better than the proviso in the appropriation bill of 1851. That proviso was intended to correct a very great abuse—an abuse so very flagrant, that certainly some remedy was necessary.

Mr. MARSHALL. It has been considered by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GENTRY. I was not in the House when the statement to that effect was made. I am not satisfied to vote for this bill.

Mr. McLANAHAN. This bill was informally referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. A copy of the bill, as it passed the Senate, was handed to me as chairman of the Judiciary Committee. It was considered by that committee, and I was instructed to report favorably upon it. Whether or not we were competent to discharge that duty is left for others to judge.

Mr. GENTRY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was not aware that it had received the action of that committee; nevertheless, with all the respect which I have for that committee, I am not yet satisfied that this bill ought to pass. It was a custom for gentlemen to persecute the Executive here for months, to obtain office under this territorial government; but so far from going to the scene of their official duties, and confining themselves to the performance of those duties, they were elsewhere. Why, in the Territory of Oregon, sir, one of the judges of the supreme court was digging gold in California. Another was here in the United States expending his entire time, to the utter neglect of the official duties which properly devolved upon him. It has grown the almost universal custom with these territorial officers, that they receive their pay without pretending to perform the duties attaching to them in their official character. Now, all have incurred the penalties of the proviso of the appropriation law of 1851. Where sufficient cause is shown for absence, I believe that penalty ought not to apply; but I am not willing to repeal the law to release them from the penalty. If there be cases of individual hardship under the operation of this general law, let them be remedied by special acts, if they can be shown to have merit.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman, but I agree with him in regard to the cases which have already occurred. The law which the present one is intended to repeal, was passed on the 3d of March, 1837. It is but justice to the honorable Delegate from Minnesota [Mr. SIBLEY] to state that he has an amendment which he exhibited to me, and which he intends to submit before the passage of the bill, which restricts its provisions to the judges of the Territory of Utah. The question, therefore, will be fairly before the House, whether, under the circumstances, this bill ought to pass for their relief. Its future operation has been sufficiently explained by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] and I myself have endeavored to show that the operation of the law of the 3d of March, 1851, is unjust and oppressive. Leaving it hereafter to the President of the United States, as we do by this bill, to say whether there is sufficient justification for an officer to leave the Territory, or, if he leaves without the permission of the President, he is to exhibit satisfactory evidence to the President that he left under proper circumstances.

Mr. GENTRY. I rather prefer to make provision in the law, absolute and imperative. I am quite opposed to conferring this discretion upon the Executive, of giving leave of absence. The officers who can concentrate influence here upon which to obtain the office will, in nine times out of ten, gather influence sufficient to obtain a remission of the penalty.

Mr. LANE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] has stated a thing, which I was not aware, until this morning, had become current in the country, that one of the judges of Oregon had absented himself for months and years, and that another was digging gold in California. Not one of the judges in Oregon Territory has ever engaged in digging gold. One of them was absent, and did not return to the Territory.

Mr. GENTRY. Was he in California?

Mr. LANE. No; sir.

Mr. GENTRY. Was he not there on business other than official?

Mr. LANE. I do not know about that. I know that not one of them was engaged in digging gold.

Mr. GENTRY. I will remark, that such was the statement here, when this controversy was under discussion. Whether he was digging gold or attending to other business than that is not material to the merits of the question. I was about to remark when the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] interrupted me, that I was quite opposed to conferring discretion upon the President to give leave of absence, or to say whether the penalties of law shall apply or not; because the same influence which might procure an appointment would, generally speaking, procure such a decision upon these questions as suited the purpose of the individual, to the neglect of the interests of the Territory. I am utterly opposed to such policy. I shall support the motion to refer this bill. I think some legislation is demanded. Doubtless a law wiser and better matured in its provisions than the proviso to the appropriation bill of 1851, can be offered to the consideration of this House, and unless some such proposition is presented, I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I imagine that this subject on such a day as this has been discussed enough, and I now call the previous question, in order that we may get rid of the balance of the business on the Speaker's table. And I give notice that I will not withdraw it.

Mr. LANE. I am sorry the gentleman has stated he will not withdraw his motion.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon referring the bill to the Committee on the Territories.

The question was then taken and agreed to, and the bill was so referred.

Senate bill No. 191, to provide for a tri-monthly mail from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, via Tampico, and back, in steam-vessels, was next taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. McCORKLE. This bill, if I am at liberty to state this much, simply provides that the Postmaster General shall be authorized to contract with the lowest bidder for carrying the mails between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. It is a matter which interests my constituents to a considerable extent, inasmuch as it will shorten the transmission of mail matter to California some ten days. The necessity for its reference is not important, and I think that we can take it up now and act upon it. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. FOWLER. I move its reference to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. McCORKLE. Does that motion take precedence of mine?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. STUART. I demand the previous question; which was sustained, and under the operation thereof the bill was referred to Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Senate bill No. 248, entitled "An act for the relief of Anna Norton and Louis Foskit," was next taken up and read a first and second time by its title.

This bill provides for paying to Anna Norton and Louis Foskit, the children and only heirs of a revolutionary soldier, the amount of pension which would have been paid to said heirs had his pension been continued from the 4th of March, 1822, to the 1st day of January, 1828.

Mr. HOWARD. It is a bill which passed the Senate unanimously, and is for the relief of those persons who are in indigent circumstances; and it is a meritorious bill, I believe. It is accompanied by a short report from the Senate. I ask that the rules be suspended and that the report be read.

Mr. McNAIR. That is a bill which ought to pass. I move that the bill be put on its passage. The question was then taken upon suspending the rules, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I have a few remarks in reference to this bill.

[Cries of "Let it pass!" "Let it pass!"]

Mr. HOWARD demanded the previous question; which was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question then being "Shall the bill pass?" it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. POLK: I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

RECESS PROPOSED.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized and directed to have the Hall refitted and cleaned for the summer session, and that the House adjourn on Thursday the 13th day of May, until Monday the 17th of May, in order to allow the usual time for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state to the House that this is the usual resolution, and that the middle of May is the usual time employed for that purpose.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would inquire of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] if we took that course two years ago? I would suggest to the gentleman whether it will not be better to let this matter go over until the first of June, as the Democratic Convention will then be in session.

Mr. JOHNSON. This matter has been done frequently as early as the first day of May heretofore. We shall find great inconvenience and discomfort if we leave the Hall as it is until the first of June. I will not, therefore, make that change myself, but if the House desire to make it they can do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the resolution?

Mr. STANLY. I object to that time. I would rather have the time in June, for the benefit of one or the other of the conventions.

There being objection, the resolution was not received.

The Senate bill No. 362, entitled "An act to grant the right of way to the Ste. Genevieve Iron Mountain and Pilot Knob Plank Road Company," was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. HALL. This bill makes no appropriation of public lands. It grants simply the right to a plank road. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. GAYLORD. I object, and move to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The question was then taken, and it was so referred.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg to inquire of the Chair whether the order we are now acting under will enable us to go on until we have disposed of all the business on the Speaker's table, or whether it is limited to this day only in case the House should adjourn before it is all disposed of?

The SPEAKER. It is limited to to-day.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I wish to modify the order—to which, I presume, there will be no objection—so that we may continue at the business on the Speaker's table until it is all disposed of.

[Cries of "Object!"]

FRENCH SPOILIATIONS.

Senate bill No. 64, to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801, was next taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to reject that bill.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee, to reject the bill, is first in order.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken upon the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. The question has been very frequently put to me, what that claim had to do with foreign affairs? All I have to say upon that point is, that from 1804 down to this time, that bill, when it has been voted upon at all, has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, without a single exception, so far as I know. Hence it is that I have made the motion to give it that destination. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD.]

Mr. STANLY. If that bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will require a vote of two thirds to get it up again.

[Cries of "No it won't!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. We can take it up at any time by passing over the business on the Calendar which precedes it.

Mr. STANLY. I ask the Chair if I am not right in my supposition that it would require a two-thirds vote to take up that bill out of its order?

The SPEAKER. It would require a two-thirds vote to take it up out of its order. But it could be reached by moving to pass by the bills that stand in its way.

Mr. STANLY. Yes; we should have to pass by all the other bills before we could reach it, and that is a moral impossibility. I hope, therefore, that the bill will not be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but that it may go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and have a fair chance.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. In reply to the gentleman from Virginia, that this bill has always gone to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; I will merely remark that it has nothing to do with any foreigners at all. It is entirely and purely a domestic bill.

With reference to what the gentleman from North Carolina says as to getting up this bill, if it goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I will say that if the bill is referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or to any other standing committee, when it shall be reported back here, it must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, unless two thirds can be got to suspend the rules. The rule requires that all appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANLY. There is no appropriation in this bill.

The yeas and nays were then ordered on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. BAYLY, and HARRIS of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then put, and the tellers reported—yeas 31, noes 70.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, withdrew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, renewed it.

And the question being put, on a division, there were—yeas 84, noes 56.

So the motion was agreed to.

And the House adjourned until to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. MACE: The petition of Jacob Haines, William G. Montgomery, and 350 others, citizens of Montgomery, Fountain, Warren, and Benton counties, Indiana, asking for a post route from Crawfordsville to Oxford, via Independence and Pine Village.

By Mr. KING, of Rhode Island: The petition of Josiah Chapin and others, officers of the Rhode Island Society for the Encouragement of Domestic Industry, and of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, praying for the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau.

By Mr. KUHN: The resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, relating to the Parker patent for cast-iron submerged reaction water-wheels, and in opposition to any further extension of said patent.

By Mr. PENNIMAN: The memorial of Peter Farlick, asking relief for citizens of Salem, Washtenaw county, Michigan, on account of erroneous or false and fraudulent surveys of said township of Salem.

By Mr. SCHERMERHORN: The memorial of Samuel P. Ely and 93 others, citizens of the city of Rochester, and the county of Monroe, New York, asking for free trade between the United States and Canada.

By Mr. HIBBARD: The petition of Patience Stone, of Plainfield, New Hampshire, praying for a pension.

By Mr. DAWSON: The resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in opposition to the further extension of the Parker patent for cast-iron submerged reaction water-wheels.

Also, the resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, relative to the construction of a canal around the Falls of the Ohio river, at Louisville.

By Mr. ROBBINS: A resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, requesting their Senators and Representatives in Congress to oppose the further extension of the Parker patent for cast-iron submerged reaction water-wheels.

By Mr. HENDRICKS: The petition of citizens of Shelby county, Indiana, praying the improvement of the Ohio river at the Falls.

By Mr. MURRAY: The petition for the establishment of a mail route from Ellenville, Ulster county, via Woodbourne to Liberty, Sullivan county, New York.

By Mr. FULLER, of Maine: The petition of Benjamin F. Stinson and 40 others, citizens of Swan's Island, asking of Congress to make an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on Swan's Island, at the entrance of Old Harbor.

By Mr. McQUEEN: The memorial of Thomas Shaw and others, of Georgetown, South Carolina, for buoys and beacons in Georgetown harbor.

By Mr. PORTER: The petition of 56 citizens of Lincoln county, Missouri, asking the establishment of a certain post road.

By Mr. KING, of New York: The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Lewis, New York, praying for a grant of lands to aid in the construction of a road from Sackett's Harbor to Saratoga, in the State of New York.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 4, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a communication from the Navy Department, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, calling for information in regard to officers of the Navy receiving greater compensation than is provided by the act of March 3, 1835.

Mr. HALE. That communication is in answer to a resolution which I introduced, and I move that it be laid upon the table and printed. I wish to take this occasion to say, that the information which the Secretary of the Navy communicates shows that the rumor upon which the call for that communication was based was unfounded, and that the abuse which it was intended to reach does not exist. I am happy to be able to say that there has been one rumor of abuse which was not well founded.

The motion to lay upon the table and print was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition, very numerously signed, of inhabitants of Ocean and Shrewsbury townships, New Jersey, praying an appropriation for the improvement of South Shrewsbury river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts concerning the liquidation and payment of the claims of American citizens for French spoiliations anterior to September 30, 1800. In these resolutions the Senators in Congress are instructed, and the Representatives of the State are requested to use their best exertions to procure from the Government as full and adequate indemnities therefor, as though said claims still existed against the Government of France, and to aid by all proper means the passage of any bill for the speedy and equitable liquidation thereof; and his Excellency the Governor was requested to transmit copies of these resolutions to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State and request them to lay the same before their respective Houses. As the subject referred to in these resolutions has already been disposed of in this body, I do not ask for their reading, but simply move that they be laid on the table, and printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER also presented another series of resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, concerning the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of the Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan; which was read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

DEATH OF HON. CHARLES ANDREWS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, was received, communicating to the Senate information of the death of the Hon. CHARLES ANDREWS, a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine, and the proceedings of the House thereon.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask that the communication from the House of Representatives may be read. The Secretary read it accordingly.

Mr. HAMLIN rose and said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: The resolution which has just been read, informing the Senate of the decease of my colleague in the House, is but another admonition to us all, of the frailty of human existence. It may, as it should, subserve a useful purpose. I am, indeed, forcibly reminded, as it becomes my duty to pay a tribute to his memory, that, under the decrees of an inscrutable Providence, he might have been spared to perform a like service to mine.

He came to this city, in November last, to discharge the duties of a Representative in Congress, which had been devolved upon him by a generous and confiding constituency. I accompanied him from his home, and took rooms with him here. He was then in feeble health; but it was the hope and belief of himself and his friends, that a more genial climate than his home afforded, would restore him to health. It, however, soon became evident to all but himself, that the fatal disease, so prevalent at the North, and which allows of no mastery, was deep-seated upon him. Still, with a wonderful energy and signal fidelity, he continued to discharge all of his various duties until within about three weeks since, when, gradually failing in his strength, under the earnest solicitation of friends, he returned to his home in Maine, where he expired on the morning of Friday last, in the bosom of his family. He was a few weeks more than thirty-eight years of age. He died from a pulmonary consumption, in the spring-tide of time—in the summer of his manhood, and has gone to that repose which must succeed the toilsome day of human life.

While he was in this city it was my duty, as it was my pleasure, to be with him much of his time, to aid him in his labors, to cheer him in his distress, and to sympathize with him in his pain and trials. He endured his sickness with great fortitude, and was sustained in a most remarkable manner by that delusive hope which seems always to accompany that disease. All that kindness and careful attention could do was done by all his friends while he was here. Still, to me, and, I may say, to all my colleagues, it is a matter of consolation to know that friends, and home, and wife, all contributed to cheer and alleviate his pain and suffering in the last days and hours of his life. There is no place for those who suffer like home, and no hand to alleviate it like that of a wife.

He was a man of vigorous intellect and great energy. The speech delivered by him in the House, at this session, on American intervention, affords remarkable evidence of his energy—when it is known, as it was to his friends, that it was prepared under that state of disease which would have prostrated most men. Frankness and generosity were distinguishing traits in his character, serving to draw around him warm and ardent friends. Frankness and generosity may challenge our admiration; while they may even betray into difficulties from which cool, calculating prudence would escape.

He was a member of the legal profession, and sustained a good reputation as an advocate at the bar in his native county, where he resided and practiced. He was eminently a self-made man. Without the aid of a thorough early education; without the aid of wealth, family influence, or other adventitious circumstances, few men in Maine, of his age, have shared more of public trust and confidence. He was three times elected a member of the Legislature, and once as Speaker of the House of Representatives. He was then the candidate of his party for a seat in the other House. Afterwards he was elected to the office of clerk of the judicial courts for Oxford county, which office he filled for the term of four years; a member of the Baltimore Convention in 1848, and of the National Democratic Committee, and again a candidate for, and elected to, the seat which he held in the House at the time of his decease. All his duties were discharged to the acceptance of those who had conferred them upon him. Those public trusts, and the manner in which they were performed, convey a most appropriate commendation of the man. They are facts which speak a eulogy to his worth and his memory, more truthful and appropriate than I could pronounce.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north-wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, oh, Death!"

I mourn his loss as a sincere friend. The State is bereft of one of her distinguished sons. His constituents are deprived of the valuable and efficient services of an able representative. A widowed wife and orphan children weep, in a home made desolate, for the irreparable loss of a kind husband and an affectionate father. But into that mourning circle it is not my province to enter. Time, "with healing on its wings," will assuage their grief, and their reliance must be on "Him who doeth all things well."

The House has paid a tribute to his worth, and manifested their appreciation of the man, in their resolutions which have been communicated to the Senate. I ask the Senate to join with the House in an expression of respect for the deceased, and of sympathy for the surviving relatives, by adopting the resolution which I send to the Chair.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate receives with sincere regret the announcement of the death of the Hon. CHARLES ANDREWS, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine, and tenders to the relatives of the deceased, the assurance of their sympathy with them under the bereavement they have been called to sustain.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. ANDREWS, a certified copy of the foregoing resolution.

Mr. BRADBURY. In seconding the resolutions offered by my colleague, I desire to express my full concurrence in the just tribute of respect he has paid to the memory and character of the deceased.

Although my acquaintance with him was more recent than that of my colleague, I had yet known him long enough to appreciate his honesty of purpose, his energy and ability as a public man; and his kindness, generosity, and amiability as a citizen, a neighbor, and most of all in that family circle, which must always mourn his loss.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and on motion of Mr. BRADBURY the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 4, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. McDONALD obtained the floor.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from Maine to yield, in order to allow me to make a motion which cannot be made unless made to-day. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 14, granting to the State of Alabama the right of way and a donation of public lands for making a railroad from Selma to the Tennessee river, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. POLK. I object.

Mr. COBB. I believe I have the right to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make the motion, and it will be entered on the Journal.

OBITUARY.

Mr. McDONALD said: Mr. Speaker: I do not rise to make any motion in relation to the ordinary business of the House, but to perform the sad duty of bringing to its attention the recent death of one of its members.

The Hon. CHARLES ANDREWS, but a few days since in our midst, evidently greatly debilitated in body, yet strong in the belief that the mildness of approaching summer would impart new vigor to the springs of life, left this city on the morning of the 13th of April last, for his distant and loved home.

By the last mail from the North the delegation from Maine received the afflicting intelligence that their colleague has been disappointed in his hopes, and died at his residence, on Paris Hill, surrounded by his family, on Friday last.

Colonel ANDREWS, although comparatively a young man, had received many tokens from his fellow-citizens of their esteem and confidence.

Educated a lawyer, he was called, when the duties of his profession were hardly begun, to represent his town in the Legislature of the State. He was elected and served in that capacity for three consecutive years, and was chosen Speaker of the House of Representatives during the last year of his service in that body.

Voluntarily retiring from the Legislature, he returned to the pursuit of his profession, but was shortly afterwards elected clerk of the judicial courts for the county of Oxford.

When his official term expired, he declined a reelection to that office, and resumed the active business of a counsellor within the courts.

In September, 1850, his political friends elected Colonel ANDREWS a member of the present Congress; but here must end their tokens of confidence and esteem, as he has been called to pass that bourn from which no traveler returns.

It can hardly be said of our friend, that "a prophet is without honor in his own country," for he lived and died in his native county.

In all the various stations filled by Colonel ANDREWS, he fully met the measure of private and public expectation.

The disease which preyed upon his system, and finally proved the master of his strength, prevented his active participation in the transactions of this body; but the character of his mind, his industry and diligence in investigation, are strongly manifested in the elaborate speech on the subject of American intervention, which he prepared in this city during the very period of his illness, and published for the gratification of his constituents.

In private life he was humble and ardent—qualities which give type to character, making its excellence more prominent, and shading, "as with an angel's wing," its faults.

For his family, let his example of charity in private, of zeal in doing good to others, of resignation under affliction, bud and blossom from his grave.

For his fellow-citizens, and especially for the young men of his native county, let his successful and honorable life feed the flame of laudable ambition within their bosoms.

For his fellow-members of this House, let his death admonish us of our mortality, and teach us the lesson, that every moment of time is a moment of mercy.

In conclusion, Mr. McD. offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the House has heard, with deep regret, the announcement of the death of the Hon. CHARLES ANDREWS, late a member of the present Congress; and, from a sincere desire of showing every mark of respect due to his memory, will wear crape on the left arm for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to communicate a copy of these proceedings to the family of the deceased; and that, as a further mark of respect, the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to. And the House accordingly adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania: A remonstrance against any Congressional action in the Wheeling Bridge case.

Also, a memorial praying Congress to relieve the officials of Government from the violation of the Lord's day by secular employment.

Also, the resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania relative to the Wheeling Bridge.

Also, the petitions and documents of several assistant marshals, praying for additional compensation.

By Mr. HARPER: The petition of Ebenezer Smith, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Captain Thomas Cook, praying for five years' commutation pay for services of said Cook in the Pennsylvania Continental line in the war of the Revolution.

By Mr. THURSTON: The memorial of citizens of Newport and Providence, Rhode Island, praying Congress to establish a line of mail steam-ships to run from Newport to the principal places in the world.

By Mr. WELCH: The petition of 18 citizens of Athens county, Ohio, for a post route from Coolville to Hibbardsville, in Athens.

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE: The memorial of Benjamin F. Williams, assistant marshal for the first district of Bourbon county, in the State of Kentucky, praying additional compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York: The memorial of certain citizens of the State of New York, praying the erection of certain lights to aid in the navigation of the Hudson river.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 5, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for information in relation to civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico, while under military government; which was read, and ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petitions of the heirs of Willis Clift, an officer in the Army of the Revolution, and the heirs of Lemuel Clift, a captain in the same army, praying allowance for depreciation on commutation certificates; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. HALE presented the memorial of inhabitants of Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, praying that the transportation of the mails on Sunday may be prohibited by law, and that the employees of the Government may not be permitted to work on that day, under penalties to be provided, where the public safety does not require it; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. FISH presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of New York, in favor of the enactment of a law making grants of land upon some equal and just principle of appropriation to all the States; which were read, ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

Also, the petition of the children and heirs-at-law of Major Godfrey Rinehart, of the revolutionary Army, praying compensation for services rendered by their father during the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, a memorial of the officers of the United States steamer Missouri, praying compensation for loss of clothing and other personal effects, by the destruction of that vessel by fire, in Gibraltar Bay; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER presented certain resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, stating that Massachusetts deems it expedient and just that Congress appropriate a portion of the public lands to establish and endow a National Normal Agricultural College, which shall be to the rural sciences what West Point Academy is to the military, for the purpose of educating teachers and professors for service in all the States of the Republic; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BORLAND presented the memorial of Robert Mills, proposing a plan for a railroad and telegraphic communication to the Pacific ocean; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CASS presented a memorial of inhabitants of Michigan, praying that the transportation of the mail on Sunday may be prohibited by law; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MALLORY submitted additional documents in relation to the claim of Kennedy and Darling; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PRATT presented resolutions of the Legislature of Maryland, in favor of an appropriation for placing buoys in Pocomoke Sound, Tangier Sound, and the channels between Fox's and Watts's Islands, and between Pocomoke and Tangier Sounds; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GWIN submitted a document in relation to the establishment of a line of steam-ships between San Francisco and China; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented a petition of citizens of Iowa, praying the establishment of a mail route from Dubuque to Fort Atkinson, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the petition of Thomas G. Clinton, and the memorial of P. H. Watson and E. S. Renwick, submitted a report thereon, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Amos Proctor, reported it back, and asked that it be laid on the table; which was agreed to.

He also submitted a report on the subject, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a motion to print the memorial of Robert F. Pinkney, a lieutenant in the Navy, reported in favor of printing the same; which was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the following documents and petitions, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were ordered to be printed:

Documents relating to the claim of Captain George E. McClelland's company of Florida Volunteers;

The memorial of John A. Rogers; and

The petition of John W. W. Jackson.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi, praying a reduction in the price of the public lands in certain land districts—the Augusta, Washington, and Columbus—asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of Samuel Noah, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Charles B. Brower, late a lieutenant in the Army, dismissed by a court-martial, praying to be reinstated in his former rank, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Charles Lee Jones, praying compensation for expenses incurred in raising and subsisting volunteers for the war with Mexico, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the permanent clerks in the office of the Adjutant General, praying compensation for additional services rendered during the war with Mexico, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting Lieutenant Williams's report and survey of the Umpqua and Rogue rivers, asked that it be laid on the table; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of William Gorham, W. L. Gothrop, and others, non-commissioned officers, asking for additional pay for bravery during the Mexican war, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, praying that the corporation of the town of Baton Rouge may inclose and use as a cemetery a portion of the grounds attached to the barracks in said town, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred certain resolutions of the Legislature of New Mexico, instructing their Delegate in Congress to procure the passage of a law authorizing two regiments to be raised for the defense of said Territory, and the establishment of arsenals therein, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to provide for the better protection of the people of California and Oregon, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

MILEAGE OF DELEGATE FROM OREGON.

Mr. DOUGLAS, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the bill to regulate the mileage of the Delegate from the Territory of Oregon, reported it back without amendment; and asked that it might be now considered.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole; and, no amendment being offered, it was reported to the Senate, and the question was put, "Shall it now be read a third time?"

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to have some explanation of the objects, and the necessity of that bill, before I can give my consent to it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The explanation which I have to give is very simple. The object of this bill is to put the Delegate from Oregon on the same footing with the members from the Pacific coast. They travel the same route, and should be governed, in the payment of their mileage, by the same principle. This bill is designed to amend an act, passed in 1849, which placed a limit on the mileage of the Delegate from Oregon, to which others are not subjected.

Mr. CASS. Its object is to administer equal justice.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to repeal all laws allowing compensation to members of Congress, and substituting an entirely new system of compensation in lieu thereof.

Mr. SEBASTIAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the holding an additional term of the circuit court at Little Rock, Arkansas, and further defining the jurisdiction thereof, and of the district court.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MALLORY, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to establish a steam mail line between California or Oregon and Shanghai, with a branch to the Sandwich Islands; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

MEXICAN CONTRIBUTION MONEY.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to report to the Senate what further provision, if any, beyond what is contained in the act of March 3, 1849, for the settlement of accounts connected with the Mexican contribution money, is necessary to authorize proper and just compensation to be made to persons not included in the above act for services connected with the collection, safe-keeping, and accounting for the said money, or other useful services rendered in relation thereto.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The following bill from the House of Representatives was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

An act for the relief of Osborn Cross, of the United States Army.

BILLS PASSED.

The engrossed bill granting to the State of Wisconsin the right of way and a donation of public land for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Fond du Lac to Janesville, was read a third time; and, on the title being amended by striking out all after the word "constructing," and inserting "certain railroads in that State," it was passed.

The following engrossed bills were also read a third time and passed:

An act for the relief of Ursula E. Cobb; and An act for the relief of Jim Capers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that it had passed an act for the relief of Anna Norton and Louis Foskit, and a joint resolution authorizing the purchase of the ninth volume of the laws of the United States.

ROADS AND CANALS IN MICHIGAN.

On the motion of Mr. FELCH, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public land for the purpose of constructing a canal or railroad across the peninsula of Michigan.

This bill, it was stated, was in the established form, in which several bills for other States have recently been matured, with the exception of several amendments, to make the substitute proposed by the committee to conform to the model bill, which the Senate has sanctioned. The amendments were similar to those adopted a few days since, on the motion of Mr. WALKER, in a like bill for the State of Wisconsin.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to; and the amendment of the committee as amended was then adopted. The bill was reported to the Senate, the amendments were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

On the motion of Mr. FELCH, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, next proceeded to the consideration of the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Michigan, in trust for the Zilwaukie, Grand Traverse, and Mackinaw Plank Road Company, in aid of the construction of a plank road from Zilwaukie, on Saginaw river, to Grand Traverse Bay, thence to the Straits of Mackinaw.

The bill was amended on the motion of Mr. FELCH, to make it conform to the bill which preceded it.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan if he has not changed the original conditions on which such bills have been heretofore passed. The usual course has been to give certain limited quantities of land, but the Senator has so amended the bill that it gives so much as will be convenient for the purposes of this company. They are to have what is convenient, according to the usual wants of railroad and canal companies; but who is to be the judge of what is convenient?

Mr. FELCH. The location and survey of the road are to be made under the direction of the State authorities. They are to report to the Secretary of the Interior, and the report is to be approved by him. The amendment which I offer was proposed and adopted in the other bills of a similar character; and I now move it, so that this bill may conform to the others which have already received the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. DAWSON. I beg to state to the Senator that, if I understand him aright, so many feet, not to exceed one hundred, on each side of the road, were allowed by the original amendment; and now that is stricken out, and it is proposed to allow whatever may be convenient. That is to be decided by the State authorities, and reported by them to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; but as he will have no power to decide on the merits of the case, not having surveyed the land, he will be compelled to conform to the report of the State authorities. I see no necessity, myself, for a departure from the course pursued heretofore.

Mr. FELCH. I preferred the other form myself, but the Senate decided otherwise. The amendment now proposed was originally moved to another bill by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Davis,] who was opposed, I believe, to the main features of the bill, for the purpose of restricting the grant of land to a less amount than that proposed by the bill. I merely conform to the expressed wishes of the Senate.

The bill having been reported to the Senate, and the amendments having been concurred in, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852," the pending question being upon the amendment of the Committee on Finance to insert the following:

For additional compensation for increasing the transportation of the United States mail between New York and Liverpool, in the Collins line of steamers, to twenty-six trips per annum, at such times as shall be directed by the Postmaster General, and in conformity to his last annual report to Congress, and his letter of the 15th of November last to the Secretary of the Navy, commencing said increased service on the first of January, 1852, at the rate of $33,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance, the sum of $236,500.

Mr. HUNTER. I regret very much to be constrained to address the Senate again in relation to this amendment; but the criticisms which have been made here upon my course, render it necessary for me to say something in self-defense. I know, too, what lies behind this amendment; I know that it is the avant courier, the pioneer, of a system; and I desire to expose the pernicious effects and tendencies of that system before we are committed to it. The responsibility of the debate which has arisen in relation to this proposition rests not on me, but on those who have forced the amendment, as I think very improperly, into this deficiency bill. I will, however, endeavor to make my remarks as brief as possible, and to be as concise as may be consistent with the fair presentation of my views to the Senate.

What is this proposition? Some years ago, Collins & Co. proposed to carry the mails between New York and Liverpool in five steam-ships. They proposed to carry the mails on certain terms, to which the Government acceded. They were not able to complete the ships within the time stipulated, and asked an extension of it; we agreed to that extension. They asked for an advance of money to enable them to build the ships; and we made that advance. They asked to be relieved from one of the conditions, which required that they should employ naval officers as commanders; and we relieved them from that condition. And now, when the Post Office Department had ordered them to increase the number of their trips from twenty to twenty-six, they come here, and say they cannot perform the service unless we increase the amount of compensation; accordingly, this amendment appears—an amendment that was offered in the Committee on Finance by the Senator from California, under instructions, as I understand, from the Committee on Naval Affairs. And what is the nature of that amendment? Why, it proposes that we shall give this line of steamers $33,000 per trip, being a large addition to the existing rate of compensation; and also that the sum of that compensation shall be $236,500. Now, what does this mean? Does it mean that we shall give $33,000 each for the whole twenty-six trips? If so, the additional sum is not $236,500 but $473,000. Or does it mean that we shall give $33,000 per trip for the six additional trips? If so, the sum is not $236,500, but $198,000. Or does it mean that we shall give $236,500 in addition to what they now receive? If so, this provision in relation to the $33,000 per trip is mere surplusage.

But, sir, I venture to predict, that if this appropriation should pass, it will be so construed as to grant the company the whole amount of $33,000 per trip, or something very like $858,000 per annum.

Mr. BADGER. I do not think it is necessary that the Senator should make any prediction as to what this amendment should be construed to mean. The amendment means to increase the compensation for each and every trip from $19,250 to $33,000. And if the Senator from Virginia will allow me to explain the reason why this sum is appropriated, I would say that it is necessary to pay, during the half fiscal year which expires on the 30th of June, and commenced on the first of January, the additional compensation upon the trips for which provision was made in a former contract, and the whole compensation for the additional trips agreed upon by the Postmaster General and the Collins Company. So that there is no misunderstanding.

It is to increase the whole compensation from $19,250 to $33,000 per trip.

Mr. HUNTER. Then if it is, as I supposed it was, to increase the whole compensation to $33,000 per trip, let us see to what other consequences it will lead us. These twenty-six trips are part of a schedule. The design is, that the Collins line and the Bremen and Havre lines shall alternate with the Cunard line, making in all fifty-two trips, or perhaps only fifty, the other lines running only twenty-four trips. So that the whole service is to be performed by these three lines. If we increase the compensation of the Collins line from $19,250 to $33,000 per trip, shall we not be compelled to increase the compensation of the Havre and Bremen lines at the same rate? But I understand it is doubtful whether the contract for the Bremen lines will not expire in two or three months, that is, on the first of July. I believe the Postmaster General has taken the opinion of the Attorney General on the subject. What that opinion is I have not heard. Suppose it shall be determined that the contract does expire on the first of July, will they not order up these ships of the Collins line to take the other twelve or thirteen trips, at the rate of $33,000 per trip? So that we cannot tell to what an expense this amendment will finally lead. This, however, we may anticipate with tolerable certainty, that we shall be compelled to raise the compensation upon the Bremen and Havre lines in the same proportion that we raise it upon the Collins line. If so, the whole expense will be something like $1,500,000 per annum, including that for the twenty-four trips to be made by the Havre and Bremen lines, from Southampton to Havre, and from Southampton to Bremen. So that when we make up our minds to increase the compensation for the Collins line, we must also expect to increase it upon the others; for, with what justice can we grant it to one and refuse it to the other?

But on what pretense is it that we are asked to give this additional compensation to the Collins line? For you will observe that we have done all that we contracted to do; we have given all that we agreed to give. He comes, however, and says that unless you give him more than double what you contracted to give, it will be impossible to perform the service. What is the pretense? At one time, it was said that the British Government gave more to their line, and on that account we should increase the compensation for the Collins line. So far from that being the case, I showed the other day that the British Government did not give quite $14,000 per trip to the Cunarders; and I find that the compensation which is given to their most expensive line, which is the one to the West Indies, is only three dollars per mile. I find they have made a contract with a line for carrying the mail to Brazil, by propellers, for two shillings and nine pence per mile—less than seventy cents. I find, also, that the whole expense of the British Government for carrying the mail in steam-packets in 1849—and she had then enough of them to encircle the world once each week in the year—is only about £700,000 sterling.

Mr. RUSK. When was that?

Mr. HUNTER. The last report I saw was made in 1848.

Mr. RUSK. The expense is £809,000.

Mr. HUNTER. There may have been a more recent statement than that to which I have had access. The last that I saw was a statement from Lord Auckland, who, I believe, was connected with the Board of Admiralty in 1848. Suppose, however, that the expense is £800,000 for the whole, it is only $3,840,000. Yet here is an amendment, which is to involve an expense, at least, of $1,500,000, for maintaining one line between New York and Liverpool; with the addition, to be sure, as I said before, of these trips to Havre and Bremen. They cannot, therefore, claim the additional compensation upon the ground that the British Government give more for any line which they have in their employment; for, so far as I can ascertain, they pay only three dollars per mile upon their most expensive lines, and the Cunarders receive less.

Mr. RUSK. I am sure that the Senator does not wish to be in error in regard to the allowance made by the British Government to the Cunard company. The first allowance, before the Collins line went into operation, was £80,000 sterling. It was then increased to £145,000, immediately on the Collins line commencing their trips. That made the sum of $696,000; though I believe there was a difference of opinion between myself and the Senator from New Jersey as to the amount when rendered into American currency. I calculated the pound sterling at $4.80, and he rated it at $5; that made the discrepancy between $696,000 as calculated by me, and the $725,000 as calculated by the honorable Senator from New Jersey.

I have understood, as I before stated, that an additional allowance to the Cunard line has been made, making their pay now £175,000 per annum. I believe it is correct. The authority from which I obtain this information is highly respectable; and besides, the British Government have shown that they conceived it to be a matter of importance by increasing the amount of compensation as soon as the Collins line began to run. So that the Cunard company receive, if my information is correct, $875,000 a year.

Mr. HUNTER. Who was the authority for that statement?

Mr. RUSK. I received it from a respectable citizen of Washington, as coming from Mr. Livingston, of New York. I have no doubt of its correctness.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator must excuse me if, upon this occasion, I do not accept hearsay testimony. If the fact be so, there are official documents to show it; and, until they are produced, I shall continue to rely upon the information given us by our own Post Office Department, and heretofore used by the Senator himself. I think I shall be able to show, before I have done, that we have already gone too far in acting upon testimony derived from unofficial sources.

But assuming that he is correct, that the British Government does pay £175,000 to the Cunarders, it would be $840,000, a much less compensation per trip than is proposed by this amendment to be paid to the Collins line. It would be still a less sum for fifty-two trips than it is proposed to pay Collins for twenty-six. I say, therefore, that there is nothing in the compensation granted by the British Government which would justify the extravagant allowance contemplated by the amendment. But it is said that, if we make this grant we shall be repaid by the postages receivable by the Collins line hereafter. To test this statement, let us see what we have already received during nearly two years, of which we have an account. I have here an account, made out at the Post Office Department, and according to that statement, which is signed by the Auditor, the entire receipts by the Collins line, from the 27th of April, 1850, to the 31st of March, 1852, amount to $373,337.

As I explained before, the Collins line can be fairly credited with only two thirds of that sum, because, of the twenty-four cents paid upon each letter, the British Government receives three for inland postage, and the United States receives five cents for inland postage. Sixteen cents, then, is the postage on each sea letter; and I submit that all that the Collins line is entitled to by way of credit for postages, is sixteen cents each, for the sea letters. Five cents is to reimburse the Government for inland transportation, and it can in no manner be reckoned in favor of the Collins line. There is an item of $90,000 for closed mails, and $46,000 for newspapers. These come by the Cunard, the Havre, Collins, and Bremen lines, to say nothing of the British closed mail which we carry to the West Indies, and to credit the Collins line with one half the sum would be quite too large an estimate. The same may be said of the item of $46,858 for newspaper postage. But the amount to be credited in these cases must be conjectural, for there are no means of separating, at the Department, what is brought by the Collins line from that which is brought by others. The one half of these two items, when added to two thirds of $373,337, the letter postage amounts to about $320,000. But we pay them $385,000 per year; so that we do not receive in the shape of postages one dollar for every two which we have paid. And yet we are asked to pay more than double the amount of the present compensation, under the delusive hope that we shall be repaid by what we shall receive from postages.

I know that the honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. Rusk] referred to our share of the receipts from the Cunard line, and introduced that as a sum to be credited to the Collins line. How is that to be done? Why do we receive anything by the Cunard line? We receive five cents for inland postage upon the letters which they bring. That is no credit to the Collins line. We should receive that if there were no Collins line, and no postal treaty. So that in no manner or sense can the receipts from the Cunard line be placed to the credit of the Collins line. So far as actual receipts go, it appears, then, from accounts rendered at the Department, that while we pay at the rate of $385,000 a year, we have not received one dollar for every two which we have paid out. But we are told that we have a right to hope that we shall receive this back, because of the immense receipts of the British Government from the Cunard line, before the Collins line began to run. When I sought for the authority for that statement, it turned out to be a statement made in a speech of Mr. Thomas Butler King, upon the authority of the postmaster at Boston, who supposed that a certain number of letters went out from New York and from Boston, and supposed—that he could know nothing about—that a certain number went out from Canada to England; and who supposed, further, without pretending to know or state the actual price, that the Cunarders charged the same price for the transportation of letters which was charged by the packets. And upon all these suppositions he made an estimate, which I think I can show, from circumstantial evidence, was manifestly wrong. It was manifestly impossible that there should have been any such receipts.

Why, sir, according to that estimate, the British Government received from postages by the Cunard line, during six years, a sum amounting to $7,836,000, or something like $1,300,000 per annum. Now, it appears from the statement of our Auditors that the amount of receipts for postages for nearly two years, from the 27th of April, 1850, to March 31st, 1852, is only $1,071,000; and of this, only two thirds can be credited to the Cunard line. Add two thirds of this amount to the $320,000 which was shown to be about the amount received by the Collins line for the same time, and you will find the entire receipts of the two to be but little more than half a million of dollars per annum.

If that is the case, how is it possible that before the Collins line started, the Cunarders should have brought in $1,300,000 per annum? It is impossible. Besides, I find in a report of a special committee of the British House of Commons, in 1848, one of the members raised the question, and asked of Mr. Ward, who was connected with the British Admiralty, "whether it is not expected that a great part of the increased amount of the North American line will be repaid to the public by the increased receipts on account of postage?" Answer. "I know nothing of the receipts. I only know that the payment is a very large one, and it appears as an annually increasing charge in our estimates." And Lord Auckland, in reply to the same question, stated that he did not know, he had been told that they probably did pay, but was not aware of its being actually the fact. Evidently, they had not the advantage of the estimates of the postmaster at Boston, or they would have been better informed. I find, also, that Mr. Anderson, a member of Parliament, stated, in 1849, that "the annual loss on the three great lines—the North American, the West Indian, and the Peninsular and East Indian—was £209,000 a year." How, then, is it possible to believe that the Cunard steamers were making these large profits for the Government in the shape of postage? The fact would have been known everywhere. But the statement is incredible. I go further, however; these parties prove themselves out of court, if it be true that the Cunard vessels, in six years, produced to the Government five millions more than they cost. There was no necessity, in that case, for the aid of Government to sustain them. It was a self-sustaining business, and the two Governments ought not to interfere, but ought merely to make such mutual arrangements as would enable them to run and receive what they make in the shape of postage. If, in six years, they could make $5,000,000 beyond their expenditure, in postage alone, with what face can they ask for other relief than an increased share of the postage made by themselves? If they had yielded postages enough to repay the Government advances, they would scarcely have required an increase of those advances, as their other business would have been somewhat proportionate to the income from this source. It is possible that the Cunard line which ran cheaper than the Collins, may have repaid the Government its advances, but it is utterly improbable that they could have done much more than that, which, it must be observed, was less than one half of what is paid them now. I say there is nothing in these statistics to justify the expectation that the Collins line will repay the allowance back in the shape of postage. But I propose to examine their own statement—for mark, sir, we are called on to act here on ex parte testimony. I know nothing of the book-keeper who has been mentioned, or of the elements of those calculations, which have been sent here; but in order to test them, I went to the Bureau of Construction, and endeavored to procure a conjectural estimate of the cost of twenty trips of such steamers as Collins's. I was referred to a young gentleman, Mr. Isherwood, a chief engineer, as good authority upon these subjects. He made the estimate, and said that, without particularizing, or pretending to know what was actually expended, yet, after calculating for all the sources of expense known to him, and allowing one hundred and twenty-five passengers per trip, the result was, that $300,000 a year would be an "outside estimate" for the whole cost of making twenty trips with those boats. In that estimate, he included large wages, and a large outfit for the accommodation of passengers, and he said it was impossible to make a conjectural estimate reach a larger amount, on any data that the Department had in its possession.

I find it stated before the same committee of the British House of Commons of which I have before spoken, by Mr. Williams, the manager of "the City of Dublin Steam-Packet Company," that a steamer, to do a fair business, ought to make "twenty-four or twenty-five per cent. per annum" for the money invested in her. I presume he meant over and above the actual expense of running her.

He states it thus: "We calculate eight per cent. at least for maintenance, that is, the ordinary price for keeping the vessel always up in the most perfect order; keep her in running for business. Some companies consider it should be ten per cent.; we have found eight is sufficient. I should say the insurance alone would be five per cent., and there is the depreciation, which would require at least four, six, or seven per cent., say four per cent. at the lowest, the fund for replacing the vessel, and six per cent. profit." "You consider the ordinary life of a working steam-vessel is about twenty years, do you not?" "Yes, we have vessels twenty years old in very fine order now."

Now, sir, if Mr. Collins received what he said he did, that is, independent of what the Government gave him, the sum of $28,000 per trip, he received for twenty trips, $560,000. Adding the Government bounty of $385,000 per annum, and he would then be in the receipt of about $945,000. When you come to deduct the expense of $300,000 a year, for which all these ships ought to be run, as I am informed, and allow twenty-five per cent., or one fourth of what ought to have been the cost of the vessel—yes, sir, even more—allow him $700,000 apiece, allow that the four cost $2,800,000, you will find that the twenty-five per cent. upon $2,800,000, the estimate for repairs, insurance, profits, &c., and the $300,000 for making twenty trips, amount to a very little more than he now receives according to his own showing.

Mr. RUSK. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I have a distinct statement here upon the subject, which I have not derived from the information of a clerk. If the Senator will permit me, I will read it.

Mr. HUNTER. I suspect that I have seen it. I suppose it is published in the statement of Mr. Collins.

Mr. RUSK. No, sir; it is a written statement which is sworn to.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it is the same that I am commenting upon.

Mr. RUSK. I imagine not.

Mr. HUNTER. Very well, let it be read.

Mr. RUSK. It is as follows:

NEW YORK AND LIVERPOOL U. S. M. S. Co. }
No. 56 Wall Street, NEW YORK, December 15, 1851. }
Statement showing the actual expenses and receipts of the first twenty-eight voyages of the New York and Liverpool United States Mail steam-ships, Atlantic, Pacific, Arctic, and Baltic:

Expenses, Wages of Crew, and Provisions for same.
Average of each voyage, as above.....	$5,845 04
Fuel do do.....	8,612 28
Repairs to machinery do do.....	4,571 90
Do do extras, average as above.....	4,643 00
Ordinary expenses, including carpenters and joiners, port charges, sailmakers, light and dock dues, passengers' provisions and waiters, and other necessities, average as above.....	12,762 73
Insurance, average on above voyages.....	8,904 64
Interest do do do.....	8,438 00
Deterioration at seven per cent. per annum on do.....	8,438 00
Total.....	$65,215 59
Receipts.
Passage money, average as above.....	$21,292 65
Freights do.....	7,744 20
Mail money from Government do.....	19,250 00
	48,286 85
Deficiency average, per voyage.....	$16,928 74

Mr. Wm. L. Youle, Secretary of the New York and Liverpool United States Mail Steam-ship Company, swears that he is not interested in said company, and that the foregoing statement is true.

Mr. HUNTER. That is substantially the same statement as that upon which I was commenting. I was aware that they had a statement, sworn to by their secretary. I do not mean to disparage his testimony. I know nothing about it. I only know that the Government of the United States has had no opportunity to look into that evidence through its agents. I know that it is an ex parte statement. I do not know how it is, or why it is; the secretary cannot know whether these sums ought to be expended. It has been charged upon them that they run their ships at too great an expense. I know—and this affords the best means within my reach—for checking and correcting the calculation which proceeds from the parties interested—that Mr. Isherwood, an engineer-in-chief in the Navy Department, a young gentleman apparently of science and ability, has given a very different estimate of the proper cost of running these ships. I acknowledge that it is a conjectural estimate, but it is a conjectural estimate of one who is skilled in such matters, and I have no doubt that it is good for this: to show what the running of these ships ought to have cost if they had been properly managed and built. But I dwell upon this estimate because it brings me to another point.

It is said that if you do not give this additional compensation to the Collins line, it will go down, and we shall lose all chance of participating in the steam communication, or in the steam marine, which is to run between New York and Liverpool. On the contrary, I believe that if it were to go down, and if you were to advertise for steam-ships to carry the mails, built without reference to the war feature, which, I think, I shall show is utterly unnecessary, we would get vessels as safe as the Collins steamers and as fleet, which would carry the mails, and which could be built for the sum of $500,000, and indeed less. Yes, sir; I am told that if they were to be only sixteen hundred tons, they would cost but $400,000 apiece. Mr. Livingston—the same Mr. Livingston to whom the Senator from Texas has referred—says, in a late communication which I have seen, that if you had not required him to make them suitable for war purposes, he could have built his ships for less than what they have cost by $200,000 apiece—ships that would go as fast and have as much capacity as those he already had. I am told that if these ships had been built plainly, such ships as the Collins steamers could have been, and ought to have been, built for half a million of dollars apiece. If you take them upon that estimate, you will find that what we have already given them, in addition to what they make, would not only pay the expense of running them according to the estimate, but that they would pay a profit largely above the twenty-five per cent., which the Englishmen say is all that is necessary to cover all the charges and to rebuild the ships, and an ample profit besides. So that, so far from losing an American steam marine; so far from losing our share of the carriage of mails and the transportation of passengers and freights by steam between Liverpool and New York, if these Collins ships were out of the way, we should, on the contrary, probably raise up a set of steam-ships which would do the business upon self-sustaining principles. And I submit that it would reflect much more credit upon our legislation if we were so to manage these matters that the business should be done upon self-supporting principles, than if we were to do as is now proposed—pay Mr. Collin's losses upon a mere consideration of fleetness, merely to keep up a set of ships unfit for naval purposes, as I shall presently show, and which are unsuitable also for a commercial marine.

Now, sir, I propose to examine the pretense that they are fitted for war purposes; and I think I can show by authorities, both American and English—not only by our own officers, but by English naval officers—that they are not war steamers in any true and correct sense of the term. I begin with our own. What says Commodore Perry?

Extract of a letter of Commodore M. C. Perry to the Secretary of the Navy, dated April 9th, 1850:

"The mail steamers of the contracts of Howland & Aspinwall, of George Law, and of E. K. Collins, can be easily converted into war steamers for temporary service, in cases of particular emergency. These vessels, with little strengthening of the decks, can be made to carry each a few guns of heavy caliber, and may be rendered useful to convoy, in the transportation of troops, carrying dispatches, conveying public functionaries, &c., &c.; but their service could only be contingent, and, as before remarked, temporary.

"The cost of converting them to war purposes would be large, and in no respect would they be as economical, or in any way equal to vessels built expressly for Government service; nor should they, in my opinion, interfere in the least with the organization and gradual increase of an efficient and permanent steam navy. The use of steam-ships in our future naval operations must inevitably change in a great degree the art of naval war. Indeed, no one can imagine what changes will be effected, as well upon the ocean as upon the land, by means of the new agencies which have been more practically developed within the last quarter of a century."

Extract from a communication to the Secretary of the Navy, dated April 20th, 1850, by Charles H. Haswell, Chief Engineer of the United States Navy:

"With a large majority of the commercial ocean steamers now built, the proportions, capacities, and construction of their hulls, and the design and arrangement of their engines and boilers, are such as to render them incapable of efficient and economical war service, without incurring an expenditure in alterations and a loss of time that would not, except in cases of national emergency, be at all repaid by the ultimate durability of the hulls of the vessels in their ready transfer to, or in their economical performance of active service."

"They are so deficient in stability, without the spars and armament of a naval steamer, that it is necessary to depress them beyond their intended limits, in order to effect their passages with the probability of security."

"The steamers of Mr. Collins's line, now in progress of construction, will cost $550,000 each. Yet the boilers of these vessels, and all the other mail steamers, are of iron, their hulls are not constructed of live oak, and the vessels are without the spars, rigging, armament and equipment of naval steamers."

"The first mail steamers have proved inadequate to their service, from the insufficiency of their construction; and after but two and a half years' service, and at a cost of repairs and alterations exceeding their first cost, they are now incapable of any useful naval purpose; they therefore, an ignorance of their worthlessness existing, are estimated in our means of naval defenses; and when required for such purpose, the dependence would prove as disastrous to our national interests as their construction has been to our professional reputation as constructors and engineers."

Extract from the report of Commodore Charles William Skinner, to the Secretary of the Navy:

"7. What is the best instrument for propelling commercial ocean steamers, the paddle-wheel or submerged screw? and do these instruments require different models for the hull?"

"Answer. The paddle-wheel is generally considered the best instrument of propulsion, where speed is required; but for the purposes of war the screw would be preferable, and they do require different models.

"8. Do you consider commercial ocean steamers, as now built, convertible at once into war steamers, and capable of efficiently performing war service?"

"Answer. They cannot be converted into war steamers without great expense, and then they would be inferior to those designed solely for that purpose."

Extracts from Mr. John Lenthall's letter to Commodore C. W. Skinner, dated 18th of February, 1852:

"I would, in the first place, state, that there is some doubt whether a side-wheel steamer can be made into a war steamer of the first class.

"The machinery of such a steamer should be placed below the level of common dangers from shot; and to enable her to become a cruiser requires that she should be a perfect sailing vessel in all respects—not only in the power of the sail, but also in its position. The fullness of the extremities should be such that the motions of pitching and seending may be within moderate limits, and they should be able to support the heavy guns at their extremities, which are deemed essential to their armament. It is desirable that they should be fast vessels, but they must be capable of using as well as carrying their armament; and as no other quality can compensate for a deficiency in this, it becomes a primary consideration."

"The words 'suitable for immediate conversion into steamers for war purposes,' I understand to mean the state in which an actual ship of war would be if temporarily employed in carrying the mail or passengers.

"From the superficial examinations I had the opportunity of making, these ships appeared in about the same degree of readiness for immediate conversion into steamers for war purposes as merchant ships, according to their size and speed, are into frigates or other classes of ships of war possessing the advantages common to large vessels of a capacity permitting, if required, the additional materials necessary, and the armament and equipments required to be placed on board to make them war vessels."

Extracts from a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, from Commodore M. C. Perry, of 18th of February, 1852:

"It will be well, however, to premise that, under no circumstances, and at whatever cost, can a steam-vessel, built expressly for the transportation of freight or passengers, be made, in any manner, equal in convenience and efficiency to a vessel originally intended for war purposes, even assuming that the materials of which the respective vessels are constructed are in all respects equal. And for the obvious reason, that in the construction of a vessel of war, from the laying of the keel, every part of the vessel is, in the progress of completion, made subservient to the accommodation and arrangement of the armament, the safe-keeping of the munitions, provisions, water, &c., and the berthing of the several classes of officers, and the crew; while in mail or packet steamers—in this country—no preparations are made for any armament, the ingenuity of the builder being alone taxed to render them extravagantly showy and best adapted for the accommodation of numerous passengers and the stowage of freight."

"Question first. 'Whether the steam-ships employed in the transportation of the United States mail, under contract with the Navy Department, or any other steam-ships employed in the transportation of our foreign mails, are, in all respects, suitable for immediate conversion into steamers for war purposes, capable of carrying the armament or battery appropriate to the class specified in the contract?'"

"In answer to the foregoing [first] question, I am of opinion that they are not 'in all respects suitable.'"

"It should be taken into view that those mail steamers, if called into service as war vessels, would be considered as forming an auxiliary force to the regularly-constructed ships; and hence the impolicy of expending much money on them. The requisites of sound hulls and powerful engines, with efficient armaments, should alone be considered, leaving superfluous ornament out of the question."

Extract from note accompanying the letter from Commodore Perry, of 18th February, 1852, from which the above extracts were taken:

"The deterioration of ocean mail steamers, growing out of wear and tear and gradual decay, notwithstanding every possible repair, may be estimated at five per cent. per annum for live-oak ships—perhaps a trifle less."

I could go further, and produce you the same sort of testimony from other sources; but that is enough. I know the friends of the amendment rely upon a letter which Commodore Perry wrote, and which, I suspect, is to be interpreted into an opinion that the ships might suit for temporary purposes—for transportation, and kindred services. I looked into the proceedings of the special committee to which I have referred, raised in the British Parliament, in 1848, upon the subject of steam-ships, and I found there the same opinion ex-

* Extracts from the "Minutes of Evidence taken before the Select Committee on Steam Navy," ordered by the British House of Commons in 1849.

At page 73 of the printed report, is the testimony of Captain W. H. Henderson, R. N., C. B., as follows:

"741. 'Do you think that vessels of that packet class, taking a superior class of vessels, might be made useful in the case of war, for channel purposes and protecting our coast, and for looking out?' 'Very useful.'"

"742. 'But not to supersede men-of-war?' 'No; I consider that they are a different kind of vessel; they are made for working against the head-winds of the Atlantic, and they are under-rigged, and are not intended for sailing.'"

At page 81, same report, is the testimony of Captain H. D. Chads, R. N., as follows:

"892. 'Do you think that they would supersede the use of steam-ships built expressly as ships-of-war?' 'I should apprehend that we should make a sad mistake if we attempted to do away with our own. I think that under no circumstances could you apply them as men-of-war, strictly in the meaning of the term 'men-of-war.'"

"893. 'Do you not conceive that they are so well adapted for fighting purposes, and for keeping company with fleets, as ships that are built for the Royal Navy?' 'I apprehend that they would be always required to be under steam, to keep company with our fleet; I do not think, from their rig, that they have sufficient canvas to enable them to keep way with our vessels without steaming; that they would be constantly under a certain portion of steam, consequently their coals would be soon exhausted.'"

At page 89, of same report, is the testimony of Rear-Admiral Sir Charles Napier, K. C. B., as follows:

"1015. 'Would you confine the use of those vessels to the channel, or would you make use of them by sending them abroad into our Colonies?' 'I do not think they would be fit to go abroad with that fitting, which I think they ought to have at all times, because it is too late to begin to fit when the enemy is on your shores. I do not think they would be fit to go abroad, because they would be too small, and as the greater number of large ones would be abroad at the time, you would not be able to get hold of them.'" pressed by Captain Henry D. Chads and by Captain Henderson, and by Admiral Napier, all of the Royal Navy. They said that their merchant steamers could not supersede the war steamers, and were not equal to them for war purposes. They all said that such steamers were not fit to send abroad, and would burn out all their coal before they could get abroad. But they said—that is true in their country—that they might be eminently serviceable for purposes of defense in time of an invasion—to defend the channel in case their country should be invaded. It is evident that this examination was made under great apprehensions of a French invasion, for their inquiries seemed to be directed to that contingency. Upon being questioned, in order to ascertain whether they could make war steamers out of those ships, Captain Chads said, that if they were strengthened, fore and aft, so as to make them capable of carrying guns, they would lose the quality of superior speed; and he intimated that a British war steamer was not much more valuable for the quality of superior speed, if she was not able to fight anything of her cost and size. Of what advantage was that to her, but to run away?—and was that a quality which was valued in a British steamer? Sir, if that is a quality which is not to be valued in a British steamer, I would ask whether it should be highly valued in an American steam-ship of war?

Now, if you will look to the testimony of Commodore Perry, you will find that he had some ideas of the same sort, for he italicizes the words “for temporary purposes.” And why for temporary purposes? You could not use them long. They would soon burn out their coal and use up their fuel. They could not carry guns enough for any extensive service. But they might be made eminently useful for channel defense in England, because in such a country, without very many forts, they could prevent for a while the landing of troops, and in such a case a check for a few hours might save infinite mischief to the country.

They could carry armament enough, too, to protect the coasting commerce against privateers. I submit, however, that when you look at our position on the map of the world, and to that of England, you will find that the circumstances of the two countries are very different. We should want such steamers only for purposes of transportation. We might now and then need a swift side-wheel steamer to bear dispatches. We might want them to transport our troops, and ordnance, and stores; but our own commercial marine would furnish steamers enough of that character. We should find no difficulty even if we did not give the bounties which are proposed in the amendment.

But, sir, I go further: I am authorized in saying, from all that I can see, and from all that I can learn, that it is now an admitted fact amongst professional men, that steamers with the paddle-wheel cannot be made efficient war-steamers—that the screw-propeller is the only mode of making a war-steamer which can be efficient. That is distinctly proved as the opinion of those English officers who were examined at the time to which I have referred. I have recently read a book of great interest, written by Captain Halstead, of the British Navy, in 1850, in which he demonstrates that fact. The screw-steamer is superior for these reasons: 1. She can carry a whole broadside, which a paddle-wheel steamer cannot carry; 2. Her machinery can be effectually protected from shot—and I am told that it was but last year, or the year before, that a British paddle-wheel steamer was disabled by a single shot fired from a slaver off the coast of Africa; 3. She can go to sea with a much less supply of coal, for she uses steam only as an auxiliary power to sails. She is capable of being built upon the finest models for strength and speed, which cannot be done with the side-paddle, because the necessity of carrying the armament fore and aft impairs the force of the ship.

The propeller thus having the advantage in all of these elements—that of carrying greater weight of metal, that of going to sea at less expense, that of fighting with greater safety, and of being built on a finer model—there can be no possible reason for supposing that a steamer with paddles would come into competition with a screw-propeller as a ship-of-war. The French, as I understand, are using the screw-propeller. The English are now using it, as auxiliary to sails, and applying it to their ships-of-the-line. I am told that they are now putting a screw-propeller in a ship which is twelve feet longer than the Pennsylvania. They are building for war purposes now none but screw-propellers. I believe that it is the universal opinion of the Navy, certainly it is the opinion of every officer of our Navy with whom I have conversed, that there is no other mode of using steam, which is adapted to war purposes, except by the screw-propeller. Captain Halstead gives the reason for this. He says, to reduce the matter to an axiomatic form, that she screws best with the aid of her sails, and sails best with the aid of the screw; while a paddle-wheel steamer paddles best without her sails, and sails best without her paddles. In the one case the two are auxiliary to, while in the latter case the one mars the efficiency of the other. Another difference, as Captain Halstead says, is, that with a screw-propeller you can go to sea with a small supply of coal, and carry a large freight of other things, whilst with the side-wheel paddle, you have to go to sea with a large supply of coal and a small supply of other things. He says it has been proved in the merchant service, that the auxiliary screw-steamers can carry freight at twenty-two per cent. less than the others. He says, further, that the expense of a ten-thousand horse power, with paddle-wheel machinery, would be £245,000; just one half that amount would be necessary if you use the screw-propeller. He says, also, that the very service for which the British are paying paddle-wheel steamers 12s. 6d., or about $3 per mile, to perform, was offered to be performed by screw-steamers at 2s. 9d. a mile; so that the difference between the cost of employing screw-steamers and paddle-wheel steamers, was the difference between paying 2s. 9d. or 3s. 4d. a mile, and 12s. 6d. a mile. I find, too, that in the examination, in England, in 1848, Lord Auckland says the English are using the screw-propeller to a large extent, as an auxiliary power in the merchant service; and Mr. Ward said that they had answered perfectly, in the Holland trade, when they had been tried. He was asked in 1848: “Are you aware whether it has become common in the merchant service to use the screw-propeller?” He answered:

“It is extending in the merchant service, and has produced some very curious results. The experiments had been particularly successful in the case of those small schooners which are built for the trade with Holland, and then they seem to have succeeded completely. They have engines which occupy only one seventh of the vessel, while the engines of the Blenheim occupy nearly one third. And they attain very considerable speed, eight knots, eight and a half knots, and nine knots. The screw is never raised. The apertures are all immersed, and the voyage of two hundred and sixty miles, upon a long series of experiments, averages about thirty-six hours.”

I was shown, this morning, a letter just received from Boston, from a gentleman of high authority and great experience in such matters, who says:

“My opinion is so strongly in favor of propelling with strong auxiliary steam, that I believe if two steamers were to be sent on a survey, or a naval cruise of any kind, the paddle starting to-day, and the propeller being laid down a month hence, at the end of eighteen months the latter would be ahead in her work, at a cost fifty per cent. less! In short, the paddle must be constantly near the coal-yard and the machine-shop, while the other would be independent of both.”

Indeed he says much to justify the opinion, that the screw propeller, as an auxiliary, is destined to make a revolution in the merchant service. It is a fact of which I have no sort of doubt. I was told, on Monday, at the Navy Department, that they had made a comparison of the log of the “San Jacinto,” before her machinery broke down, with the log of the “Saranac,” the “San Jacinto” being a propeller, and the “Saranac” a side-wheel steamer. The “Saranac” beat the “San Jacinto” less than three per cent. in point of speed, while the superiority, in every other respect, was with the “San Jacinto.” Captain Halstead says, at pp. 62 and 63:

“Of armed vessels, the ‘Terrible’ has been selected for comparison, because she is the most powerfully-equipped paddle-steamer in the navy, whether in guns, engines, or sails; and after carefully rejecting all distances performed when towing, when cruising, or when disabled in machinery, I find, from the special reports of the ‘Terrible,’ that she performed, in 1846, ‘47, and ‘48, a distance of 15,731 miles, and shows, for this period, a mean rate, or ‘duty of ship,’ of 6.83 knots per hour. This is a vessel of 1,847 tons, and 800 horse power, or with a proportion of one horse power to every 2.31 tons. But it must be observed, with regard to the armed steamer, that, unlike the sister ship in mail employ, she is required, for the sake of economy, to use her canvas whenever possible; and, of the whole distance completed by the ‘Terrible,’ 6,277 miles, or forty per cent. of it, was performed under sail alone.”

“Now, we have seen that the two auxiliary vessels which have been quoted as standards, performed eighty-nine voyages in the year 1847, making good a distance of 45,548 miles, and showing a mean rate, or ‘duty of ship,’ of 8.25 knots per hour.”

Again: he says it has been found, inasmuch as the screw and sails are auxiliary to each other, that, instead of having to build them of clumsy moulds, as heretofore, these steamers can be built of the very finest forms. If I were to hazard a conjecture, I would say that I have no doubt the day will come when the screw propeller, as an auxiliary, will be used with our fast clippers, and make the finest merchant ships in the world. I say, therefore, that the Collins steamers are not suitable for war purposes, not only upon this testimony in relation to them, but upon other considerations.

I omitted the testimony of Lieutenant Roberts, of the English navy, in 1848. He was asked whether the American steamers could carry guns? He said, no better than their own, and not quite so well as their own merchant steamers. I say, that these facts prove undoubtedly, that, according to the opinions of all, or almost all, the professional men of eminence, both in the British navy and in ours—and my friend from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] tells me that such also is the practice and opinion in the French navy; it is considered that no other steamer is fit for purposes of war except the screw-propeller. So that if we are to expend the money which ought to be expended in the gradual increase of the Navy in thus keeping up side-wheel merchant steamers, we will not only expend it in a service to which it will not be ultimately useful, but we take away a fund which is necessary, in order to increase the Navy in a mode which will be useful to it, and which will enable us to exercise our officers. Why, what is our policy in relation to the Navy? We seek to maintain just such a Navy, and no more, as will preserve the police of the seas, so far as it is incumbent on us to maintain that police. We also keep up a skeleton arrangement, capable of extension and expansion in time of war. To make that skeleton arrangement efficient, it is indispensable that we should have all possible means of exercising and training our young officers. How can we do it, if we expend the money on steamers to be commanded by merchant captains? And that is the case, I understand, with these Collins steamers. Ought we not to expend the money which we can devote to such services upon war steamers of proper models, and with proper machinery, so that our officers may command them, and be exercised in a steamer with all her appointments, and complete as to machinery, sails, and battery?

I go further. I have seen rather a striking view of this question suggested by Commander Dupont, in a very interesting essay which he has written on our national defenses, and I find that, to some extent, the same view was presented, on an examination before the committee of Parliament of which I spoke, by the manager of one of the steam-packet companies. Commander Dupont says, that in time of war we should injure our commerce by withdrawing the commercial steamers, and after all, have ships not well suited for such a service, and that the alterations necessary to be made to fit them for war, would greatly impair their commercial capacities.

The manager of the British steam-packet company to whom I refer, when questioned by the committee of the British House of Commons as to the ability of his company to furnish their steamers, if there should be an invasion, for war purposes, says, we could furnish a part of them; but * Extracts from a work entitled “The Screw-fleet of the Navy,” by Captain E. P. Halstead, of the English Navy. He commends the adoption of screw-ships in the Brazil mail service, for the following reasons: At page 87—

“Because it is a principle which is capable of reducing public expenditure, at the same time that it improves general commerce. Because it takes less out of the public purse, and puts more into private ones; while paddle propulsion draws very largely upon both; for, instead of carrying goods, the paddle is compelled to carry coals only, and then it calls upon all of us to pay for the expense of burning them.”

And again, he says, at page 89:

“I am not in error when I state that the practical difference between paddle propulsion and screw propulsion, that is to say, between large ships carrying large cargoes of coal and small cargoes of goods, amounts to this, viz: That the auxiliaries are able to make a profitable return upon freights which are twenty-two per cent. lower than those demanded by the full powered steamer.”

it would be a very serious disadvantage to commerce if you were to take them all away. Why, in time of war, the ships that we should want more than all others for commercial purposes, would be these steamers, which are fleet enough to run away from privateers, and might carry guns enough to protect themselves against them. So that, if you were to attempt to unite a naval and commercial marine in relation to steam—and you do not attempt it by vessels moved by sails, (and the same reason, it seems to me, should apply to both)—you will injure both; because if you attempt to make the vessels somewhat stronger and heavier for war purposes, in time of peace, they will not be so well fitted for carrying freights and passengers; and if, in time of war, you take these steamers for military purposes, you would not have steamers so well fitted for that service, as if they had been originally constructed for war alone.

I say, then, that so far as the clause requiring these steamers to be fitted for war purposes is concerned, it is a humbug. I say that these ships of Collins are not suitable for war purposes, unless you discredit the testimony of all these officers. It is to be remembered that Captain Halstead was the officer appointed by the British Admiralty to try experiments between the relative powers of the screw and the side-wheel paddle steamers. I say you must discredit all this testimony, if you maintain that the Collins ships, or any ships built upon that plan, are suitable for war purposes. They may be suitable for carrying supplies, and for dispatch vessels, but there is no necessity for Government bounties to secure them; we shall be always able to command enough of them, from our commercial steam-marine.

Then, upon what other pretense can these grants to the Collins line be sanctioned? Why, it is said that we make these grants for carrying the mail. I crave your attention a little while on this point. It is a principle in relation to our domestic mail arrangements, that we make the business of carrying the mail pay for itself. We will not extend it further than it can be extended when it supports itself. It is true that we have made lately an experiment in relation to cheap postage, and that it is yet doubtful whether in the first years it will repay or not; but it was done under the distinct hope and assurance, so far as assurance could be given, from conjectural estimates, that the receipts from postages would repay the cost of transportation after the rates were reduced. There may be some obligation to carry the mails here at home in our own country which cannot be otherwise supplied, at a greater cost, than the postage would repay; but there can be no obligation upon us to carry mails between our people and foreign nations at a greater expense than will be repaid to us again. As a proof that it is not the mail service, but something else that is really moving us, I would ask, does any man doubt, that, if all the ships belonging to the Collins line were to be sunk to-morrow, the British ships would bring us the mail? Does any man suppose that, if we were to advertise and dispense with the unnecessary clause in relation to war purposes we would not have ships of our own that could be made suitable for carrying the mail, and suitable for commercial purposes? I have no sort of doubt but that in this mode, a steam system would be developed which would support itself from the proceeds of postage and the natural profits of their mode without any other assistance from Government.

In order to test this pretense in relation to carrying the mails, I ask, who can doubt but the English would carry them for us? Suppose we did not believe that the effect of it would be to enable the English to build up their commercial marine, but that they would only be able to sustain a few mail steam-vessels, and should we then think of interfering with them: would we not say that if they were foolish enough to do the business for nothing, or for rates that would not pay us to engage in the enterprise, they might do it. And certainly we should not run the risk of breaking down our post office establishment by saddling on it an expense vastly greater than would be repaid by postages. But we are not willing to do that. Why? Because we are afraid that England will build up a commercial marine in that way, and we want to build up a commercial marine of our own; and in order to enable these parties to maintain themselves, and in the pursuit of that object, we are about to resort to a system of bounties; and that is the point to which I wish to bring the attention of the Senate.

If, then, there is any faith to be placed in human testimony—in the testimony of experienced professional men—I think I have shown that such steamers as those of the Collins line are not fitted for war purposes. I have shown, also, that if we look at it as a mere post-office matter, we cannot give these large sums which will not be repaid in the shape of postages without departing from the practice which we pursue here at home, where we make the business of carrying the mail pay for itself. What other reason, then, can be given for it, except that of the establishment of a commercial marine? I say that it is building up a commercial steam marine by a system of bounties and monopolies to enable these men, by money from the Treasury of the United States, to carry freights and passengers lower than other ships can carry them. I say that it is a system of bounties and monopolies, because, in addition to all that they make in the shape of postages, and from freights and passengers, they require this large grant from the Government to enable them to procure a business which other individuals prosecute at their own expense. And thus in a large branch of the general business of the country you propose to give them special advantages. For this sum is to be given that they may thus be enabled to carry freights and passengers lower than other ships that might be called into existence by private enterprise for the same purposes. Now, can anybody show me an argument against the protective system in any other form that does not apply to this? I know the Senator from Texas [Mr. Rusk] said that this word "monopoly" has destroyed many a good thing. I do not know what it has destroyed in this country. It was used against the United States Bank. I suppose the Senator does not regret its use in connection with that institution. It was used in relation to a protective tariff. I know he does not regret it in connection with that. Then I know of nothing else which this term has ever been used to attack. I say that all the objections which apply to a protective tariff, as I showed the other day, applied to this system. You propose to give these vessels a bounty from the Government to enable them to carry freights and passengers at lower rates than vessels which rely upon their own resources. It is true, they say, that the British protect their vessels, and therefore we must protect ours. Do not the manufacturers say the same thing? But why should I pursue this branch of the argument any further? The truth of what I say is obvious upon its face. Now, I say that the answer to all these appeals should be the same that is given in relation to the tariff. The business will either pay or it will not pay. It is either self-sustaining or it is not. If it will pay, it is self-sustaining; we believe that our people are not afraid of competition, but that they will be as able to take a share of it as anybody. If it be not self-sustaining, then, the more of this business which the English do, the more they will lose by it, and the less temptation and inducement there is for us to enter into it.

But I have been reproached with using a sectional argument in relation to this matter. I said that the same sectional argument which applied against the protective system applied against this, if we were to give New York these lines of steam communication, and refuse them to other cities. I say so again. Suppose we should pass a law that we would pay out of the Treasury of the United States the freight upon all goods carried into New York from abroad; would not that be a bounty—a monopoly given to New York? And who would give the sectional vote, he who voted this special privilege to New York, or he who voted to deal equally by all the sections of the Confederacy, and all the cities of the Union? Sir, I am willing to do for New York all that I would do for any other city; but I am not willing to do more. I do not believe she asks more than justice. She certainly ought not to ask it. A sectional man, in such a case, would be—not he who opposed it, but he who favored it. Suppose it were proposed that you should build a line of railroads to connect with New York, and with no other city on the coast of the Union, who would be the sectional man, he who would vote for such a system, or he who would oppose it?

This is no supposed case that I am putting. It so happened that during this winter some of the iron-masters of Pennsylvania were here—gentlemen who represented the great iron interests of the country, and who believed it was not sufficiently protected. They were stating their case to me, and estimating the various elements which entered into the cost of home-made and foreign iron. I said to them, upon looking over the list, did you make sufficient allowance for freights upon the foreign iron? "Yes, (said they,) and too great an allowance; for these steamers often bring iron almost as ballast. They sometimes bring iron for little or no freight. They are doing this business to an extent which becomes annoying to us." Now, I wish to know, if we go into this system of bounties by which we are to pay the owners of these steamers for their losses, and enable them to carry freight and passengers upon their own terms, if they will not bring goods into New York for a less price than they can be carried, at the same speed, anywhere else. Will Philadelphia have an equal chance—will Baltimore have an equal chance in the great business of importation? Why, suppose this Government were to pass a law saying they would pay out of the Treasury the freight upon all goods brought to New York, would they not all go there? Or suppose they should pass a law, not going to that extent, but still a great way, saying we will not pay the whole, but we will pay the half, would we not be giving a preponderant advantage to New York? Would we not be placing her in such a position that no other city could rival or enter into competition with her for the foreign trade? What is it that we propose to do? Why, sir, twice a week two of these immense steamers leave the port of New York loaded with freights to be carried, partly at the Government expense, and twice a week they enter it. An American and an English steamer kept up by a system of government bounties—kept up by government assistance—so that they may actually carry freights cheaper than vessels that move by sails, or steam-vessels that would be started by private enterprise. They would thus make one hundred and four trips a year. Does any one suppose this would not have a serious effect, not only as between the different cities, but as between different interests in the community? How will it affect the vessels that move by sails? Nay, will it not prevent our creating a steam marine of the kind which might be self-supporting and self-sustaining?

I see it stated that there is a scheme already to get up steam-propeller merchant ships, using the screw as an auxiliary to run between Liverpool and New York. But how can they run? How can they be sustained, when the United States Government and the English Government interfere, to enable their paddle-wheel steamers, which are fleet, to carry in less time the same commodities at the same rates? If you want to get up a steam navy, get up a steam marine; and if you want to get up a steam marine, leave it where you leave your other commercial marine. Leave it where you leave the ships that move by sails. Leave it to a free competition. I have no doubt, that if you were to do that, a steam marine would spring up upon self-supporting principles; such a one as every American heart might rejoice in and be proud of. But I see nothing to gratify national pride in such bungling legislation as this, which would keep up, at an immense expense, a kind of steamers alike unsuitable for naval and for commercial purposes, and having a tendency to keep down those which would suit the demands of trade, and be started by private enterprise, if the Government did not interfere.

Now, Mr. President, I acknowledge (and it was a matter which escaped me when I was alluding to the sectional views of the matter) that New York has natural advantages which the Government should recognize, and which I would be the very last man to refuse her. I believe that such a line of commercial steamers could be sustained at New York by the profits on freight and passengers and postages alone; and I would give the postages to these steamers, not only there, but elsewhere. I believe that the effect of this system would be that, for some time to come, we should have steam lines from New York only. But that would be a temporary advantage to which she would be fairly entitled. It would result from her position, from her population, from her wealth. I believe that every place and every city ought to enjoy the advantages which fairly and naturally belong to her.

I am not, therefore, giving up the undisputed supremacy on the seas to Great Britain. I am not for destroying the chances of a steam marine. On the contrary, I am in favor of those principles, and of that system which would enable us, most surely and most certainly, to build up a commercial steam marine upon self-supporting principles. I therefore protest against being held responsible for those conclusions from my arguments which the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] chose to draw from them. Sir, I will not agree to be responsible for any man's conclusions from my premises or from my arguments. I am responsible for my own, and I support my views of the case, not for the purpose of sweeping American ships from the ocean, but for the purpose of placing them more surely, more safely, and more certainly there. It is true, I do not believe in this protective system. I never did. I see no more reason why we should protect a steam engine because it floats, than we should protect one which is stationary in a factory.

If I have succeeded in stripping this scheme of the pretenses that these ships are fit for war purposes, or that we would be justified in anything like such an expenditure for post-office purposes, I have shown that it is nothing more nor less than a naked proposition to maintain a steam line by a system of bounties. I know that the Senator from New York relied upon a letter from Commodore Perry, to prove that these ships might be converted into war steamers. If that letter is to be interpreted as he interpreted it, then I discredit Commodore Perry as a witness by his own testimony, which I have read; and I could have read still more. But I have no idea that Commodore Perry meant to say that, in the true technical sense of the term, these could ever be converted into war steamers. He meant that they could be used for temporary purposes; that they could be used to transport supplies and troops. I have no idea that he could have meant that they can be converted into real, effective war steamers, when he wrote the letter which has been read. I have no idea of it; because I presume that Commodore Perry has consistent opinions; and I find, upon sifting the testimony of naval men, of officers both in England and in this country, that when they talk of these commercial steamers being used for war purposes, they mean only for temporary services; they mean for coast defense, for they all say that you could not send them abroad; that you could not send them far to sea, as their coals would soon be exhausted. The naval officers all say that you cannot trust them for war purposes, because they cannot carry, in proportion to their size, armament enough. You could only use them at home, and for purposes of mere coast defense. Now, I submit that, situated as we are, we are under no necessity of establishing, by a system of steam monopolies and bounties, and at such an expense, a commercial marine for that purpose. We but embarrass them by the war feature, and we injure ourselves by attempting to substitute them for war steamers.

But the Senator from New York was not content with arraying living testimony against me. Like another Witch of Endor, he called the dead prophet to the stand. By some touch of his necromantic art, he transported us nearly a century back, and called up Edmund Burke to astonish the world once more with the wonderful range of his vision into the dark and distant future. But, sir, I must admit, that upon that occasion he showed more courage than Saul, and more presence of mind than the Witch of Endor; for while he had his prophet up, he made good use of him. I have examined that vision, and the best description I can give of it is, that the Senator made him prophesy very nearly the whole of what is contained in one of our annual documents on "Commerce and Navigation." But he did not give the whole of it. I also have seen a version of that prophecy—of that vision. The modesty of the Senator from New York forbade him to give the whole of it. I can repeat it to you, sir; not like the Senator from New York, in the very words of Edmund Burke, but I can give you the substance. It concluded somehow thus:

"And on the 27th of April, there shall appear in the Senate of the United States a man from New York who shall prove to their satisfaction that he can think as I would have thought, and that he speaks as I would have spoken; and he will establish before the world his title to the character of the American Edmund Burke."

Sir, I thought it but an act of justice to the Senator to give the suppressed passage; for I am sure it was only his modesty that prevented him from reading it. [Laughter.]

There was one point, however, on which I would have been greatly gratified if we could have had a little further information from the one or the other Burke; and that is, I should have been delighted if either of them would have told us what the Collins line is to cost the Government of the United States before we are done with it. Why, unless we get this information, I shall think the Senator from New York is but an ex post facto prophet after all, for the main, the material point, is unanswered.

The Senator from New York was kind enough to excuse me for my opposition to this amendment. He says that my position on the Finance Committee, and my habit of watching appropriation bills have narrowed my mind. Indeed, he says it has that effect generally on persons placed on that committee. If that is the case, it ought to be used as a sort of school of practice. I know of some two or three Senators here who might have need of it. I have a friend from North Carolina, who ought to be put forthwith at the head of that committee, if it would have any such effect. [Laughter.]

Well, Mr. President, if I had ever been elevated to that region where reigns a law higher than the Constitution, higher than the objects for which it was formed, and higher than the principles on which it is founded, I do not know but that I might have enjoyed a horizon as extensive as that over which the delighted vision of the Senator from New York roamed with so much self-complacency. Perhaps if I could see more, like him I should want more. But as I do not look beyond the pale of the Constitution for the field of my political exertions, I am content to look within it for their objects. In point of fact, however, we belong to different political schools. Different! Ay, sir, opposite schools. There is a class of politicians, I know, who believe that individuals are incapable of attending to their interests; who believe that industrial systems have no capacity of self-development; but that it is the duty of Government to inform the one and direct the other; who believe, not that the course of the Government should be directed by the will and the intelligence of the people, but that the course of individuals should be directed by the Government; who are restless unless they are doing something, and who think they are doing nothing unless they arrest the course of nature, and disturb the natural flow of events; men who have long since come to the conclusion at which Washington Irving said the good people of Connecticut once arrived, who, according to him, determined to abide by the laws of God until they could make better for themselves.

Sir, I belong to a very different, and to an opposite school. If that Government is best which is self-developed by the genius of the people, out of the workings of their own peculiar interests, I believe that, of human characters, those are strongest which are self-inspired; whose steel is tempered in the internal fires of that forge whose secret beatings are known only to Him who owns it, and to Him who made it. I believe that the industrial systems rest upon a broader, firmer, and a more secure basis, when they are developed by the suggestions of individual interest, and directed under the conservative checks of a free and universal competition. I go further. I believe that if society would make a progress which shall be at once rapid and safe, it must throw open all the prizes of life, whether of profit or of honor, whether of fortune or of fame, free to a general and universal competition; and that the genius of our people, and the character of our institutions, especially require, in awarding these prizes, that "deus digniori" should be our motto. Let the best and worthiest take them. I know that this makes sharp work and imparts a sterner cast to the conflicts of life; but I know of no other mode by which the advancing column of society will be led by those who are fittest to lead it. Sir, I know that under such a guidance, and under the impulses which sometimes prevail, it will occasionally strike off at a fearful pace; that the timid will shrink, and that the fearful will faint under the heat of the march. But these are the accidents and the chances of life. In the words of divine command, "Let the dead bury their dead." The word is forward and onward, the mighty column marches far away into the future, behind whose inscrutable shadows lie concealed the secrets of human destiny.

Sir, I believe that the administration of our Government must be based upon some principle as wide and as just as this, or that our experiment will be a failure. I believe that if we undertake to protect, to foster, and sustain every interest, this Government will become one vast jobbing concern; that temptations will beset our legislation until corruption becomes the order of the day; and that the centralization of power will go on here, until nothing shall be left to the States, and but little to the people. I believe that in a country so large as ours, with interests so vast, society must work much of its own machinery; and that then, what will be necessarily left for us to do, will be full as much as a free representative Government can possibly manage. If we go further, and insist upon taking more subjects under our charge, in such a country as this, to accomplish it we shall require a higher degree of centralization, and a more refined and despotic system of organization.

I know that these views may seem narrow and poor to those who believe that it is the duty of Government to attend to everything, to sustain and support every interest; and who believe that they are doing good when they attempt it. But I would appeal to them, to the most considerate and experienced amongst them, when they come to make a calm retrospect, to say whether they do not find that, in nine cases out of ten, when they interfered for such purposes, they have failed in their expectations, in their generous aspirations, if you will, after the good of their race.

They may call it a protection of industry, an encouragement of enterprise; they do indeed become the artificers of the fortunes of a few; but at what an expense to the many, whose just claims are forgotten or overlooked! They satisfy the demands of importunate capitalists who clamor around the Treasury door; but it is done at the expense of the silent millions who toil for their daily bread, too little heedful of the measure in which they are taxed or the manner in which the money thus raised is afterwards distributed.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I do not intend to trespass on the time of the Senate. If a stranger had happened to be in the gallery, one who had not heard what the question was, he would be very much astonished to find, after all the admonition that we have had against monopoly and against drawing money out of the Treasury, that we have a company now performing a certain number of mail trips between Liverpool and New York for which we pay $385,000 a year, and that the proposition now before the Senate was jointly to require them to perform an increased service for which, upon the recommendation of the Postmaster General, we propose to give them $558,000 a year instead of $385,000 for the service they now perform.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment requires the performance of twenty-six instead of twenty trips a year, and the additional six trips do not double the service.

Mr. RUSK. It largely increases the service; and I see by the statement before me, furnished on the 15th December last, that they had then only performed twenty-eight trips or voyages in nearly two years.

But I simply rose for the purpose of showing how the British Government act. The Senator from Virginia has shown to the Senate how some of these officers talk. It is unnecessary for me to account for or answer the prejudices which may have found expression from certain officers of the British Government or Navy. I propose to read a paragraph to show how that Government acts:

"The departure of the expedition from Bombay to Rangoon, with 6,000 troops, for the prosecution of the Burmese war, furnishes additional evidence, if any were wanting, of the value of a commercial steam marine for the purposes of naval warfare. The squadron, consisting of five first-class steamers, is intended to force the passage of a river defended by formidable and extensive fortifications, and of course it was necessary that it should be heavily armed, and capable of great endurance. But one of the ships employed was a steam-frigate, belonging to the Royal Navy; the other four were the East India Company's steamers, appertaining to a mail line like our own Atlantic and Pacific lines, and constructed upon similar principles for a similar purpose. Orders arrived at Bombay, on the 20th of February, to convert them at once into war-steamers. This was accomplished, and they were submitted to the inspection of the Governor General in three days. On the 24th they set sail. One of them, the Feroze, is particularly mentioned. She was a vessel of 1,500 tons burden, and was taken directly off her route, armed with a heavy battery of 8-inch pivot guns, and every requisite alteration made in less than three days. Another of the same size was in dock, and was got in readiness with equal celerity; and all of them were pronounced by the naval authorities on the station as strong and efficient as any ships of their class in the regular service, and as readily capable of being fitted for the purposes required as any in the navy-yards of Great Britain. The only difference between the East India mail steamers and our own is, that the latter, with equal strength and capabilities for adaptation, are faster and of greater burden."

Mr. HUNTER. Can the gentleman inform me whether those steamers are screw or side-wheel steamers?

Mr. RUSK. They are side-wheel steamers.

Mr. HUNTER. My impression was that they were screw steamers.

Mr. RUSK. If the Senator had pushed his investigations as to the relative advantages of the side-wheel and screw steamers, he would, I think, have found that the English Government are now converting their sailing ships into steamers. A sailing vessel, built for war purposes, cannot be converted into a side-wheel steamer; but it can, I understand, at very little cost and expense, be converted into a screw propeller. That is what the Senator will find at the bottom of the cry in England about the advantages of screw steamers. When the experiment comes to be made, I think it has been found that about six miles an hour is the average speed that can be made by screw-propellers.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I have some remarks that I would like to make on the subject now before the Senate; but at this hour I would prefer not to go on until to-morrow.

Several SENATORS. Move an Executive session.

Mr. JAMES. I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

On the motion of Mr. JAMES, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 5, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the report of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, obtained the unanimous consent of the House, and presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York, instructing the Senators and requesting the Representatives from that State to urge upon Congress the propriety of making grants of land, upon some equal and just principle of appropriation, to all the States, for the purpose of education, and for other useful public purposes, having due regard to the grants already made, and the population of the respective States; which were laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STRATTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, for the relief of John L. Cooper; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FOWLER, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts; which were severally disposed of as indicated below:

1. Resolution in favor of an appropriation by the General Government to construct a ship-canal, three fourths of a mile in length, around the Falls of Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

2. Resolution in favor of full and adequate indemnities to American citizens, who had just claims upon the Government of France for spoliations upon their commerce prior to the 30th of September, 1800, and for which that Government admitted its liabilities. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3. Resolution in favor of an appropriation by the General Government for the erection of a light-house on Minot's Ledge, near the entrance to Boston harbor. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

4. Resolution in favor of Congress appropriating a portion of the public lands to establish a National Normal Agricultural College, which shall be to the rural sciences what West Point Academy is to the military, for the purpose of educating teachers and professors for service in all the States of the Republic. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TUCK. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the first business in order is to vote upon the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the French spoliation bill—that bill having been taken from the Speaker's table, and that motion being now pending.

The SPEAKER. The consideration of the report of the Committee on Printing was postponed until this morning, and is, in the opinion of the Chair, the first business in order this morning.

Mr. TUCK. I would inquire of the Chair whether the French spoliation bill will come next in order after the report of the Committee on Printing shall have been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it comes up.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to bring to the attention of the Chair, and the House, the point which I now submit. I understand the decision of the Chair to have been that the report of the Committee on Printing was not a privileged question after it was made to the House. Now, if it be not a privileged question, so as to enable it to ride over other business legitimately before the House, it seems to me that it does not take precedence of the special order which has been and is still under consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It is certainly in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and then the homestead bill comes up as a special order. But that bill is not a special order in the House, and therefore cannot affect the business in the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. This bill was made a special order in the committee by the House, and the House has a knowledge, therefore, of the existence of the special order in committee. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] will make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, so that we can take up the homestead bill and dispose of it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I have certainly no objection to going into committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TUCK] is on the floor on a question of order. The Chair decides that the first business in order is the report of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. TUCK. I desire again to inquire of the Chair what will come up next after this report is disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will determine the question when the House approaches that subject. According to the practice of the House heretofore, the French spoliation bill, which is confined to that class of business on the Speaker's table, will be the first business in order when the House recurs to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. TUCK. I make the inquiry because it will be convenient for us to know when that bill is to come up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is at present of the opinion, that as a part of the business on the Speaker's table, this bill can only come up when the House is considering the business on the Speaker's table. He is, however, disposed to consider the matter further, and will decide when it comes up.

Mr. GOODENOW. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report three or four bills from the Committee on Naval Affairs for the purpose of having them referred. I expect to leave the city to-morrow morning, and for that reason I hope there will be no objection.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

No objection being made—

Mr. GOODENOW, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed, viz:

A bill for the relief of James Glynn;

A bill for the relief of Captain Lewis E. Simmonds; and

A bill for the relief of Harlow Spaulding.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish the unanimous consent of the House to take up a resolution from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will allow the Chair, he would state that the House is now receiving reports from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GOODENOW] by unanimous consent.

Mr. FREEMAN. I ask if the gentleman is making reports from a committee?

The SPEAKER. He is.

Mr. FREEMAN. Then I think the Committee on Public Lands have the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. There is a joint resolution on the Speaker's table, from the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of War to give, to a military company in this city, some arms and equipments. They are exceedingly anxious to have them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs again to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] that the House agreed, by unanimous consent, that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GOODENOW] should make certain reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the House is in the act of receiving those reports.

Mr. GOODENOW, (resuming,) from the same committee, made adverse reports upon the petitions in the two following cases; which reports were ordered to lie upon the table:

In the case of Charles Olcott, asking for compensation for a violation, by the United States, of his patent-right.

In the case of James W. Wilkins, praying to be allowed the salary of purser, for the time he performed the duties of that office, during the late war with Mexico.

On motion by Mr. GOODENOW, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Samuel Graves, and that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HASCALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House, the papers of Alanson Pool, presented on his application for bounty lands for services in the war of 1812, that they may be returned to the petitioner.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order.

Mr. GORMAN. Will my friend from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] withdraw that motion, in order to let me make a motion to take up the resolution from the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of War to hand over arms and equipments to a military company of this city? They are exceedingly anxious to have them, and it will not take the House three minutes to dispose of the resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. That resolution will be reached in a few days in its regular order, and I hope the House will now go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order.

Mr. STANLY. If it is in order, I want to know what will be the business in order, if this motion is voted down?

The SPEAKER. Then the business will be the consideration of the report of the Committee on Printing, which was postponed until this day.

Mr. BAYLY. Was that postponed to this day?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. BAYLY. Will not the unfinished business of yesterday and of Monday have precedence?

The SPEAKER. It will certainly have precedence when the House proceeds to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. BAYLY. Did not the motion to refer the spoliation bill keep that bill off the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it arises. But the Chair is inclined to the opinion that the universal practice of this House has been to confine such business to the Speaker's table, from which it was taken. The Chair has always doubted the correctness of the practice; but so it has been.

Mr. BAYLY. I dislike to make a point upon the Speaker, but—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make a point upon the Speaker at this time, because the question upon which he would make it is not now before the House.

The House was then divided on the question to suspend the rules, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and there were—ayes 68, noes 69.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CARTTER. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER, and BROWN of Mississippi, appointed; and the question being taken, the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 77.

So the House refused to suspend the rules.

Mr. BAYLY. I call for the regular order of business.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT—THE PRINTING.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the report of the Committee on Printing; which will be read by the Clerk.

The report was accordingly read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, fifty thousand copies of the mechanical part of the Patent Office Report, and three thousand additional copies for the use of the Commissioner of Patents.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point of order raised by the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD,] when this subject was last up, to be this: that inasmuch as no motion was made to refer this resolution to a committee, it would necessarily go upon the Speaker's table. In reply to that, the Chair said that the report was in order when it was introduced into this House by the Committee on Printing, it always being in order for that committee to report. Instead of disposing of it in any form, the consideration of it was, by motion, or by unanimous consent, postponed until to-day; and to-day, in the opinion of the Chair, this resolution stands before the House precisely as it did when it was presented by the committee, and decides that this resolution is in order.

Mr. TUCK. I move to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is such a motion in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. The gentleman will recollect the rule, that when one hour has been consumed in reports from committees, it is in order to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then the pending question is the report of the Committee on Printing?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The House, the other day, refused to sustain the previous question when it was moved, and the whole matter is now before the House. I am not disposed to occupy the time of the House in discussing this question. I regret that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FRENCH,] who had a motion to propose in reference to this matter, is not in his seat. I know what his purpose was; and, with a view of ascertaining the sense of the House without taking up any time in discussing it, I move to recommit this report to the Committee on Printing, with instructions that they report to the House what arrangements they have made for the execution of the public printing. I make that motion in order that, if the previous question shall be moved by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN,] and the House should sustain it, we may get a vote upon that.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order. I submit that it is not in order for this House to give any instruction to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that the Chair decided the other day, that that was a question rather for the House, than for the Chair to determine. As to the effect of instructing a joint committee, it must be for the House, and not for the Chair to decide.

Mr. STUART. The Speaker will recollect that when I raised the question of order the other day, the Chair decided that it was not in order to instruct the committee, inasmuch as it was a joint committee. I am aware of the decision, to which the Speaker refers, made at a former period, but I made the point subsequently, at which time the Speaker decided as I have said.

The SPEAKER. In the hurry of business, the Chair may have made such a decision. The Chair now decides that it is for the House to determine what the effect will be of any attempt to instruct the Committee on Printing. It is a question rather of power, than of order arising under our rules. The matter being germane and connected with the subject under discussion, the Chair thinks that is the proper decision.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will barely say, then, that I was in hopes that before I occupied the floor, to see, in his seat, the gentleman from Indiana over the way, [Mr. FRENCH] who I know desires to make a proposition. I desire that the question may be placed in such a position that we may get the sense of the House upon it. I move, therefore, to recommit this report to the Committee on Printing, with instructions to report to the House what they have heretofore done, what steps they have taken to secure the execution of the public printing; and with the further instruction to the committee to let out such printing as the present contractor cannot execute, to the lowest responsible bidder upon ten days' notice.

Mr. STUART. I wish to submit a question of order upon that proposition, if it is submitted in writing?

The SPEAKER. The Chair requires the proposition to be submitted in writing.

Mr. McMULLIN. Has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] a right to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is in the act of preparing a proposition connected with the subject of printing.

Mr. McMULLIN. Will it now be in order to submit a motion to the House?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from North Carolina will yield the floor for that purpose, it is in order. Does the gentleman from North Carolina relinquish the floor?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not desire to occupy the floor. I want to put my amendment in writing, and I will give way to the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan was recognized, who also postponed his remarks, as he stated himself, until the gentleman from North Carolina had offered his proposition.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will yield to the gentleman, or anybody else. I merely want to get my proposition before the House.

Mr. McMULLIN. Allow me to appeal to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.] I was desirous, in order to have this matter fully and fairly understood, to let the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FRENCH,] who is not now in his seat, submit his proposition. My purpose is, to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House go into Committee of the Whole upon the special order. Will the gentleman yield for that purpose?

Mr. STUART. I do not desire to occupy the floor until the gentleman from North Carolina submits his proposition. Then I intend to raise a question of order upon that proposition; and, if the whole subject is to go over, I, of course, will yield the floor. Whenever that subject comes up in order, I wish to state to the Chair, for his decision, the point of order I shall make upon it.

Mr. McMULLIN. Then I appeal to the gentleman from North Carolina, who seems to desire that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FRENCH] should be in his place, to yield the floor to me for the purpose of moving that the rules be suspended, and that the House go into the Committee of the Whole upon the special order. Will the gentleman yield to me for that purpose?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I cannot relinquish the floor until I get my amendment before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina declines to give his assent, although he has no power to do so, as the gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will submit my proposition, so as to present both questions separately, so that, if either should be ruled out of order—and

I take it both are in order—the House will still be brought to a vote upon one. I am satisfied, however, that we have a right to instruct this committee, just as we may instruct the Library, or any other joint committee. It will be a question whether that instruction is binding upon the whole committee, or only upon a part of the committee—that part appointed by the House. I have no doubt that the Chair is right in deciding that it is a question for the House to determine, and not a question of order, to be determined by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The proposition will be read by the Clerk:

Resolved, That the House Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, instructed to report to this House what, if any, arrangement has been made to have the public printing executed; and if any other than the public printer has been employed, to report what prices they have agreed to pay; and that the said committee be instructed to let out such printing as the present contractor cannot execute, to the lowest responsible bidder, after ten days' notice.

The SPEAKER. In the particular form in which the gentleman presents this resolution, the Chair determines it out of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then, sir, I appeal from that decision.

The SPEAKER. From this decision the gentleman from North Carolina appeals. The Chair feels very confident, however, that he can satisfy the gentleman, if he will hear a suggestion from the Chair.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will yield with pleasure, to hear any suggestion from the Chair.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I was about to appeal to the gentleman from North Carolina to yield me the floor, to make a suggestion which I think it right to submit.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I shall be pleased to hear any suggestion upon this point of order.

The SPEAKER. This is an independent resolution, having upon its face no connection with the report of the committee.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The first part of the resolution was handed to me by a friend.

The SPEAKER. It is not a motion to recommit.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then, sir, I must insert the words. I commenced writing, when a friend handed me those, which he thought would answer my purpose, and I added other words to it. I desire the following words to be inserted: "That this report be recommitted to the committee, with instructions."

The SPEAKER. Then there is no question of order between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order upon that proposition, which I should like to state to the Chair, and have his decision distinctly. It is twofold in its character. In the first place, there is no such committee as that referred to in the proposition, (the House Committee on Printing.) There is no such committee.

The SPEAKER. The question of order is well taken to that extent.

Mr. STUART. I wish to state the remainder of this proposition, but I do not want to disturb the House.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman wait until the resolution is modified?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask that my proposition, as modified, may now be read.

Mr. STUART. I wish to state that it is not competent to instruct the committee in regard to anything except that which was pertinent to the subject-matter recommitted. This is a proposition to print a given number of extra copies of a particular report; and you cannot, in submitting such a proposition as that, submit instructions unconnected with it and reaching the question of printing generally. Your instructions can be no broader than the subject-matter recommitted, for the reason that it is not germane to the main proposition.

The instructions were again read by the Clerk, as was also the original resolution reported by the committee, (as inserted previously.)

The SPEAKER. That resolution embraces the Patent Office Report as part of the public printing, and connects itself so intimately with the public printing that the Chair does not feel authorized to rule the instructions out of order upon that ground.

Mr. CARTTER. I wish to suggest to my friend from Michigan that he seems to misapprehend the tenor of these instructions.

Mr. STUART. I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, MAY 7, 1852.

NEW SERIES...No. 79.

Mr. CARTTER. The instructions to which the attention of the House is called are not instructions directing the committee to do anything involved in the point of order made against the jurisdiction of the House over that committee. All that these instructions embody, all that they seek to ascertain, is to know what this committee have done. Against that inquiry, sought through those instructions, the honorable gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] protests a want of jurisdiction in the House. What kind of a fix are we placed in here if this logic is to govern the question before the House? First, that the committee created by the House, originating out of the House, to perform its business, is not only irresponsible to it, but stands upon still higher grounds, and say they are even irresponsible to let the House know what they are doing. You not only job out the power of the House to this committee, but you estop the right of the House to obtain knowledge upon the subject.

Mr. STUART. The gentleman is mistaken in supposing that any such point as that is raised now. The question, can this committee be instructed by the House? is not a point of order before the House. I did not make it.

Mr. CARTTER. I am aware of that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] will confine himself to the question of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan, upon which an appeal is taken, that you cannot instruct the committee to inquire generally upon the subject of the public printing, while we are engaged in considering the propriety of recommitting a proposition having in view the printing a certain quantity of a particular thing.

Mr. CARTTER. With due respect to the argument of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART], that was the only point I raised. One point was, that we had no control over the committee; that we could not instruct it; and the other point was, that the instructions were not germane to the subject before the House. It was only to the first point I was addressing the remarks which I have already made. But how is it in reference to the second point made in the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan? Why, sir, if it is relevant to the discharge of the duties of this committee, that we shall know what they are about; whether they are executing the doings of this body; whether they are transcending it, or whether they are directly violating it; I say, if it is germane to know what they are about, these instructions are germane. All that the House ask in these instructions is, that this committee shall deliver up its secrets, that we may, in our places here, act upon those secrets; and that they shall not first assert a want of jurisdiction in the body who created them to perform their labors, and, in the next place, assert that we shall not be permitted to know what they were performing within their secret chamber.

I hold, for the security of the public service, and without any reflection upon this committee, or without any desire to pass any reflections upon the committee—for I do not know what they have done, and the House is uninformed as to what they have done—that we should be made acquainted with these matters; but I will neither censure nor praise until I know what has been done. But, for the purpose of this House being informed as to what course they are to pursue, it occurs to me that we ought to know what our agents are doing in the matter—if there are abuses, to correct them; and if there are none, to justify the action of the committee. I move to lay the appeal of the gentleman from Michigan upon the table.

Mr. STUART. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion, that I may submit a few remarks.

Mr. CARTTER. I withdraw it.

Mr. STUART. Mr. Speaker, when I raised this point of order, and took an appeal from the decision of the Chair, I did it from the best motives; and I would like now to appeal to the House for a few moments, to see whether we are not bound, irrespective of any personal or any party feeling, to go on with the business of the House; and whether we can go on with it without having the printing done. Now, here is the resolution:

"That the report be recommitted, and the Committee on Printing are hereby instructed to report to the House what, if any, arrangement has been made to have the public printing executed; and if any other than the public printer has been employed, to report what price they have agreed to pay, and that the said committee be instructed to let out such printing as the present contractors cannot execute to the lowest responsible bidder after ten days' notice."

Here, on a question of the printing of an extra number of the report of the Commissioner of Patents—a document of the highest value to the country—one which every member is desirous should be in our possession at the earliest moment, and should be well done—

Mr. CARTTER. I was called to order by my friend for departing from the question of order, and as I understand the gentleman is not discussing it, but the importance of public documents, I call him to order.

Mr. STUART. I submit to the Chair whether I am out of order or not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot well determine until the gentleman proceeds further. The precise question of order is, whether the instructions offered by the gentleman from North Carolina are germane to the resolution reported from the committee? As the Chair understands it, that is the point.

Mr. STUART. Upon a proposition to recommit the resolution which is sought to be recommitment, I was describing its characteristics and the instructions sought to be appended to it, opening the whole subject-matter of the printing which is regulated by law. This is a matter which the House has a right to decide. They have a right to determine how many thousand copies of these documents shall be printed for their use. Over this the Senate have no jurisdiction. They have nothing to say about it. They decided how many copies they will have printed for their own use, and the House decides how many copies they will have printed for their use. That is now the subject before the House as reported by the Committee on Printing. Over that subject the House has the entire and exclusive control, and no one will dispute it. What is now sought to be done by the instructions? It is sought to append instructions to recommit this subject. For what purpose? To modify the number? To inquire into the propriety of reporting to print a greater or less number of extra copies, to report for a different distribution, or to modify the report which is now before the House, and sought to be recommitment in any respect? No, sir, not at all. I call the attention of every gentleman in the House to this fact. It is not sought to modify the report at all in any respect. What then? Why, sir, to inquire as to the whole subject of the public printing; and, Mr. Speaker, not merely to that, but to direct that committee to let it out to the lowest bidder after ten days' notice. The point I make is, that these instructions have nothing to do with the subject-matter proposed to be recommitment, and I submit, if this doctrine prevail in this House, there can be and will be no other business done. Why so? Here the public printing is regulated by law. It seems to be supposed by certain gentlemen that we can get up a discussion in the House, and by instructing the committee, we can change the mode of executing the public printing. It is impossible. There is an existing law upon our statute-books which requires that the public printing be done in a certain manner, and that the very same law makes it the duty of the Joint Committee on Public Printing, whenever it is not done in that manner, to have it executed in some other way which will give a proper facility to it, and give the House the printing at a proper time and in a proper manner.

Now, as I have said, I have made this point of order for the purpose of saving time, and not consuming it; and I call upon gentlemen in the House, and I say to them, if they believe me, that I care not personally who does this printing. I have never had a jot of feeling upon that subject. But is it not time, when we have been five months in session, that we should have the public printing executed? Shall we ever get it if we constantly, when the question comes up of referring the printing of an extra number of copies, under our rules, to the Committee on Printing, insist upon reopening this whole subject? I ask, when will we get the public printing, and when will Congress adjourn? Not in forty years. May we not, I ask gentlemen of this House, with propriety to-day adopt a report in which we all agree? I presume there are not two gentlemen in this House who object to the printing of this extra number.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. With the permission of the gentleman from Michigan, I will ask him a question. The report of the committee proposes the printing of 50,000 extra copies. I ask the gentleman if he does not recognize it as legitimate that we should know what we are to pay for these 50,000 volumes, before we order them to be printed? If they are to cost us 50 cents a volume, we may have but 50,000 extra copies printed; if we are to pay a dollar, we will have but half that number. That is the point made by the first resolution.

Mr. STUART. Now, I am prepared to answer that very satisfactorily to myself, and I hope it will be satisfactory to the House. By the existing law, the public printer is to print everything that is referred to him for that purpose; according to his contract; and that contract determines the amount of the payment. If he fails to do it, by that same law the Committee on Public Printing are authorized to have it done. That law is a part of his contract; and if they have to pay more than he agreed to do it for, he is to pay the balance.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a question of order. Is the question before the House debatable?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is debating the appeal which he has taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON. I merely ask whether it is debatable? whether gentlemen can go into the merits of the subject upon a question of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must confine his remarks to the question of order raised by him. The Chair would request the gentleman from Michigan to reduce his question of order to writing, that we may not be misled in its consideration.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, notifying the House of the passage by the Senate of certain bills, and requesting the concurrence of the House therein.]

Mr. STUART. The point of order which I make, and which I have written down, is this:

That the subject sought to be recommitment is a report from the Committee on Public Printing, directing the printing of a certain number of extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Patents. And that the instructions do not propose any modification of the former report, or substitute for it, but relate to the subject of public printing generally—and are in contravention of the existing law.

Mr. MEACHAM. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The House is not engaged in the morning business. The morning hour is employed in receiving reports from committees.

Mr. STUART. Mr. Speaker, I had nearly finished my reply to the question propounded by the gentleman from Mississippi. I had stated that, to my own mind, that answer was perfectly satisfactory, and I hoped it would be to the House. We are not to argue, I think, the responsibility of the sureties of the public printer at all. We are not to argue his incapacity to do the printing. The presumption is the other way. The presumption is, that this public printer will execute his contract. The presumption is, that this very printing which the committee have reported shall be done, will be done by this contractor. If it is not done, the law fixes the manner in which its failure is to be remedied. It is fixed in terms which are irreparable by this House. I had stated mainly the views which I entertained in regard to the propriety of this action; but I desire to be distinctly understood as having no feeling of a personal character in regard to this subject, and I intend, from this time henceforth, as I have hitherto, to refrain entirely from any participation in this discussion of the public printing. I think, sir, that there is a great question involved in it, which is paramount to all divisions and all subdivisions of party, and it is this: the importance of having this printing done promptly, and in a manner creditable to the country. I will only say, for myself, that I have been opposed to this principle of contracting from its inception, as being one of those things wrong in principle, and utterly worthless in practice. There is no remedy for the evil. I care not how good a man's security may be, even if you will concede that the country will prosecute him, and will recover the damages. Why, your public records are printed upon worthless paper, that will not survive very long the ordinary decay of time, and there is no remedy for it.

Mr. BROWN. I rise to a point of order, and it is this: Upon the point of order made by the gentleman, he has no right to discuss the contract system, or the manner in which the public printing is executed. He is now going into that kind of argument which needs reply, and there is no telling where it will stop.

Mr. STUART. I am not disposed to discuss that at all. I was about to say this: After stating the grounds upon which I take this appeal, and it is all I desire to say, and that is, to call upon this House to put an end to this sort of discussion—not to tolerate these points of instruction.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I must submit that the gentleman's remarks are irrelevant to the point of order made on the instructions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman is wandering.

Mr. BROWN. I am willing that the gentleman shall proceed, provided we are to have the opportunity of replying.

Mr. STUART. Does the Speaker decide that I am not in order in asking gentlemen to vote to sustain this point of order against the admissibility of these instructions, and to state my reasons for so doing?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. STUART. Now, is it not the most legitimate reason which can be urged, to say that these instructions delay this printing—that they delay all the printing of Congress?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to go into the general question of printing by contract or otherwise. In doing so, the Chair thinks the gentleman was not in order.

Mr. STUART. No, sir. I expressly disclaimed anything of that sort.

The SPEAKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CARTTER. I desire to ask the question, whether the peculiarity of circumstances attending this printing is not the occasion of delay.

Mr. STUART. That is a very general question, and may be answered by a very general answer. I am disposed to keep in the line of argument which the Speaker has laid down, and which the House seems to require. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTTER,] that I know of no peculiar circumstances attending this question, except those circumstances which grow out of the very system itself.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand the gentleman as making a point of order upon the question, whether the House have a right to call upon us for the prices of this printing? One branch of this resolution calls upon us for the prices, as I understand it. Am I right? Is that the branch of the resolution upon which the gentleman makes his point of order?

Mr. STUART. I make it upon this point, that the instructions relate to the subject of the public printing generally, and do not relate to the subject-matter sought to be recommitteed.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to say to the House, and to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] that the House have an unquestionable right, under the law, to know about the prices. They have an unquestionable right to require a report of the prices; and I have here the precise sum to a cent. The law requires us to do so.

Mr. CLINGMAN. After we are done with the subject-matter now pending, I trust this question will be gone through with. I object to this irregular discussion, because it will not be in order to reply to these points. Let us settle the question of order first.

The SPEAKER. The proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] is not strictly in order; certainly not upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Speaker will indulge me. I thought that the suggestion would obviate the necessity of making a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The report of prices would not be in order now.

Mr. GORMAN. The law requires the probable expenses to be reported to the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I must submit that this can have nothing to do with the point of order before the House.

Mr. STUART. I was about to say, that I thought this question was one which was paramount to all party divisions and subdivisions. If we tolerate the principle that every time a subject comes up under our rule—which is an imperative one—carrying the question of printing the extra number to the Committee on Public Printing; if, every time they make a report we adopt the principle that that report cannot be recommitteed; and that instructions can be sent with it that do not propose to modify or change that report in the least; if, as I was saying, (and I presume there are not two gentlemen in the House who take exceptions to the publication of this report, and the extra numbers,) we tolerate the principle involved now in these instructions, I ask gentlemen of this House, when will we get the business done? What is the prospect in that view? What length of time has been consumed already?

Mr. CARTTER. I call the gentleman to order. He is not discussing the question of order. He is discussing a question of time in transacting the ordinary business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order in the latitude he has taken.

Mr. STUART. I regret it, indeed, if I am out of order; and if I supposed I was talking against the sense of the House, I would not consume its time an instant. I care not, personally, what becomes of this matter. I do not care where it goes to. But I do say that it is our duty—our imperative duty—to take such a course in legislation here under the rules, as will facilitate the business of the country. If we adopt the principle now sought to be established by these instructions, and resume this question of public printing every time the question of printing extra numbers goes to the committee under the rules, I ask, when, in the name of God, when will we get through the public business? It never can be done. I feel, myself, individually, the effects of this proposition. At the end of five months in this session, I feel the responsibility which rests upon this Congress, and upon me as one of the members of this House, when it may be almost literally said that we have done nothing. Can it be that we can go thus far? Can it be that we can go in the very teeth of an existing law? The law fixes this matter imperatively. The direction and supervision of the public printing is given over to the Committee on Printing by law. Can it be that upon an isolated subject, such as the printing of the extra numbers of this document, we can, by instructions, open up the whole subject of printing—for this will be the whole effect of it. If these instructions prevail, and the committee report this subject back to the House, what will be the consequence?

The whole subject is before this House. Is it necessary to embrace a proposition to amend the law in your instructions? Is it necessary for the purpose of amending the law? Not at all. The law can be amended without this incipient movement. It has no relation to it. It does not facilitate it. And if this subject can be opened up, I say upon the score of instructions that can have no pertinency to the subject under consideration, I can conceive of no time when the regular business of the country will probably be done. It is upon this principle, and this principle only, that I call upon gentlemen in this House, in the most friendly manner, (and I hope it is not necessary for me to disclaim any intention to dictate to honorable gentlemen what they shall do, or any attempt to lecture anybody upon their course and conduct,) to stop such procedure which will defeat action upon the public business. I make these remarks in the way of appeal to gentlemen who I know are as honest and sincere in their desire to facilitate the legislation of the country as I possibly can be. Let us, then, at once proceed to the legitimate and regular business of the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Has that any reference to the question of order?

Mr. CARTTER. He wants to save the time of the House.

Mr. STUART. The Chair has expressly decided—and if his decision prevails, the consequences will be such as I have pointed out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not make such a decision.

Mr. STUART. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] will allow me to say that if I have been understood by this House, I am not only abundantly satisfied, but greatly obliged. I will save the gentleman the trouble of raising any further questions of order, by taking my seat.

Mr. CARTTER. I passed it over, with the condition that he would move to lay the subject upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the last remark of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.] Did the gentleman make a motion just before sitting down?

Mr. STUART. I said I would leave the subject, so as to relieve the gentleman from Ohio from further trouble.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say—

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a question of order. I have not addressed the House upon this subject, and I have only a word to say. My colleague has spoken. Am I not entitled to say that word?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to remind the Chair, that I have not spoken upon this point of order, made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.] He made his point, and has been the only speaker. I spoke upon the first proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] according to the recollection of the Chair, has not had the floor upon this question, except by the courtesy of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will not follow the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] as he has discussed this matter at considerable length. I will speak directly to his point of order, and I ask the attention of the gentleman but for a single moment. The first point made by the gentleman is, that these instructions do not require the committee to change the number of documents ordered to be printed. Why, I need not argue the question with him, and this House, that we have a right to recommit this report without any instructions at all. Nothing is more common than for the House to recommit, and it is certainly singular for a gentleman now gravely to make it a point of order that we do not instruct the committee upon a specific point. Why, we have a right to do it, with or without instructions, and the House may make them as broad or narrow as they please. The second point to which I now come—for these two points are all I shall say anything about—is this, that this will change the existing law. What is the existing law? The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] states it correctly when he says that this contractor, when the printing shall be let out to somebody else, is liable for the difference. How are you to make him liable? Only by letting it to the lowest bidder. For example, if this piece of work be worth $1,000, Boyd Hamilton's price, and he neglects to do it, and the committee employ another man by the name of Towers, who offers to do it for $1,500, why, if he be the lowest bidder, of course Hamilton would have to pay $500. Suppose the committee, as a matter of favoritism, should give it to Donelson & Armstrong for $2,000, will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] contend, that when this printing was worth but $1,500, these men, to do a favor, should be allowed to charge $2,000 for it. Why, it is preposterous. There is no court upon earth that would sanction it, and no principles of common fairness and honesty to this printer would justify it. This resolution, therefore, instructs the committee to carry out the existing law, which is to let out the public printing to the lowest bidder, and make the public printer liable for the difference.

Mr. JOHNSON. For one minute, which the gentleman wished, I have given him two minutes and a half.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I was about to say, in relation to the point raised by the gentleman that we are getting no printing, I find that out of ninety-three pieces of printing which have gone to this man, he has finished eighty-five, and seven are in progress.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to lay the appeal upon the table, as I promised the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I omitted it at the close of my remarks.

Mr. STANLY. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not like to refuse the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is the motion to lay upon the table withdrawn?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will withdraw it, if my colleague will renew it.

Mr. STANLY. I will pledge myself to do both, or either, as the gentleman may think proper. I concur with the views taken of this subject by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.] I should like very much, whenever I can, to vote to sustain the Chair, unless it is clear to my mind that I cannot do so with propriety. I wish to submit this consideration to the Chair with all respect: If the Committee on Pensions of this House report a particular bill to give a pension, I would like to know of the Chair, if this House can recommit that particular bill to the Committee on Pensions, with instructions altering the whole pension law? It strikes me that they could, according to the decision of the Speaker this morning, because this subject relates to pensions. I think that the House possesses no such power. We have no right to alter the whole law, in relation to pensions, to suit a particular case. I concur with the views of the gentleman from Michigan, and I think the Chair is wrong, and am bound to vote against it. I will make the motion which my colleague desires, to lay upon the table, or the previous question, as gentlemen may wish.

Mr. JOHNSON. I call for the previous question.

Mr. EVANS. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his motion for a few moments. I will renew it.

The SPEAKER. The previous question being demanded, no debate is in order.

Mr. POLK. I desire to ask the Chair if it would be in order to move to lay the whole subject upon the table, and to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The appeal from the decision of the Chair must first be disposed of.

Mr. POLK. I supposed that the appeal would go upon the table with the rest of the subject.

Mr. EVANS. I believe I have the floor with the consent of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would yield to the gentleman with pleasure if he desired to propound a question; but the kindly relations which exist between that gentleman and myself, authorize me to refuse to yield to him at all times when I deem that the public business requires it.

Mr. EVANS. Then I move to lay the appeal upon the table. That expresses my views.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the appeal is laid upon the table, will not that sustain the decision of the Chair, and bring the House to a vote upon the instructions?

The SPEAKER. It certainly will. The gentleman from Michigan appeals from the decision of the Chair upon two separate and distinct grounds: first, that it is incompetent for this House alone to instruct a joint committee of the two Houses. In regard to that point, the decision of the Chair is, that it will be for the House, and not for the Chair, to determine how far their powers extend in that direction.

But the gentleman from Michigan bases his point of order upon the ground, secondly, that it is not in order for the House to instruct the committee to inquire into the general question of public printing whilst they are considering a part only of that public printing. The decision of the Chair is, that it is in order thus to consider of the mode and manner of doing the public printing.

Mr. STUART. I wish to say that the point upon which the Speaker has just decided is not precisely the one which I made.

The SPEAKER. The grounds upon which the gentleman takes his appeal, will again be read for the information of the House and of the Chair.

The Clerk read the paper, as follows:

"The point of order raised is this: That the subject sought to be recommitted is a report from the Committee on Public Printing, directing the printing of a certain number of extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Patents. And that the instructions do not propose any modification of the former report, or substitute for it, but relate to the subject of public printing generally, and are in contravention of the existing law."

The SPEAKER. Whether it is in contravention of the existing law, is also a matter for the House to determine, and not for the Speaker to decide, as a question of order. The report from the Committee on Printing proposes that fifty thousand extra copies of the Patent Office Report be printed. That is certainly a part of the public printing. A motion to recommit that resolution to the committee to inquire how the fifty thousand copies are to be printed, the Chair supposes, would be in order, according to the gentleman's view. Well, the Chair decides that that cannot be ascertained at all, without touching the general law and the general subject of public printing. It so intimately connects itself with the general subject of the printing of Congress, that the Chair does not feel at liberty to decide it out of order. It is certainly a matter to be properly considered in determining whether we will print fifty thousand copies of the Patent Office Report, to ascertain who is to print them, how they are to be printed, when they are to be printed, the character of the paper, and all that sort of thing—all of which must lead to an examination of the law upon the subject, and the general question of the public printing. Connecting itself thus with the general subject of printing, the Chair therefore decides against the question of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to have the opinion of the Chair upon a point which is a little ahead of us, but which will control my vote upon the question now before the committee. I wish to know whether the instructions—

Mr. CLINGMAN, (interrupting.) I am sorry to object to the question; but I think that we had better first dispose of the question whether or not the appeal shall lie upon the table, and then other questions can come up.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman does not know what he is objecting to yet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the gentleman from North Carolina objects to any discussion whatever.

Mr. HOUSTON. I merely want to know whether the instructions are divisible?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they are not.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I desire to obtain some information from the Chair. When the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] was addressing the House upon this question of order, and was going into the subject of the public printing generally, and was undertaking to show that there had been delay in the public business in consequence of the want of the public printing, I understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to call him to order—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I rise to a question of order. My friend's premises are too enlarged entirely. The information he desires cannot be furnished by the Chair.

Mr. BAYLY. Well, I will make the inquiry more brief. I desire to know if the Chair did not, on a point of order made by the gentleman from North Carolina, rule the gentleman from Michigan out of order for discussing the public printing generally?

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Arkansas move the previous question, or to lay the appeal upon the table?

Mr. JOHNSON. I call for the previous question.

Mr. EVANS. I made a motion to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. Well, that is not a debatable question, so the previous question is unnecessary.

Mr. STUART demanded the yeas and nays on Mr. EVANS's motion; and they were ordered.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 122, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Allison, John Appleton, William Appleton, Ashe, Averet, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Beale, Bell, Bibbhausa, Bocoek, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Buell, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cottman, Cullom, Daniel, Blinnick, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edmundson, Evans, Faulkner, Ficklin, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Giddings, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Green, Grey, Grow, Hall, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Hebard, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, John Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Landry, Mace, Mann, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Millson, Molony, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Oids, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Pennington, Perkins, Phelps, Porter, Robbins, Savage, Scudder, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Townshend, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, and Williams—122.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Thomas H. Bayly, Bartlett, Chastain, Churchwell, Cobb, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Ewing, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Hamilton, Haven, Hendricks, Houston, Howard, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Letcher, Lockhart, Martin, McCorkle, Minor, Morehead, Polk, Schermerhorn, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Geo. W. Thompson, Thurston, Walsh, Ward, and Wilcox—44.

So the appeal was laid upon the table, and the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the House.

The question recurred upon recommitting the report to the Committee on Printing, with the instructions offered by Mr. CLINGMAN.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, moved to amend the motion by inserting after the word "resolved," the words "by the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. BAYLY said: I have no disposition to detain the House by discussing that proposition—

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas to call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That was upon the appeal, and the appeal has since been laid upon the table.

Mr. GORMAN. When I made the report recommending the printing of 50,000 extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Patents I neglected to state the cost. I now send to the table a statement of the cost of the printing per copy.

The SPEAKER. For the information of the House?

Mr. GORMAN. It is my duty to do it under the law.

The SPEAKER. Then it is a separate report.

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir; it is a part of the report now under consideration. The resolution I reported was to print a certain number of extra copies. The law requires that the committee shall report on the propriety of printing "and the probable expense thereof." I forgot to do that.

Mr. CARTTER. The House is inquiring into the action of a committee, and seeking to instruct that committee. I understand that the chairman of the committee now desires to make a report himself as an addition to the original report. Now, I conceive that it is not in order for him to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Indiana proposes, as the Chair understands it, to make what he sends to the Chair a part of the report made the other day.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly, sir; it was my duty to have done it then, but some how or other I neglected it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio raises the point of order that that cannot be done.

Mr. CARTTER. It must proceed from the committee, as a part of their report, and not from an individual member of the House.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman from Indiana to propose to amend the report; and he does it with the assent of the committee, who have authorized him to do it.

Mr. CARTTER. Has there been any action upon this proposed amendment to the report on the part of the Senate branch of the committee?

Mr. STANTON. The Senate branch of the committee have nothing whatever to do with it. The law sends this matter to our branch of the committee.

Mr. CARTTER. I thought it was a joint committee.

Mr. STANTON. So it is, for all other purposes except this.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit to the Chair whether the committee who have made this report, have not a right to modify it, and make it conform to the facts and the law? They have not performed their duty, until they have done so. Ordinarily a proposition presented by any member, until it shall be altered, or some action had upon it, is subject to the control of the mover, and he can withdraw or modify it. That is the uniform and everyday practice of the House. And I submit to the Chair, whether the chairman of the Committee on Printing, under the direction of that committee, has not a right to modify the former report, or to make this supplementary report, under the rule which gives him the right to report at any time.

Mr. CARTTER. The point I make is evidently misapprehended by the gentleman from Tennessee; I do not question the right of the committee to make a report, or to amend one when it is made. But the determination of the prices is the work of the joint committee, and the report is the work of the joint committee.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CARTTER. The attitude of the matter is this: Neither the joint committee nor the constituents of that committee, comprehending the House branch of it, have made any amendment or authorized any amendment; but the chairman of the committee gets up here as a member of the House, and informally, and upon his own figures, proposes to amend the report, without there being any action on that amendment on the part of the joint committee, or even on the House branch of the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senate branch of the committee have nothing to do with it; the House branch made the report.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Ohio is altogether mistaken.

Mr. CARTTER. I understand that the House committee made this report, but the joint committee have to determine on the prices.

Mr. STANTON. The Joint Committee on Printing is not composed of two separate committees—one from each House. It is "a committee consisting of three members of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives." That is the exact language of the law. The third paragraph of that joint resolution of 1846 provides, "that all motions to print extra numbers of any bill, paper, or document, in either House, shall be referred," not to the joint committee, but "to the members of the committee of that House, who shall report upon the propriety of printing, and the probable expense thereof, as early as convenient."

This matter was referred to the three members of this House composing a portion of the joint committee, and those three members have made this report. Now, the chairman, with the consent of the other two members, proposes to amend that report. That is the exact state of the case.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. Would it be in order to move the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order after this question of order is disposed of. It is more regular to determine that, before we take action upon the main question before the House.

The law reads thus:

"That all motions to print extra numbers of any bill, paper, or document, in either House, shall be referred to the members of the committee of that House, who shall report upon the propriety of printing, and the probable expense thereof, as early as convenient."

The Chair supposes that the members of the committee of this House, and not the joint committee, made this report. Those members of the committee of this House propose now to modify their report. The rule of the House upon that subject reads thus:

"45. After a motion is stated by the Speaker, or read by the Clerk, it shall be deemed to be in the possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment."

There has been no decision or amendment in this case, and the Chair therefore decides that the committee have a right to modify their report.

Mr. CARTTER. I call for the reading of the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The cost of printing said mechanical part of said Patent Office Report will be about forty-nine cents per copy."

"W. A. GORMAN,
Chairman Committee on Printing."

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. The point of order which I am about to submit is suggested to me by the fact which has just been made known to the House, and which has not been adverted to before; that this report does not come from the Joint Committee on Printing, but from the members of this House, who belong to that committee. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] proposes to recommit this report to that committee, with instructions that they shall give such of the printing as the present contractor cannot execute to the lowest responsible bidder, after ten days' notice. The point of order that I make is, that that proposition is directly and unequivocally in the face of the law. The law requires the joint committee to do it, but there is no law which authorizes the House members of that committee to do it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit that that point has been already decided by the Chair. But if it is open to discussion I have a word to say upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has certainly presented a new view of this question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would remind the Chair that this point has been substantially decided already. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] raised the point that the instructions were inconsistent with the existing laws. That point was argued by the gentleman from Michigan and myself, and was decided.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion? The point raised by the gentleman from Michigan was, that the instructions to the joint committee were inconsistent with the law. Now, it is perfectly in the power of the House to instruct the joint committee. But the point I make is, that when the House undertake to instruct the House members of that committee, it undertakes to do a thing which it has no power to do by law.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The gentleman is mistaken about the fact; my resolution proposes to instruct the Joint Committee on Printing, no one branch of that committee. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in the fact.

Mr. STANTON. The proposition is to recommit.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The proposition is to recommit to the Committee on Printing. Now, there is but one Committee on Printing known to the law, in this House or in this Congress. There is but one Committee on Printing known to our rules. I never pretended that we had the power to instruct one branch of that committee. There are no two branches to that committee. It consists of one committee, and I intend to make the point, if it becomes necessary, that the House committee and the Senate committee have no right to divide the public business, as I am informed they have done, and assume to act separately.

Mr. STANTON. If the gentleman from North Carolina will allow me, I will make this suggestion: The rule of the House requires that propositions of this kind shall go to the members of that committee from this House, and not to the joint committee; and therefore another point of order would be, that the House have no right to instruct the joint committee upon a subject which by its own rules is referred directly to the House members of that committee. Such a proposition is directly in violation of the rules of this House.

A MEMBER. That is a matter of law.

Mr. STANTON. Well, then it is directly in violation of the law, and therefore it is out of order.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. Is it in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order? I think we can get this matter straightened out by to-morrow. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. CABLE. I make that motion.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I believe I have the floor. It was only taken from me by raising a point of order, and I suppose I can resume it. I wish to be heard upon my amendment.

Mr. STANTON. That point of order has been decided long ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] rises in his place and states that he had not yielded the floor, and that therefore it is not competent for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] to take the floor to make the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CABLE. I had supposed that, at the expiration of the morning hour, I had even the right to take the floor from the gentleman to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the homestead bill is a special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but not in the House. That must be considered in committee, and cannot arrest business in the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

In regard to the point of order which has been raised, the Chair knows of no rule by which the House of Representatives could distinguish very clearly between the duties assigned to the Joint Committee on the Public Printing, and those assigned to any portion of the members of that committee. It is rather an embarrassing question. By the joint resolution of the two Houses a Joint Committee on the Public Printing has been created. There is a clause in that resolution which the Chair begs leave to repeat. It is, that all motions to print extra numbers of any bill, paper, or document, in either House, shall be referred to the members of the committee of that House, who shall report upon the propriety of printing, and the probable expense thereof. The Chair has not had time to look to the whole law upon the subject, and is therefore, to some extent, groping in the dark. The Chair, however, is not disposed to make that distinction between the committee and the members of the committee.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I was about to say, in support of the view of the Chair, that we have the right to commit to the Committee on Printing anything we think proper, whether a part of the committee made the report or not.

Mr. GORMAN. That matter is out of order now.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I stand corrected. It is out of order.

The SPEAKER. It makes no difference to the House whether this report came from the whole of the joint committee, or whether it emanated from the members of the committee on the part of the House. It is regularly here, and may be committed to the Committee on the Judiciary, or any other committee.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I understand the proposition to be, to recommit the report; and I understand the law to be that all such propositions as this shall be committed, not to the Joint Committee on Printing, but to the members of that committee which belong to this House. But I understand the Chair now to decide that this House can instruct one half of that committee, directly against the law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that this House will determine for itself what will be the effect of its action. The Chair decides that it is in order to recommit this report to the Committee on Printing.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by MILLARD P. FULLMORE, his Private Secretary, announcing that he had signed sundry bills passed by Congress.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to present another view of this subject to the House. The joint resolution provides that when a motion is made to print an extra number of any document it shall be referred to the members of the joint Committee on Printing of the House in which the motion is made. Now upon the original motion to print fifty thousand copies of the Patent Office Report, would it be competent for any member of this House to move to refer that motion to the joint committee of the two Houses, in direct violation of the joint resolution, passed by both Houses of Congress, and approved by the President? And is it strictly in accordance with that clause in the Constitution which prescribes that each House shall prescribe the rules of its proceeding and government? Now, if it would not be in order, originally, to move to commit to the Joint Committee on Printing, it certainly is not competent to move to recommit a report of the House branch of the committee, upon a subject which has been referred, to that committee. It cannot be competent or in order, as I think, to entertain a motion to recommit that report to the Joint Committee on Printing. It is not a recommitment, because the subject has never been referred to that joint committee. I make the point of order, first, that it would not be in order to move originally to refer the subject to that committee; and, second, that it is not in order, and the motion cannot be entertained, to recommit to that committee after the report has been made.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to say that under a proper suggestion, I have stricken out the syllable "re," so as to relieve the gentleman from the difficulty—so as to provide to commit the report to the Committee on Public Printing.

Mr. JONES. Then it is out of order, because we have no power to commit it to that committee at all. It is an indirect violation of the joint resolution. And I further maintain that the resolution cannot be introduced here except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLINGMAN. In reply to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] I will say that report is now under consideration, and we have the right to refer it to any of the standing committees of the House; or to a select committee. My resolution is based upon the report now under consideration.

Mr. JONES. I do not understand how we have the right to recommit this to any committee of the House in direct violation of the laws of the land, which are a part of the rules of this House, because made so by the proper authority.

Mr. GORMAN obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there an appeal from the decision of the Chair? for this debate is irregular unless an appeal is taken.

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir, I do not take an appeal, I do not care about it one way or the other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] upon the ground that there can be no question that this report is regularly and properly here, from the members of the Committee on Printing belonging to this House, and the Chair thinks the House has the power to refer it to whom it chooses. It may refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or to any other committee of the House, notwithstanding the fact, that when the original motion was made to print the extra numbers, it must have been referred to the Committee on Printing. But it was referred to that committee, and was reported upon by them; and the Chair thinks that it is competent for the House now to make any disposition of that report which it may think proper. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I appeal from that decision.

Mr. CARTTER. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. STANTON. The gentleman from Ohio, I apprehend, cannot take the floor from me to make that motion.

I submit that the decision just announced by the Chair, is nothing more nor less than to put a stop to the public printing. He may not have intended it, but such is the effect. But to adopt that decision, would be perfectly nugatory, for it is in direct violation of an express provision of the law which was read in the hearing of the House this morning; and which being a law passed by both Houses of Congress, and signed by the President of the United States, is, at least, as high authority as any rule of this House, if any rule could be made in contradiction of that law.

Here is a proposition to print fifty thousand copies of the Patent Office Report. The law which has been read this morning, provides that that report shall be referred to the members of the Committee on Printing belonging to the House, and to no other committee. It requires that this subject shall go to them. Yet now your proposition is, that this report shall be committed to the Joint Committee on Printing—and for what? That the Joint Committee on Printing shall report that five thousand, or seventy-five thousand, or any other number of copies shall be printed, although the law requires that such a proposition shall emanate not from the joint committee, but from the members of that committee belonging to this House.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I understand that this question of order has been decided once, upon the appeal of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.] Now, I submit that this same question cannot be made over and over again.

A MEMBER. It is the same question precisely.

The SPEAKER. The appeal taken by the gentleman from Michigan, was upon the ground that the instructions were not legitimate—that it was not competent for the House to make them. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] insists that we cannot commit to that committee at all.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I did not so understand it. I thought the points made by the gentleman were the same.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. There is no point in the case I have made which has been heretofore decided—not at all. This was a report emanating by virtue of the law which was read this morning, not from the joint committee, but from the members of that committee from this House. It was made in the performance of the duties devolving by law upon these members of that committee. Now, in connection with the proposition which peculiarly belongs to the House members of the committee, it is proposed to go into the whole policy of the public printing.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. As I served upon the Committee on Printing in the last Congress, it will not be improper for me to state, that the practice has been invariably, under that law, that each branch of Congress authorized or ordered the extra numbers of every document for its own use, and each branch of the committee has always considered the propriety of printing the extra numbers belonging to its own House. And there is good reason for it. Suppose the House should propose to order 500,000 copies of a document to be printed. This committee is constituted of an equal number from both Houses; and suppose the Senate portion of it should refuse to concur with the House Committee. In that case the House could not control its own printing.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. That is the true spirit, and that is the substance of the law, and I have no doubt that it was upon that consideration that the law was based. But the point I make now is, the incongruity and the inconsistency of appending instructions to a report, emanating from that part of the committee which belongs to this House, made in the performance of functions which properly belong to it, and in sending that same report back to the joint committee, and giving instructions which go to the whole policy of the public printing, and to the alteration of the law.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STANTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will then ask my friend from Tennessee, if any member should introduce a proposition here upon the subject of printing, as he might do when resolutions or bills are called for, whether it would not be competent for the House to refer that, or any other report relating to that subject, to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. STANTON. If it were a proposition to print extra numbers, you could not refer it to the Committee on Printing, because the law says that such a proposition shall go to the members of that committee who are members of this House. The effect of that law is to constitute the members of this House who are upon that committee a quasi committee—a committee for this particular purpose—and by virtue of that law, such a proposition must go to that committee, and you can send it to no other. Now, the effect of this proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] is, to send the proposition to print extra copies, together with his instructions, to the Joint Committee on Printing; which is contrary to law.

Mr. CARTTER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would call the attention of the House for a single moment to the view which he feels clear in taking upon the subject. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] will not doubt that this report is properly before the House for its consideration.

Mr. STANTON. That is, the motion for fifty thousand extra copies? Not at all.

The SPEAKER. The House may adopt it, or amend it with the amendment, or they might refer it under the law.

Mr. STANTON. Except where the law says it shall be referred to a particular committee.

The SPEAKER. So the law says, that all questions relating to constitutional questions, or involving law questions, shall go to the Committee on the Judiciary; all questions relating to finance, to the Committee on Ways and Means; and all questions involving the right of a member to his seat, to the Committee on Elections. The law has been complied with in that respect in regard to this matter.

Mr. STANTON. If the Chair will allow me, I would ask if there is any law relating to those committees, such as relates to the Committee on Printing? and are not the duties of the Judiciary Committee, and of other committees, regulated only by the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would again repeat, that, under the joint law of the two Houses, this report is made by the members of this House, forming, as they do, a part of the general Committee on Printing. It is then properly here. The law does require that all questions in regard to printing extra numbers of any document or bill, shall go to that portion of the Printing Committee belonging to this House. The law has been complied with in that respect, and that committee has made its report, which report is subject to the direction of this House, and may, in the opinion of the Chair, be committed to any committee of this body, or be voted upon, passed, or rejected. That is the decision of the Chair; and from that decision the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] takes an appeal. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] moves to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? Is the language of that resolution to recommit to the House committee?

The SPEAKER. The language is to commit it, not to recommit it. It is to commit this report to the Joint Committee on Printing. The Chair decides that it is in order.

Mr. BAYLY. How long has that been the language of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It was modified by the mover some time ago.

Mr. BAYLY. It was done, then, when I was upon the floor, and when he had no right to do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not object to it. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] rose and proposed to do so, and the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] who had the floor upon a point of order, gave the floor for that purpose. He made the modification, as he certainly had a right to do, if he could get the floor at all.

Mr. BAYLY. I was not aware that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. He yielded for that express purpose, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] appealing to him to do so.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. CARTTER, and it was agreed to.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY. I have heard a great deal, sir, about the higher-law party in this country, and the object of my amendment is to ascertain how many of that higher-law party there are in this House; and I undertake to say that my own opinion is, that one of the branches of the Legislature of the United States sets more examples of "higher law" than any other body of the same number. They do it every day, sir, in riding down our rules. By the Constitution of the United States, each House has the authority to adopt its own rules of proceeding. After they have done that, those rules adopted in pursuance of the Constitution are precisely as much the law of this land as any other laws, and yet this House constantly undertakes to exercise the higher-law privilege of running over those rules.

Now, sir, there is, upon this occasion, a still more palpable effort to assert the doctrine of the higher law, and I have moved my amendment with the design to see how many of the higher-law party there are in this House.

By the law of 1846, this subject of the public printing is committed to the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses, and during this whole session there has been an attempt of one House to assert here the higher-law doctrine without the concurrence of the other, and without the sanction of the other, to control that law—in other words, there has been a practical attempt made to assert here the higher-law doctrine.

I shall not go into a minute discussion of this law regulating the public printing, because it has already been discussed, and I have no disposition to go over the ground again. But I undertake to say that the Printing Committee have plenary power over this subject, and that neither one of the two Houses can control that committee.

Mr. CARTER. That is higher-law doctrine.

Mr. BAYLY. I undertake to say that when one of the two Houses undertakes to repeal a law of the two Houses, sanctioned by the President, they are asserting the higher-law doctrine, and I am utterly opposed to that. Now, as to our rules in respect to the subject of public printing, they are perfectly clear, and the reason of them is manifest enough. As has already been explained here, when the question arises before either House as to the number of extra copies it will issue, the committee of that House has the sole authority to decide for the House to which it belongs—for the Senate may want one number and the House another. In the exercise of that courtesy which has always been observed between the two branches of Congress, each branch has allowed the other to decide for itself as to the number of documents it wants, and the description of the document.

But, as to these other questions; as to how these documents are to be printed; how the public printing is to be executed; as to whether the public printing has been executed according to contract or not—they, by the law, have been committed to the joint committee, whose conduct is regulated not by the rules of the House, or by the rules of the Senate, but by law, which is established by the concurrence of the two Houses of Congress, and the approbation of the President. These instructions, sir, go to the joint committee, constituted by law; and I undertake to say here, that we have no right to give instructions to that committee in any other mode than by a joint resolution of the two Houses. That is the whole point I wish to make about the subject.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words—

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. Will the gentleman give way to a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. EVANS. If such is the disposition of the House I will do so.

A VOICE. No! No! It is too late. Go on.

Mr. EVANS. I will yield to the desire of the House, but I will not keep the floor for any great length of time at any rate.

"This whole subject of public printing has occupied the attention of this House ever since the Twenty-eighth Congress. Persons in this city made contracts; and made such profits, and put such sums of money, out of the public Treasury, into their own pockets, that the Twenty-ninth Congress—as Democratic as this, with as great a majority upon that side—determined that the contract system should be the law of the land. That law has been violated in every step since. Combinations have been formed in this city, between presses of both parties, for the purpose of breaking down this contract system. Such plans have found, notwithstanding the difficulties and delays to which they have given rise, ready but unwitting supporters amongst us. I very much regret it. But what is the difficulty this morning? I speak in no unkind sense, and I trust I shall not offend anybody, but it is said that the Senate of the United States—the body that sits in the other end of the Capitol—in carrying out its part of the contract—the bargain that is said to have been made—have given to the Republic, in this city, the printing of fifty thousand copies of the Patent Office Report, doubtless at some considerable profit.

The question now comes forward as to whether Donelson & Armstrong shall have their portion under the same agreement, and we have the whole matter in a pretty complication. They cannot obtain their portion of the contract; it is said, because of some shrinking here, which, I think, is hardly fair. It does not, however, bind me. My hands are clean. I am against all corrupt combinations for corrupt bargains to bestow patronage upon the public press of the one or the other of the two great parties; but I suppose that the gentlemen who agreed this printing should be fairly divided, ought now to stand up to the rack. The Republic is proceeding with the printing of the Patent Office Report. It has a fine rackful before it—grain in abundance—mangers replete, and lofts full of fodder. When Donelson & Armstrong come forward and request their share, we are unfortunately in such a condition that we cannot grant it. That is the secret of this whole debate, and everybody is aware of it. With regard to the public printing, the House of Representatives owes it to itself at once to put a stop to the system of paying the public press of either party. I shall do what I have always done, to which effect I now pledge myself to the House, viz: I never will vote one cent to any Whig party press, although I am a Whig, be it published in this city or elsewhere. I trust that the members of the Democratic party will do the same thing. Let us adhere to the contract system, compel its execution in good faith, and once for all put down those men combined against us in the endeavors to prevent us from the performance of our duty, and who are constantly obstructing our path with difficulties at every step. They make new members say "we cannot get our printing executed." We cannot obtain the Patent Office Report to send to our constituents, for which we have demands from day to day. It is necessary we should have them." What is to be done? Let us set our face against those people who attempt to control the House of Representatives. Let us, either at every risk carry out the contract system, or resort to what other Governments have resorted to—a public printing office. It is not difficult to have erected here a public printing office, free from all fraud and collusion. In the law creating it, there can be easily inserted a proviso that no person shall have its superintendence who is connected with, or the proprietor of any public print, or interested in any periodical or magazine whatever.

Gentlemen assert that the neglect of our duty, the long way we are behind hand in the public business is owing to the want of the public printing. My friend from Michigan [Mr. STUART] made, I believe, that assertion. I think he labors under a very great mistake. The neglect is due to other causes. I will here remark that there are now before the House printed bills, resolutions, &c., more than we could act upon, were the House to proceed with the business as they have been doing for the next five consecutive years.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that I have been trying for several months past to obtain the report of the Secretary of the Navy? I have some small portions of it as they have been successively printed by the public printer; but the entire report is not yet printed. We have never had it before our committee—the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. EVANS. There is no report before any committee of this House. I am on the Military Committee, and we have never officially seen the report of the Secretary of War. Why? Because it has not been referred to that committee; and had the gentleman's committee the report to which he has alluded they could not have acted upon it officially, it not having been referred.

Mr. STANTON. Yes we could.

Mr. EVANS. I think otherwise; but no matter as to that. You can have erected, in this city, a public printing office; you may call it a printing bureau if you please, although I do not like the term. You can provide that its superintendent shall have no connection or interest in any party paper, magazine, or periodical. I will venture to say that the New York Herald office—and I take that paper because it is one of the most enterprising in the Union—can print and deliver to us the next morning any reasonable number of extra copies which we may choose to order. And it can be done here. There is no difficulty about the execution of the public printing, except what is caused by ourselves; and, although I dislike to allude to the past, and will not, in any unkind spirit—I have had difficulties about the public printing, probably because I looked into the matter in advance of other gentlemen—yet I must say that the testimony sworn to by men upon oath, shows that there has been a deliberate design, since the Twenty-ninth Congress, to put an end to the contract system. That there is and has been a deliberate design has been sufficiently proved, and you are now about to yield to it. You are about to forget the duty you owe to the country, to yourselves, and to your own consciences. You are about to give way underneath the pressure of the combination to which I have referred. It ought not to be done; and if such influences are resisted, there will be no need of members coming here to talk about delay in the public business for the want of the public printing. There will be no delay when it is executed in accordance with the law, and without improper motives. If I could advise—were it my province to do so—I would say to the House, erect a public printing office here, and have your printing done properly. If it is, however, to be given to party journals, the Democrats have the majority here and in the other House, and why do they not take the whole of it? I do not want any of it. I am not connected with those journals, and never want to be.

If there has been an agreement for the division of the printing, why is not it fully carried out? Why do they not give to Donelson & Armstrong their fair share? They have granted the Republic its portion. This printing ought to be entirely disconnected, in my opinion, from the public newspapers. They ought to support themselves in the way in which honest, independent papers throughout the country are supported—by subscriptions and advertisements. They ought not to be fed out of the Treasury—they ought not to be nurtured by the Government—they ought not to get any of this public printing; and everybody here knows it.

The honorable gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOTY,] has introduced for the consideration of the House a bill, not quite perfect, but which may be made so by the House, by which you can have the printing executed in one week. I do not know what my friend from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] has done, but I know one thing he has not done, and that is, anything corrupt. I am quite certain that the honorable gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN,] the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] or any other member of the Committee on Printing, would not consent to any proposition which they thought was wrong. Yet the action of that committee will strike various minds differently. It appears to me that they have overlooked (though I know nothing as to what they have done) John T. Towers, the only contractor who executed his contract during the last Congress, when everybody else who had contracted to do the printing violated their contracts, as no one knows better than my friend from Indiana. With all deference, I conceive that, however honestly they may have acted, they have not done what is right.

The gentleman is acquainted with the whole history of the difficulties in relation to the printing at the last Congress. Contractors then violated their contracts, and nothing was said about it. There was no taking away of the public printing from the violating contractor then; no relating to other parties. I believe the President's message and accompanying documents were not delivered until long after they were required. John T. Towers went on and executed his contract faithfully—to the letter—although he had underbid the other contractors, who were desirous of having the contract for the printing of all the classes. If the committee have passed by him, John C. Rives, and other faithful and honest men, who can give good security, and given the printing to Donelson & Armstrong, or Gideon & Co.—whom I believe to be worthy gentlemen, and against whom I would be sorry to say anything—at a higher price, it is due to the House that it should be reported. The gentleman should not suppress the facts, nor should he, when asked a question by a member, as to what had been done by the committee, have moved the previous question. He should have communicated the whole proceedings of that committee. We should have known the price of the bid, and how much higher it was than other bids. If competent and safe men have been passed by, to give the printing, at a higher price, to others, the committee have done what I think is wrong, and it behooves this House to correct that wrong. If, however, the House thinks that there has been a solemn bargain made, although I have had nothing to do with, nor ever knew of it, they ought to carry it out, and Donelson & Armstrong ought to have their fair share.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have to say in reply to the remarks the gentleman has just made, that the price adopted by the committee and Donelson & Armstrong, is precisely what John T. Towers says is a fair and reasonable price for the work. John T. Towers himself made the estimate upon which the price was fixed.

Mr. EVANS. This is the first information the House has had with regard to the price to be paid for the printing, and it comes from my friend from Kentucky for the first time, after unparalleled exertion on our part. But my friend does not say that was the bid of John T. Towers himself. Is it upon the basis of the bid he put in at the beginning of the session?

Mr. STANTON. No, sir; it is not exactly.

Mr. EVANS. It is higher?

Mr. STANTON. Because John T. Towers himself, by submitting an estimate to us, indicated clearly that his bid was not a fair and reasonable price for the work. He submitted a statement of what would be a fair and reasonable price, which did not exceed his bid more than three per cent., and in one case not more than five per cent.; and the whole difference between John T. Towers's bid for doing the 50,000 extra copies of the Patent Office Report, and John T. Towers's estimate of what is a reasonable and fair price, is only $300 on upwards of 50,000.

Mr. EVANS. I now understand the gentleman to say, that John T. Towers has stultified himself, and if he has done so, I desire to have nothing more to do with him.

Mr. STANTON. He made a bid at the beginning of the session, which he now acknowledges is not a fair and reasonable price for the printing.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman knows enough about the printing to be aware of the fact, that a large portion of the profits made by the printer is upon the long numbers. The portion remaining unfinished, which will fall into the hands of Donelson & Armstrong, is the heaviest and most profitable.

Mr. STANTON. We would have done those gentlemen injustice, because they repudiated and refused to accept the proposition upon the terms of John C. Rives's bid, which everybody said was greater than that of Towers. In order to make the thing fair, and to give a reasonable price for this expensive work, which this office was to have, John T. Towers increased his own price some three or five per cent.

Mr. EVANS. That is very strange! Everybody knows that the profit is upon the long numbers. As yet, there has not been a long number printed—not one. Where are your long numbers of the President's message? The gentleman tells me that the profitable portion of the printing has been executed, and that the unprofitable portion yet remains to be printed; but I think he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. STANTON. John T. Towers's bid made no deduction upon the long numbers, while the present bid makes a deduction of five per cent.; and, so far as they are concerned, they are done, absolutely, under this estimate, five per cent. cheaper than they could have been done under his bid.

Mr. EVANS. There is one thing which I rejoice at, as the result of all this discussion: that we have, at last, a single fact.

Mr. BOCOCK. With the consent of the gentleman from Maryland, I desire to propound a question to my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON.] I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to have explained to the House that the committee have agreed to give these newspaper editors a higher price than that at which Towers agreed to do this printing, and for this reason: The gentleman states that a large portion of the public printing which is profitable has already been done by the public printer; and therefore not being able to give that to these gentlemen, it has been found necessary to increase the price upon this other description of printing. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if bids for the public printing are not put in separately for the different classes of printing, as they are required by law to be? and whether Towers did not bid separately for the different classes of printing? I desire to know from the gentleman, further, if Towers's bid for this class of printing had been lower than that of other persons, whether he would not have been the printer of it—whether he might not have been the printer for one class, while some other gentleman might have been the printer for some other class? Now, I wish to know, also, whether they have given increased prices to these gentlemen over those which Towers made for this specific sort of printing, and whether they have not given more to these men than that for which Towers is now willing to execute this particular printing? As I stated before, I am informed that Towers's bid was made for this particular printing as a separate matter.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. It is true that the public printing is bid for in classes. But all the classes of the public printing are bid for in mass, and all the classes are bid for by the same men, and the contract is given out to the same men. One man does not get one portion of it, and another man another portion of it, because if it had been so, John C. Rives would have got a portion of the public printing at two cents a page, when it would hardly pay for the paper upon which it was printed. While other printers were charging a dollar, and a dollar and a quarter, John C. Rives bid two and a half cents. They average the whole bid, and give the printing to him who is supposed to be the lowest bidder upon the whole average, and not to him who is the lowest upon a particular class. I went perhaps a little too far when I said that all the profitable printing had been done. I do not mean to say that; but it is in the hands of the public printer who is now at work upon it—as, for instance, the President's message with the accompanying documents, the Coast Survey, and a great many other documents which the printer has begun, and with which he is progressing very slowly. They are profitable to the printer.

Mr. BOCOCK. Has not the price been raised from the recent bid for this particular sort of printing?

Mr. STANTON. No, it has not. I understand that Towers's bid, with the exception I have just stated, of this portion of the public printing which will go to Donelson & Armstrong, which is supposed to be less profitable than the other, and upon which he has increased his prices but lately, is substantially what it was before.

Mr. EVANS. If these prices are to be increased, why do you not increase Boyd Hamilton's? He has got the largest printing office in the city, and the most presses. Why do not you give him the increase of price, if any one is to have it? He is a good Democrat, and never voted for a Whig. If the increase of price must be given to somebody, why not let Boyd Hamilton have it? for, with a little flattering encouragement, and a little more money, he might perhaps struggle through his difficulties.

Mr. STANTON. The committee had no power to increase the prices of Hamilton. We were compelled, under the law, to remedy his neglect, and employ somebody else to do the work.

Mr. EVANS. Why not remedy it with him? When the Committee have the power to apply a remedy, why let some one else be the subject of remedy, and not Boyd Hamilton?

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to make this statement before any one else proceeds, in this House or elsewhere, to make any charge: I have got John T. Towers's bid, which he made in public market. I have his estimate, which he made to the Committee, at fair prices. Whoever circulates, in this community or elsewhere, that the committee have varied, in any material point of view, from those prices, circulates a falsehood. I pronounce the statement false, wherever it comes from. I say to this House, that we have adopted, substantially, the whole bid and estimate of Towers, and that the price we propose to give does not vary $1,000 on this work—the Patent Office Report—from that estimate.

Mr. EVANS. As I never said that the gentleman had varied from Towers's contract, and never knew what Towers's contract was, I presume the gentleman cannot refer to me.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly not. But it has been whispered about in certain quarters.

Mr. EVANS. I never said anything of the sort, and do not say so now. I am sorry there are so many personal difficulties surrounding this printing discussion. I announced, at the beginning of this discussion, and notwithstanding all that has been said about it, I can announce it to-day from the bottom of my heart, that I can attribute no improper or corrupt motive to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN;] or the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON;]. They are the last gentlemen to whom I could attribute any such motives. I know nothing about Towers's bid. But this is a matter of public interest, and we have to base this public printing upon some system. It becomes us, therefore, to have a free, fair field, and candid discussion upon this subject, doing justice to all men, and injuring the feelings of no man. I would not willingly do it. It strikes me as a singular thing, that Boyd Hamilton's prices were not increased, to enable him to go on, for "money makes the mare go."

Mr. STANTON. We had no power to increase the prices of Boyd Hamilton; and we were compelled, by law, to employ some one else to do the work, and charge him and his securities with the difference in price.

Mr. EVANS. The House will judge between me and the gentleman in regard to the power. I will not pursue that branch of the subject any further. I will not dwell upon the short-comings or long-gongs of the committee, or express any sentiment at all upon it. They have done differently, it is true, from what I would have done. They have acted upon different principles and from different motives. There are combinations existing in this city; combinations bearing heavily upon us all, and which I myself—I will not say found it impossible—but difficult to resist; combinations which have appealed to me as well as to you all. These combinations ought to be resisted at once, or they will exist here forever; for this is not the work of one day, but of all time. And all future Congresses will find the same things, unless we now at once, and with all our manliness and force, resist them. For one, I am prepared to do it. They are found nowhere else. I will not quote the example of absolute governments for our imitation, for I love freedom, and I hate absolute governments; but in certain matters we may look abroad to see if we cannot meet with something that may benefit ourselves. The English Government have a national printing office, which, as far as I know, has been carried on without any charge of corruption being made against it. So has the French Government; so has the Prussian Government, and so has the Austrian Government.

At the late exhibition at the World's Fair—the House will forgive me if I am a little wild in the numbers I state, but I will not state them materially different from what they are—the Austrian Government sent there certain papers, printed in more than four hundred languages, from their national printing office, beautifully executed. Of these four hundred languages, two hundred and fifty of them were executed in the original character of the language. For instance, they sent specimens of the Hindoostanee, the Singalese, the Chinese, the Japanese, the Arabic, the Coptic, the Syriac, or any language which employed a peculiar character, and which required peculiar skill in the printing office. All of these languages require a peculiar character which needs special discrimination and attention on the part of those who use it. I have found that out of four hundred languages presented there, and printed, more than two hundred and fifty were in the original character. Now, I do not propose that we should go into such a labored thing as this; but surely, when Governments abroad have distinguished themselves so highly in this great art—for it is an art—when they have succeeded in founding establishments like these, which are at once the wonder and admiration of the whole world, and which were thought worthy of exhibition and particular mention, I think that we might go a little way. Gentleman get up here and state that it is impossible to found a national office, without having at the bottom a sink of corruption. Can we not take this whole thing out of the hands of designing men? The House must discard every party—Whigs, Democrats, Free-Soilers, and everything else. Suppose the next President is a Democrat; I am willing that he shall appoint the superintendent of the public printing, as I have no doubt he would appoint a skillful man. I do not know any candidate of that party for the Presidency who would not appoint a proper officer. There are gentlemen here whom I very much respect and esteem, who say that compositors would gather here from every State of the Union, and press members of Congress with solicitations to get them appointed. I apprehend there is nothing in that, for the trade in this city have fixed and settled a list of the prices to be paid to compositors, which cannot be departed from. They agree upon so much for composition, so much for press-work, and so on. The persons who are concerned with a national printing office, as well as other men, have reputations at stake.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that one of the persons, who has done heretofore as much of the public printing as almost any other person in Congress, has assured me that he could never employ journeymen printers to do Congressional printing by the piece. Sometimes he has a press of work, when the compositors have to work all night; and at other times they have little or nothing to do, and he must pay them for all the time, or he cannot get the hands necessary to do the work. He has also assured me that when he was public printer, members of Congress used to bring printers to him, and tell him that he must employ those men and take care of them. If you had such an establishment here, members of Congress would have great control over it, I doubt not, and would have five times as many printers, perhaps, in the establishment as were necessary to do the work, and it might become a great poor-house or pauper asylum for the disabled and incompetent printers of the country.

Mr. EVANS. If that is so I hope it will be broken up; I do not care how soon it goes; there is nothing in it which I should wish to maintain. The gentleman has pointed out sufficiently the person to whom he alludes. Every one knows that he alludes to John C. Rives, who does the Congressional printing of this body. With the aid of the faithful reporters here before me, and the aid of the compositors at that office, does the gentleman suppose, if we should employ him as a public printer, that we should get into difficulty? Suppose he had to pay his compositors a little more, who grudges it to them? I do not grudge the honest workmen anything at all; and I would rather they had a little more for their labor, if we could only get rid of this great difficulty. Other Governments do it,—why should not ours? Workmen are found in Europe honest enough, patriotic enough, to serve the government. The honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] gets up and tells me that no man can be employed in the city of Washington to work for the Government who will not cheat the Government. There is not a printer in town who will not work for the Government upon as fair terms as he would for a private press or a newspaper. I think the gentleman is laboring under a great mistake in regard to that matter, and I think he has done great injustice to this whole class of persons.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman does much greater injustice to me.

Mr. EVANS. I did not intend to do any injustice to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. I do not suppose that the gentleman intended it. I made no such statement as that a man, because he worked for Government, would become corrupt, though there are a great many such instances, I have no doubt.

Mr. EVANS. I state expressly that the gentleman did not say any such thing; but that is the only inference that can be drawn from his argument.

Mr. JONES. Not at all; not at all.

Mr. EVANS. Certainly; no other inference can be drawn from it.

Mr. GORMAN, (interrupting.) With the permission of the gentleman from Maryland, I desire to make a suggestion to the House. This Patent Office Report has to be printed by some one. I wish the House to understand that I have simply reported the usual resolution for the printing of the number that you usually order. I have done nothing else. I am not going to do anything else. When they are printed they will be printed at the price agreed upon unanimously, I believe, by the joint committee.

Now, sir, I only want to state to the House, that really you can have no printing done unless you order it. The House must order it. These things cannot be done by the committee. You cannot have these reports printed unless you order them to be printed. I want the House also to understand that they can get all the information they desire about prices by referring to the public bids which are on public record in Miscellaneous Documents, No. 10. They will find Towers's bid there; and the prices that we have given to the printers who are to do the work for the House, although not identical in all the items, are substantially the same as Towers's bid. All I ask the House to do is, to order this printing. If they order it, well and good; if not, it is all the same to me. The old members are not particularly interested in these things. If the new members want them, they will have to order the printing.

If Boyd Hamilton can do the work, he shall certainly do it. If he can do it according to his contract, it is the duty of the committee to let him do it, and they intend that he shall do it. All the documents which have been in his hands for more than a month, and which have not been commenced by him at all, we have taken from him. He has had some documents for four months and a half which are not finished, and some which have not been commenced yet.

I will state another fact for the information of the House. A proposition was submitted to the joint committee to give the printing to Donelson & Armstrong and the Republic, and that proposition was voted down when the new committee met. A proposition, introduced by a Senator, was then agreed to, that the committee of each House should exercise its own judgment in giving out such printing as it saw fit. The committee on the part of the House have, therefore, executed a contract with Donelson & Armstrong; and they have ordered one single document, and that is all, to be given to them. We have strenuously kept the contract, and required Boyd Hamilton to come up to it, as far as we possibly could. We have written notes and called on him specifically to say wherein he can comply with his contract. Wherever he can do it, we have assiduously and earnestly insisted on his fulfilling that contract. That is what we have done. The committee on the part of the House are not responsible for any printing that may have been given to the publishers of the Republic, the Globe, or the National Intelligencer, or any one else. The Senate committee can give the printing of that body to the Republic, or withhold it, or let Hamilton do it. I do not know what they have done. It is very probable, however, that they have done what the House committee have done—given it to Donelson & Armstrong.

I thank the gentleman from Maryland for his kindness in allowing me so much of his time. I really do not want to make a speech upon this matter. But I do not want to be misrepresented before the country. I have no desire to get into personal difficulties, but I do not choose gentlemen to circulate it through the country that I have acted in bad faith towards my fellow-Democrats. I will state here, because if I know my own heart, I have no secrets on this subject, I did say to some of my Democratic friends that under the new organization of the committee, probably the whole of this public printing would be given to Donelson & Armstrong. When the proposition was made in the committee to give it to Donelson & Armstrong and the Republic, it was voted down. It was then proposed that each committee should dispose of the printing of its own body in its own way, and at its own time. That was carried, and that is the way we are acting now.

Now, I have said this for my own justification. I will not suffer, here or elsewhere, gentlemen to circulate rumors that I have acted in any manner except in good faith, according to the best of my judgment. When my personal character is at stake, I should lose my self-respect if I failed to defend it. I am anxious to report to the House just what is done by the committee, what directions are given, and precisely what is the state of things. I would not conceal anything. If I did, it would be improper, unjust to the House, and doing injustice to myself, and the country would rebuke me for being silent when I should speak. I will not be silent when I should speak. And, therefore, I will not permit insinuations to be made, either here or elsewhere, that I have acted in bad faith, or that there has been anything like collusion or concealment. I have acted according to the best of my judgment, although I have not arrived at the same conclusion as some of my political friends have done. There was little or no disagreement in the committee, and the country shall know what we have done. They know it now.

But, sir, if you want the public printing done, you must order it to be done. Certainly, I have no disposition to disobey any suggestion the House may make. I repeat again and again to this House and to the country, that any suggestion made by this House to me, I shall feel bound in honor to carry out. I should do so out of respect to the House, and to myself.

I will say further to the House, that the public printer has sent in a memorial asking relief. I will state to the gentleman from Maryland that Towers has sent in a memorial asking relief.

Mr. POLK. Have not all the public printers, under the contract system, applied for relief?

Mr. GORMAN. Every single one. Towers has sent in a memorial to the committee, stating that, if others are relieved, he demands to be relieved also, for that his was an onerous contract, too. I candidly assure you, that so onerous, terrible, ruinous, and destructive, is Mr. Hamilton's contract, that I shall feel very much disposed to give him the ten per cent. which we have already deducted from his contract, and even more. We have deducted that amount, and kept it in the coffers of the Government, for the purpose of trying to force him up to the contract. He cannot do it. He says so, in a communication to the committee. You are at sea, without chart or compass, unless you ratify the action of the committee. We will have printing done at fair prices, if we are permitted by the House to do it; and we will have it done at the Union office. The whole of the jobs, at the prices given, will be contemptible in amount and profits, and at most is only temporary. I again thank the gentleman from Maryland for having permitted me to occupy thus much of his time.

[Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back, as correctly enrolled, the following bills, which received the signature of the Speaker, to wit:

An act for the relief of Jane Irvin; and

An act for the relief of Charles G. Hunter.]

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, (Mr. EVANS yielding the floor.) I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing a question. He says that Mr. Towers has sent in a memorial for relief. The question which I wish to propound is this: Has not Mr. Towers asked simply to be put on the same footing with others? If others are relieved, then he asks relief; but he asks nothing on his own account.

Mr. GORMAN. That is what I said.

Mr. BROWN. Well, that is not asking relief. It is only asking that the same measure of justice may be meted out to him that is meted out to others. Now, I understand the chairman of the committee to say, that the committee of the House is acting upon its own responsibility, not being under the control of the committee of the Senate, as far as the House printing is concerned. Then, it is acting as a House committee, and I hope we shall hear no more of this point—that we cannot control it, because it is acting jointly with the Senate committee. If its action is confined solely to the business of the House, and it acts upon its individual responsibility, I suppose it must be responsible to the House, in the capacity in which it acts.

Mr. GORMAN. The Joint Committee on Printing deemed it competent for them to pass a resolution giving specific powers to each separate committee to act separately upon one particular point. Upon that point, and that alone, have we authority to act, by the joint order of the whole committee.

Mr. BROWN. Still I understand that the joint committee has undertaken to throw the responsibility which attaches to it under the law, off itself as a joint committee, and to divide it between the two committees, or rather between each half of the committee—the House committee assuming the responsibility of all that attaches here, and the Senate committee of all that attaches there. In fact, they are two separate committees in their action.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, (Mr. EVANS still yielding the floor.) I wish to understand this point, because if the assumption of the gentleman from Mississippi be correct, the Joint Committee on Printing have clearly exceeded their authority. But I do not so understand the chairman of the committee. He does not say that the House committee is acting separately and alone, without the concurrence of the Senate committee; he says that each act of the committee is a joint act, but that through courtesy—and I will undertake to say a very proper courtesy, such as always prevails and ought to prevail between the two Houses of Congress—the committee of the House defer to the committee of the Senate, and the committee of the Senate defer to the committee of the House, but it still is the joint act of the two committees.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. As the Senate committee could not act jointly with the House committee, in giving this printing to Donelson & Armstrong, I suppose the House committee were at liberty to give it to whom they pleased?

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. So far as I was concerned as a member of the joint committee, I held myself responsible for that act, and by no means repudiated it.

Mr. GORMAN. The joint committee agreed nearly unanimously in fixing the prices. They also agreed unanimously that the members of the committee from each House should give out to Donelson & Armstrong such printing as they pleased, or withhold it.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that the House portion of the committee throw off all responsibility for the act of the Senate portion in giving the Senate printing to the editors of the Republic.

Mr. EVANS. I must now take the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Very well, I only wish this matter to be understood.

Mr. EVANS. I have only to remark, that it seems to me the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] has shown entirely too much feeling in relation to the intentions of anybody in this House. I think no one desires to attack his character or motives; certainly I do not. For myself I have to say that there is no printer in this city who has suggested to me anything in relation to this matter. I do not stand here in consequence of any interviews I have had with any printers or any one else. Not at all. And therefore it is, that I say I think the gentleman from Indiana is entirely too sensitive in relation to what has been said. But I say this whole system of public printing is wrong. Why did the committee not let this printing to A. Boyd Hamilton at the same prices at which they are about to let it to Gideon & Co. and Donelson & Armstrong?

Mr. STUART. I wish to ask the gentleman a question in connection with this proposition. The law requires that when the contractor fails to execute his contract, the committee shall get the printing done, and if it is done at an increased price, they shall charge the difference to the contractor. Now, if they were to increase the price upon Boyd Hamilton's contract, and then charge the difference to him, I want to know how much he would make by it? [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. The question is a very pertinent one. There is no doubt that Boyd Hamilton is bound, according to the strict letter of the law, under his contract, to make up any deficiency; but I have no doubt that the spirit of the law would not exclude this particular man for the benefit of others. I presume if the committee had not the power to give Boyd Hamilton the benefit of these increased prices, they could have come here and got the power. I do not see why he should be specially excluded.

But, in this connection, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing, [Mr. GORMAN,] whether Boyd Hamilton, in his memorial to that committee, asked for an increase in his prices, or whether he asked for relief in consequence of the action of that committee?

Mr. GORMAN. I will answer the gentleman. Boyd Hamilton came to the committee with a memorial stating the fact that he had not complied with his contract, in paper and some other particulars, and asking for general relief.

Mr. EVANS. I am about to close this hour which the continuous courtesy of this House has accorded me.

Now, sir, I do not care anything about Boyd Hamilton, or Gideon & Co., or Donelson & Armstrong, or anybody else, in connection with this public printing. But I think a due regard to this House, to the character of the country, to our own reputation, and to the interests of the Union, requires that the public printing should be executed well, and as speedily as possible. They require that you should resort to some other system if necessary. Then, while you adhere to this contract system, it is due that it should be enforced, or at least that you should make some respectable effort to do so; that we should no longer permit these abuses to continue; that we should no longer submit to dictation, let it come from what quarter it may, whether from one party or the other. Let us not be seduced by the plausible pretenses set up here that we have been delayed a great while in getting the public printing executed, and that we cannot get it under the present arrangement, and that we had better accede to this proposed one, or we shall not get it done at all. All these are illusions which we hear when it is wanted to confer a particular favor upon particular individuals. No, sir; let us resort to an effectual cure. Let us establish, in this city, a public printing office, upon a plan which shall insure as much economy as is consistent with promptness and efficiency, and then let us require that every particle of printing ordered upon one day shall be laid upon our table the next. There is nothing easier than this. I observe that the New York Herald offered to do it, and I have no doubt it would do it. I believe it can be done by the printers of this city. Let us demand that this shall be done. Is there anything in the way? I can see nothing, except partisan editors. I mean no disrespect to them when I call them partisan editors.

I do not know Donelson & Armstrong, but I respect their character as much as any man can do. I appreciate the high compliment paid to General Armstrong by General Andrew Jackson, when, in his last will and testament, he bequeathed to him his sword, with which he conquered in the battle at New Orleans. Mr. Donelson, I am told, has filled many high public stations with credit to himself and his country; and I have every reason to believe he is a gentleman of the highest character and abilities. Messrs. Gales & Seaton, every one knows for their urbanity, and for their high character, and distinguished attainments. Mr. Gideon is a personal friend of mine. And I mean no disrespect to any of these gentlemen, when I say that this system is one which ought to be abandoned for its innate corruption. As long as you adhere to it—as long as you persist in it—not ourselves only, but those who succeed us, will be exposed to endless corruption, and this House will be involved in all these difficulties and confusions which it now experiences.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for one moment? The gentleman speaks very highly of all these gentlemen, yet he says the system is one fraught with corruption. Now, will he be good enough to explain—for I know he is a good deal of a philosopher—how it is that the system can be so corrupt, when the men who manage it are pure and high-minded?

Mr. EVANS. I did not suppose I should be asked to explain such a matter as that. Each individual naturally desires to get as high a price as he can. It does not strike him as doing anything wrong to get a good price for his work. He does not intend to do any wrong to the Government, or to anybody. But I say that the system necessarily exposes those concerned in it to corrupting influences, and when bad men come to administer it, will lead to corruption, even if it has not done so now.

Now, I want to appeal to gentlemen candidly. I have no interest in the world to subserve in the matter. This contract system was entered into some years ago, when this subject was not so well understood. But we have seen the difficulties in which it has involved us. Now, we can get out of it easily, and with honor to ourselves. We can leave these political journals to stand upon the same footing with other public journals, upon their respectability, their character, and their subscription, and we can execute our own public printing.

Mr. GAYLORD. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him? This House is getting tired of this discussion. Besides, it has been suggested to me that he has spoken more than an hour.

Mr. EVANS. I am sorry the gentleman should say anything so discourteous to me. I have yielded to every gentleman who has desired to interrupt me, as I am sure the great body of the House will bear me out in what I am saying. They may be tired of me, it is true. The gentleman himself, I have no doubt, is tired of a discussion which has brought the light to shine upon some acts which he might rather have left in the dark. It is true that this discussion and explanation have made the light shine in dark places, but it will serve to point out those things which ought to be amended. I assure the gentleman I would never have interrupted him. But it is no matter. What I want the House to do is this: If you choose to adhere to the contract system, let that system be enforced.

Mr. GAYLORD. I meant no offense in what I said.

Mr. EVANS. Oh, I took no offense.

Mr. GAYLORD. I assure the gentleman I meant not the least disrespect.

Mr. EVANS. I am quite confident of that. I am sorry I showed so much warmth in relation to it.

But I was about to say that the price of composition and press-work being fixed, if we supply the paper ourselves, we can have the work done without difficulty. But the other is the best plan. It is best to establish a Government printing office [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the previous question.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and
The House adjourned till twelve o'clock to-morrow.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. SCUDDER gave notice that he would to-morrow, or some subsequent day, ask leave to bring in a bill granting to the State of Massachusetts seven hundred thousand acres of the public lands to aid in the extension of the Cape Cod Branch Railroad, from Sandwich to Cape Cod harbor; and the establishment of steam communication from some point on said road to the island of Nantucket.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. MACE: The memorial of Alfred G. Hall, M. D., of the city of Cincinnati, asking for the passage of a law to protect him in a new and valuable discovery in the healing art.

By Mr. STRATTON: The petition of Isaac Wilson and 328 others, citizens of Bridgeton, in the State of New Jersey, asking a more adequate protection to the articles of iron and glass, and to protect the labor of the country against the ruinous effect of foreign competition.

Also, the petition of R. C. Nichols and 135 others, citizens of the county of Cumberland, in the State of New Jersey, asking that a duty of at least forty per cent. ad valorem on the average prices of the last ten years, to be levied on the article of iron.

By Mr. JOHNSON, of Ohio: The memorial of John Hutchinson and 199 other citizens of Holmes County, Ohio, praying Congress to relieve the officers of Government from the violation of the Lord's day by secular employment.

By Mr. FAULKNER: Petition of sundry citizens of the county of Jefferson, State of Virginia, setting forth the loss sustained by the mechanics employed in the service of the United States, at the national armory at Harper's Ferry, from the recent floods, and praying Congress to make some provision for their relief.

Also, the petition of Marinus Lang, for an increase of his pension.

By Mr. HENN: Petition of Paul Shepherd and 60 others, citizens of Green township, Wapello county, Iowa, asking for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lafayette, Indiana, via Burlington, Iowa, to the Missouri river.

By Mr. BARRERE: Two petitions signed by numerous citizens of Clermont county, Ohio, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Williamsburgh, in Clermont county, Ohio, to Winchester, in Adams county, Ohio.

By Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana: The memorial of George H. Sears and others, of Vermilion county, Indiana, for a grant of one section of the public lands lying within said State, to each civil township for the support of common schools therein.

By Mr. COTTMAN: Resolutions of the Legislature of Maryland, in relation to the survey of Pocomoke sound, and the channel running between Watt's Island and Fox's Island, and between Pocomoke sound and Tangier sound, with a view to affixing buoys on the bars in said channel and sound.

By Mr. LETCHER: Memorial of James Raynes of Rockingham county, Virginia, for arrears of pension.

By Mr. J. W. HOWE: Two petitions of citizens of Mercer county, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to establish a post route from the borough of Mercer, in said county, via Sandy Lake and New Lebanon to Deer Creek post office.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of C. B. Stebbins, special mail agent, A. S. Williams, postmaster at Detroit, and others, praying that that part of post route No. 3,757 from Detroit to Utica, by way of Royal Oak, Michigan, be changed so as to run by way of the plank road from Detroit to Utica.

Also, the petition of James Morton, and others, citizens of Michigan, against running the mails on the Sabbath, &c.

By Mr. McQUEEN: The memorial of Dr. John C. Anderson, for compensation for a slave lost in the Mexican war service.

By Mr. CHURCHWELL: The petition of Samuel Martin, of Tennessee, praying Congress to establish a system of public printing, that will distribute the journals and public documents among the people.

By Mr. APPLETON, of Maine: The petition of R. C. Johnson, and 32 others, of Gorham, Maine, in favor of extending the Woodworth patent.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 6, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. NORRIS presented the petition of the heirs of John Stark, a Major General in the army of the Revolution, praying to be allowed depreciation on commutation certificates; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the petition of George V. Mitchell, praying that the costs of a suit brought against him by the United States, may be refunded, with interest; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of Abigail Stafford, only daughter and heir of Henry Smith, praying compensation for the services of her father during the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on Minot's Ledge; which were read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE. I hold in my hand the memorial of John R. St. John, in which he states that he is conversant with the construction of steam vessels, with navigation, and with the rocks of the Atlantic; and he professes to be able to build a steam vessel that can neither be burnt, nor sunk, even if stove against icebergs or rocks, and that cannot be blown up by its boilers, and which will sail at an average speed across the Atlantic of fifteen miles an hour. He also will undertake to build the vessel in five years, provided the Government will remunerate him in case of success. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was so referred.

Mr. HALE also submitted documents in relation to the compensation paid to Charles A. Davis, a lieutenant in the Navy, for services in preparing the Nautical Almanac; which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of the heirs of Johannes Schultz, or Shultys, praying compensation for the services of their ancestor during the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DOUGLAS submitted an additional document in relation to the memorial of Robert H. Caffee and others, of the Mexican Boundary Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORT FROM STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of Tennessee, praying an appropriation to complete the navy-yard at Memphis according to the original plan, submitted a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

BELDEN &amp; COMPANY.

Mr. RUSK submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before the Senate all papers and proofs, on file in any of the Executive Departments, touching the claim of Samuel A. Belden & Co., of Brownsville, Texas, against the Mexican Government, for injuries inflicted upon said Belden & Co., as alleged by them, in violation of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

FLORIDA VOLUNTEER COMPANIES.

Mr. MORTON submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the payment of the volunteer companies raised and commanded by Captains S. L. Sparkman, J. Parker, R. D. Bradley, E. E. Mizell, and A. Jernegan, upon the frontier settlements of Florida, in the year 1849, for the protection of the citizens against the Seminole Indians.

BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were severally read a third time and passed:

An act granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public land, for the purpose of constructing a canal or railroad across the peninsula of Michigan; and

An act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Michigan, in trust for the Zilwaukee, Grand Traverse, and Mackinaw Plank Road Company, in aid of the construction of a plank road from Zilwaukee on Saginaw river, to Grand Traverse Bay, thence to the Straits of Mackinaw.

The last-mentioned act was amended by striking out all after the word "Michigan," and inserting "for making a railroad from Saginaw river to Mackinaw."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the sessions of the courts of the United States in the district of Delaware."

FAYETTEVILLE AND CENTRAL PLANK ROAD.

Mr. BADGER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution, of which I had not an opportunity yesterday to give notice. It is a mere local matter.

No objection being made, the resolution was accordingly read, as follows:

Resolution granting the right of way to the Fayetteville and Central Plank Road.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the right of way through the public lands of the United States at Fayetteville, North Carolina, which are not at present improved, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the Fayetteville and Central Plank Road Company: Provided, That in the opinion of the President of the United States, such grant be not injurious to the public interest: And provided further, That if said road be not completed within two years, or if at any time after its completion the said road be discontinued or abandoned, the grant shall cease and determine.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to make a very brief explanation, and ask the indulgence of the Senate for the second reading of the resolution, with a view to put it on its passage.

Mr. CASS. Does the resolution specify any particular width?

Mr. BADGER. No, sir.

Mr. CASS. Would it not be better that it should?

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection. All I want is the width of the plank road; and I am quite willing to amend it, so as to meet the views of the Senator.

I merely wish to mention that a plank road is being constructed, of some importance to the State of North Carolina, at least to a large portion of her citizens; and unless they have the right of running this road through the lands referred to in the resolution, they will have to make a long and expensive detour. As part of the road is made over high land, it is important that it should not be made to deflect from the direct course. And as it is the first application made by North Carolina for the right of way, and as it does not make a demand for any extensive grant of land, I hope that the Senate will consent to its being put on its passage.

The resolution was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BADGER. I now beg leave to make the amendment suggested by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] by inserting in the proper place, the words: "provided that the right of way so granted shall not exceed forty feet in width."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was then reported to the Senate; and the amendment having been concurred in, the resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. It was subsequently read a third time and passed.

PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS BY MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Some days ago, I reported back from the Committee on Claims, a bill making it unlawful for certain persons therein named to prosecute claims against the United States; I presume there will be no objection to its consideration now, or to its passage. The bill has been well considered, and I would be glad if the Senate would consent to take it up now.

The PRESIDENT. It is moved to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of "A bill to amend and extend the provisions of an act approved July 29, 1846, entitled "An act in relation to the payment of claims." The bill has been reported from the committee with amendments.

The motion to postpone the prior orders was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that all transfers and assignments hereafter to be made of any claim upon the United States, or any part or share thereof, or interest therein, whether absolute or conditional, and whatever may be the consideration therefor, and all contracts or agreements hereafter to be made for allowing compensation to any agent for claims, or other person or persons for or on account of services performed or to be performed in procuring testimony in support of or otherwise aiding in obtaining the allowance of any such claim; and all powers of attorney, orders, or other authorities, for receiving payment of any such claim, or any part or share thereof, shall be absolutely null and void, unless the same shall be freely made and executed in the presence of at least two attesting witnesses, after the allowance of such claim, the ascertainment of the amount due, and the issuing of a warrant for the payment thereof.

The second section provides that any officer of the United States, or person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under or in connection with any Executive Department of the Government of the United States, who, after the passage of this act, shall act as an agent for prosecuting any claim or claims against the United States, or shall in any manner or by any means, otherwise than in the discharge of his proper official duties, aid or assist in the prosecution or support of any such claim or claims, shall be liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor, and on conviction in any court having cognizance thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or suffer imprisonment not exceeding six calendar months, or both, as the court in its discretion shall adjudge, due regard being had to all the circumstances of the case.

The amendment proposed to add the following additional section to the bill:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That any member of either House of Congress who, after the passage of this act, shall, for compensation paid or to be paid, certain or contingent, act as agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim or claims against the United States, or shall in any manner or by any means, for such compensation, aid or assist in the prosecution or support of any such claim or claims, shall be liable to indictment and prosecution, as in the cases mentioned in the second section of this act.

The fourth section, as originally proposed, is as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of this act, and of the act of July twenty-nine, eighteen hundred and forty-six, entitled "An act in relation to the payment of claims," shall apply and extend to all claims against the United States, whether allowed by special acts of Congress, or arising under general laws or treaties, or in any other manner whatever.

Mr. HAMLIN. It strikes me that that amendment is not quite definite enough. I take it that any member of Congress may have occasion to argue a cause in the court-room below, in the prosecution of a claim. I would like to have the amendment made specific, and embrace precisely what the Senator intended it should embrace.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I think there can be no difficulty with regard to that section. The United States cannot be sued, and therefore members of Congress cannot be concerned in suits against the United States.

Mr. BADGER. I would suggest, that though I concur with the view expressed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that there is no necessity for such an amendment, perhaps it will relieve the difficulty if the Senator will consent to insert an amendment, so as to provide against the prosecution of any claim pending before either House of Congress, or any of the Executive Departments.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have no objection to inserting such an amendment; but I think it is unnecessary. The amendment is sufficient as it is.

Mr. BADGER. I think it is sufficient as it is; but it may relieve the difficulty which exists in the minds of some.

Mr. BERRIEN. That amendment is obviously important. There are cases which occur in the Supreme Court of the United States, in which a claim is prosecuted against the United States. The United States authorize individuals in the Territories to bring the United States into court, in the assertion of their titles to real estate. These claims are brought up before the Supreme Court of the United States, and they afford instances of claims against the United States which are prosecuted by counsel in that court. The amendment suggested is, therefore, obviously important.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am aware that the Congress of the United States sometimes authorizes suits to be brought against the United States. That, however, is very seldom. But in order to obviate all difficulty, I am willing to agree to the amendment suggested by the honorable Senator from North Carolina. I think it will obviate all difficulty.

The PRESIDENT. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee, by inserting after the words "United States," in the first section, the words "before either House of Congress, or any of the Executive Departments."

The section as proposed to be amended would then read as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That any member of either House of Congress who, after the passage of this act, shall, for compensation paid or to be paid, certain or contingent, act as agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim or claims against the United States, before either House of Congress or any of the Executive Departments, or shall in any manner or by any means, for such compensation, aid or assist in the prosecution or support of any such claim or claims, shall be liable to indictment and prosecution, as in the cases mentioned in the second section of this act.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The object of the committee in reporting this amendment, was to prevent members of Congress from prosecuting claims anywhere. Now, if the amendment suggested by the honorable Senator from North Carolina should be adopted, that is prescribing that members of Congress shall not prosecute claims before either House of Congress or any of the Executive Departments, it might be inferred that they would go before boards of commissioners, and therefore it will become necessary to insert "nor before any board or boards of commissioners."

Mr. HALE. I think the amendment to the amendment had better be left out. It is well enough as it is. It seems to me that it implies the existence of something wrong, although I am willing to concede to it so far as members of Congress act upon claims before Congress or before the Departments. But, sir, if the bill stands as it is reported, it is general, and members of Congress cannot practice in the prosecution of these claims anywhere. Now, there is a species of claims against the United States, which is prosecuted in the Supreme Court directly, and which is familiar to many gentlemen who now hear me.

There is also a case of doubtful construction of law, as in the case of Kendall vs. Stockton & Stokes, and there is a proceeding in the nature of a mandamus against the officer, which is, in substance, a proceeding against the United States, and it is as liable to all objections, so far as members of Congress may be concerned in it, as if they were prosecuting a claim before Congress or any of the Departments. I think the amendment is well enough as it is, and I hope the amendment suggested to be made to it will not be adopted.

Mr. BADGER. I am very anxious that the bill should be passed, and passed in an effectual form. At the same time, I do not concur with the Senator from New Hampshire, and I think that if there is any doubt about the amendment as originally reported by the committee, it would be better to adopt this provision. The evil intended to be guarded against, is that of enabling members of Congress to be engaged in the prosecution of claims otherwise than in their quasi duties which they perform for their constituents, and gratuitously, before such tribunals, and under such circumstances, that it may not be supposed their position as members of Congress may give them an undue influence in prosecuting them. But if the United States authorizes a judicial tribunal or quasi judicial tribunal to take cognizance of and decide claims against the United States, I see not why a member of Congress should not be at liberty to prosecute his ordinary profession before such tribunals as in other instances. The objection to the prosecution of any claim before either House of Congress or the Executive Department, is that which I have stated. Such aid by members of Congress should be entirely gratuitous, and performed from considerations of duty, and should never be mixed up with the business of Congress. But beyond that, it seems to me, we should not extend the prohibition.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to hear some reason given for the necessity of the amendment which is proposed. I cannot see that the construction of the law will be affected materially, though it might become more complicated by the addition of the words proposed. As I view the law, it does not interfere with the professional right of any person to advocate and defend the rights of his constituents in any of the courts of the United States. I cannot see that there is any right to prevent a member of Congress from prosecuting claims against the United States Government under any and all circumstances. I hope the bill will pass as it is, as I cannot perceive the necessity of the amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and, on a division, it was agreed to—ayes 24, noes 14.

The PRESIDENT. The same amendment will be necessary in the fourth section; and will be inserted to make it correspond with the rest of the bill.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire further to amend the amendment, by inserting the following words after the word "Departments: "Or before any board of commissioners constituted by any act of Congress, or made necessary by treaties between the United States and any other Power."

This will make that section read as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That any member of either House of Congress, who, after the passage of this act, shall, for compensation, paid or to be paid, certain or contingent, act as agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim or claims against the United States before either House of Congress, or any of the Executive Departments, or before any board of commissioners constituted by any act of Congress, or made necessary by treaties between the United States and other Powers," &c.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The committee which reported this amendment, intended to make it unlawful for members of Congress to prosecute claims anywhere, and I believe that the amendment, as it is, would effect that object. I do not, therefore, consider the amendment to the amendment at all necessary. It may, however, become necessary now, since the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina; but the object of the committee in proposing the amendment, as reported, was what I have stated.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now on the amendment as amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have received, within the last five minutes, a letter, which, in connection with one of the amendments proposed to the bill, has suggested to me an idea that I will communicate to the Senate. The amendment says, "Or shall, in any manner, or by any means, for such compensation, aid or assist in the prosecution or support of any such claim or claims." Now, suppose that a lawyer—a member of Congress—holds a power of attorney, or is engaged half a day in preparing papers, does he, in charging office fees, come within that provision? Say that I receive a letter, requesting me to go to some department, and aid a person who has some claim against the Government—possibly for lands—do I come within the operation of the amendments by complying with the request of the writer, and aiding him in the prosecution of the claim?

Mr. BRODHEAD. The clause speaks of "compensation." If the performance of the service was gratuitous, it would not be within the operation of the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I never accept any compensation for such services; but I do not know that my practice, in that respect, should be a rule for everybody. I know that many persons are pretty extensively engaged at home in prosecuting that office business, and they receive that office business, which is connected with the prosecution of claims here, and receive compensation in the shape of fees.

It seems to me that the action of members of Congress should be distinct from that of chamber-petty and maintenance, and from obtaining part of their supply from the Government. That is the evil which should be guarded against, and nothing but that. I move to strike out that part of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. What part does the Senator refer to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. From the words "or inclusive," in the fifth line of the third page, the following words: "Or shall, in any manner, or by any means, for such compensation, aid or assist in the prosecution of any such claim or claims."

Mr. BADGER. I wish to say that the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky will leave the provision entirely vain and useless.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I withdraw it.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, which was concurred in.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina. He stated the other day, in speaking on this subject, what he considered to be a very great evil, which was the recognition of agents by the different Executive Departments here in the prosecution of claims, and, if I recollect right, he stated that the Executive officers were in the habit of retaining the fee of the agent out of the compensation which was due to the claimant.

Mr. BRODHEAD. This bill reaches that case.

Mr. BORLAND. This bill only relates to remedies for the future; it is entirely prospective. Do I understand that where there are pending claims which have been allowed, but not paid, and where there is a dispute between the claimants and agents—as I understand there are in some cases—the fee will be paid into the hands of the Executive officers, and the whole claim not be paid to the claimants?

Mr. BADGER. It is not the habit of the Executive Departments to retain out of claims any sum of money for the purpose of fees for compensation; but where there has been an actual assignment of any part of a claim they treat the assignee quoad hoc as being in the situation of the original holder, or assignor. The bill as originally introduced made no distinction in terms between the assignments already made or assignments hereafter to be made. The committee thought proper to restrict it to future assignments. The committee thought it was proper that we should not have even the appearance of undertaking to invalidate by act of Congress, or by any ex post facto provision, any assignment made in conformity to the laws.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think that any difficulty can possibly arise from the source suggested by the Senator from Arkansas. I think that difficulty is obviated by looking at the difference of structure of the power of attorney and of an assignment. The committee did not think they could recognize the right of the Government to invalidate any existing contract, where it amounted to an assignment. They left it as it stood in that respect.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendments made in the Committee of the Whole, and they were agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

WAR-STEAMER FOR HARBOR DEFENSE.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. STOCKTON] is deeply interested in the resolution authorizing the building of an iron steamer. His wishes were gratified the other day by having the resolution taken up; but, on a motion made by me, the subject was postponed for the purpose of taking up the bill relating to the claims arising from the conquest of California. I know that it is highly important that the deficiency bill should now be disposed of, but I give notice that I shall call up the resolution, in which the Senator from New Jersey is so much interested, on Tuesday next.

NON-INTERVENTION.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE], who would have been entitled by courtesy to the floor to-day upon the resolutions in regard to non-intervention, has consented to postpone his remarks, and will not probably call up the resolutions until Thursday next.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852," the pending question being upon the amendment of the Committee on Finance to insert the following:

For additional compensation for increasing the transportation of the United States mail between New York and Liverpool, in the Collins line of steamers, to twenty-six trips per annum; at such times as shall be directed by the Postmaster General, and in conformity to his last annual report to Congress, and his letter of the 15th of November last to the Secretary of the Navy, commencing said increased service on the first of January, 1853, at the rate of $33,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance, the sum of $33,500.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I am fully aware that the Senate has become tired of the discussion of this amendment; and I am tired of it myself, as I believe the people are tired of hearing of it. Nothing would induce me, sir, to lengthen out the debate by taking part in it, but a sense of duty to my constituents, to the people of this country, and to myself as an American citizen. I deem the question one of great importance, not only to individual interests, but, in a national point of view, to the whole American people. It is simply for this reason that I feel a deep interest in the question. Novice as I am, sir, in parliamentary affairs, I cannot expect to cope with honorable Senators of far greater powers and much longer experience, nor yet to add much weight to the arguments already advanced in support of this measure; much less can I hope to bring home conviction to the mind of the honorable Senator from Virginia, to whom I regret to find myself opposed. I hope, however, that powerful and discerning mind will yet discover the error of its ways as regards this important subject; and when this shall occur, I know the honorable Senator's high sense of honor will not withhold an acknowledgment.

Mr. President, I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate by attempting a thorough investigation of the subject now before us, with a view to ascertaining the precise number of dollars and cents which this Government should advance to enable the Collins line of ocean steamers to compete successfully with their old, skilled, and experienced antagonists of the British Cunard line. I would, however, take a brief, practical, general view of the subject; and however imperfect that view may be, I trust it may be found truthful, if not satisfactory and convincing. I trust, also, that whatever I may say will be national in its character and bearing.

The honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] whom I am always pleased to hear on this floor—because, however I may differ from his views on this question, always brings great force and power to his aid on any subject that calls him out—assumed the other day that the amount to be paid by the Government in aid of this enterprise would be so much paid for protection against foreign competition. The honorable gentleman then added, and very properly too, in my opinion, that there were other interests equally meritorious, which stand in as much need of protection as the Collins line of steamers—such as the manufacture of iron, woolen, and other articles. I have the pleasure to agree most fully with the honorable gentleman on this point, and can but hope that we may not disagree on a partial remedy for the evils experienced in all these cases.

But, Mr. President, the honorable Senator stated, I think, that to extend pecuniary aid to the Collins line of steamers, would be protection in its worst form. Whether worst or best, however, sir, it is the only available form. For the Government to discriminate between this line and the British line, by means of custom duties, port charges, &c., would be a direct infraction of treaty stipulations; and hence the only protection we can extend to the American line is pecuniary aid from the National Treasury. But as the honorable Senator from Virginia incidentally introduced the subject of protection to manufacturers, it may not be deemed irrelevant should I, in passing, stop to offer a remark or two on that subject as incidental to the question now before us.

It is an idea that has long been considered by many as an incontrovertible fact, that any aid bestowed by Government on any branch of business, in the form of discriminating duties, or otherwise, is a tax imposed on the consumer, and to be paid by him, in addition to what would otherwise be the cost of the article consumed, and that for the sole benefit of the manufacturer or producer. In other words, that, if the purchaser were to pay a duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem on the article purchased, the domestic and foreign fabric both would be enhanced twenty per cent. in price to the consumer, which addition would become a perpetual tax, and find its way into the pocket of the manufacturer or producer to enhance his profits.

No doubt, Mr. President, this idea has been, and is, very honestly entertained and advocated; yet I think it is a mistake, and feel well assured that there are facts in abundance to prove it so. But I am not about to go into the argument on this subject at the present time, and will merely notice one or two facts to illustrate what I have said.

It is believed, sir, that all articles of manufacture produced in the United States, iron included, the manufacture of which may be said to have gained a firm footing, and been fostered so as to enable them to compete with similar foreign articles, have continually diminished in price to the present moment, and are to be had at less prices in our own market than in any other market in the world. In fact, the reduction of price in most articles has been more than double the amount of protective duties that have been imposed on similar articles from foreign countries. Certainly this does not look very much like taxing the consumer.

It is truly essential to success, and therefore as important to all branches of business, especially manufactures; that skill and practical knowledge should be obtained by long and close application and thorough training in regular practical operations, and as much so as that candidates for office in our Army and Navy should be trained in our military or naval schools, and in the field or on shipboard be made practically acquainted with the duties of their professions. The evidence of the benefits of such a course of training with the artisan and the operative is to be seen in every city, town, village, and hamlet, and on the person of every citizen, in the astonishing improvements that have been made in every department of the mechanic arts, and the equally astonishing reduction that has been effected in the cost of almost every production.

Mr. President, in the very nature of things it is impossible for our mechanics and operatives to compete with those of Europe in those branches in which their mechanical ingenuity has not been called out and developed. Practice is necessary. We have as good mechanical ability as any country on the globe, and practice, and practice alone, is necessary to its full development. When Government grants to that ability protection against foreign competition, it calls it into successful action; and whether in the manufacture of cloth or iron, or the construction and management of steamships, or anything else, that talent will not fail to return to the Government and the country a thousand fold for all the protection thus granted.

Permit me, sir, to ask, how is our mechanical talent to be fully developed? How are our artisans, our engineers, and our hosts of others, necessary to the business, to become skilled in the construction of large ocean steamers and their machinery, and in their management, without practice? Yet sir, in accordance with the progress of the age, the skill required for this business will become as necessary on the seas as railroads have already become to displace the mail-coach and baggage-wagon on the land. I will here introduce a fact to show what difficulties have had to be encountered, and what large expenses incurred, in carrying out such an undertaking as the Collins line.

The main shaft of a large ocean steamer—a war steamer, if you please—was to be made: its length some thirty feet, more or less, and its diameter some twenty-four inches. You at once see that that was a huge mass of iron. For such a work we had no furnace of sufficient dimensions and capacity—they were altogether too small for such work. Our hammers were far too light; and our fires, while burning the surface of the metal, scarcely warmed the center. Our best and ablest forgers were entirely unacquainted with the process of working such a huge mass of metal; and all, sir—all had to learn, who undertook to do it—all had to learn by practice. Experiment on experiment failed, and resulted in consequent heavy losses, until, by costly improvements in the means, the artisan, by long and determined perseverance, had learned to perfect this work.

Mr. President, permit me to inquire who is to be benefited by these experiments, these failures, these losses, this long perseverance, and this final success? The community is, or will be, as much benefited by them as those who achieved the success and paid the cost; and infinitely more so. And the Government—yes, sir, the Government—is, or will be, as much benefited as the community. And, sir, what I have said of this massive shaft is equally applicable to every portion of that huge machine—the marine engine—which propels the mammoth ocean steamer with such mighty speed across the Atlantic, and with which we have beaten the ablest mechanics and the best steam-ships and steam-engines of the Old World. And is this nothing to our Government? Is this nothing to the people of the United States?

Mr. President, the period is rapidly approaching when canvas will be a scarce article on the ocean, and when our steamers will constitute our navy. Then it will be found that whatever aid our Government may have extended to our merchant steam marine will not have been lost, inasmuch as, by that means, they will have enabled our mechanics and artisans to render invaluable aid, which they would not have been qualified to render without it.

Sir, the Government of the United States is emphatically dependent on the community for talent, ingenuity, and practical skill. They have no schools or other institutions for the purpose of mechanical instruction; and when ship-builders, engineers, or other mechanics are wanted, the Government, like an individual employer, must at all times be compelled to seek them where they are to be had. It is certainly, then, for the interest of the Government to foster those enterprises, by means of which the very talent and skill required for Government purposes may be the most readily developed and most properly disciplined.

In what school has been reared and qualified a race of the best seamen in the world, and among them a fair proportion of as bold and skillful navigators as ever trod a quarter-deck on the stormy Atlantic? Sir, that school is our eastern fisheries—a business that has long been fostered by the hand of the Government by the payment of large sums of money in the form of bounty; and these hardy denizens of the ocean have returned fourfold to their Government and their country for every dollar thus bestowed on them. Our great ocean steamers are rare schools for the purpose of turning out first-rate practical seamen, practical navigators, practical mechanics, and practical engineers; and I feel fully assured it is not affirming too much when I say there are no institutions in the United States in which all these professions—except, perhaps, those of the seaman and the navigator—can be studied to so great advantage, where practical knowledge of a high order can be so readily obtained, or where men can become so well qualified to discharge the duties of those professions, as on board those steamers. And, sir, is this nothing to our Government?—nothing to our country? Is it a matter of trivial importance to have our naval and merchant marine officered and manned by the best seamen, navigators, engineers in the world? Is it a matter of no moment to this Government and this people to know that they have at their call mechanics who are capable of beating the world in the construction and equipment of ships, either for peace or war? Is it a matter altogether unimportant that, in case of war with a foreign nation, we can fill our ships with men reared in such a school, instead of those picked up here and there, without training, without experience, and without practical knowledge? Sir, I consider the question before the Senate as one that bears directly on this important subject. On its face it is a proposition to aid the Collins line of steamers, but practically, I look upon it as one in which the Government and the country are deeply interested for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] has taken the ground that aid is, in this instance, called for merely to enable the proprietors of the Collins line of steamers to keep up a ruinous competition with a foreign line, in a trial of speed on the ocean; and, as the Collins line has not yet been able to sustain itself, he has come to the conclusion that it never can do so. Such being the case, he seems to think, that the sooner the business is given up to the Cunard line the better. Further, he thinks, also, that the business being a losing one, the more of it the Cunard line does, the sooner that line will be ruined. I do not think, sir, that the honorable gentleman, in coming to these conclusions, manifested his usual depth of thought, or clearness and force of argument. Sir, were these conclusions correct, and had a line of conduct been pursued in conformity with them with regard to our manufactures, not a yard of cloth, nor a ton of iron, would have been manufactured in this country. At first, and for a long time, it was a losing business in this country; and, to carry the honorable gentleman's conclusions out, our manufacturers ought to give up the entire business to the foreign manufacturers at once, in order to involve them in speedy ruin.

Every one acquainted with the history of manufactures in this country well knows that those manufactures—especially that of iron, and that of cotton by machinery—were encouraged by bonuses and exclusive privileges, bestowed by the governments of the several States in which they were situated. Thus early did our ancestors deem it a matter of great public importance to encourage private enterprise for the public good, against foreign competition. But, sir, none of these enterprises were at first able to sustain themselves, even with the legislative patronage they received. One after another they all failed, and retired from the field of competition. And why was this? Simply because in this country the business was an untried experiment. It failed, as experiments, subsequently successful, frequently do at first, for the want of that skill which is to be acquired only by means of experience and practice.

Mr. President, suppose our manufacturers had finally adopted the conclusion arrived at by the honorable Senator from Virginia, and because their business had hitherto been a losing one given it up entirely into the hands of the foreign manufacturer, with the view of working his speedy ruin, what would have been the result? The foreign manufacturer would have retained the monopoly. He would have ruled our markets, and he would have exacted and extorted from us prices at least fifty per cent., and in many cases a hundred, above what we are now required to pay. To the fixed determination and indomitable perseverance of our mechanics, operatives, and manufacturers, to compete with foreign skill, aided by protective duties, are due the invaluable improvements that have been made in all branches of manufactures, and the great reduction in prices that has taken place. This view of the subject in most of its bearings is equally applicable to the question now before the Senate.

In the enterprise of steam navigation on the ocean, Great Britain was many years ahead of us. Her first experiments were partial, and some of them total failures. So have some of ours been, not excepting even some made by our Government. But by the time we had commenced in the same line of business, it had called to its aid in Great Britain the best scientific skill and knowledge in the world, and their powerful energies have been concentrated on the mighty work before them. After years of trial and toil they succeeded; and it was not till the proprietors of the Collins line had projected their gigantic enterprise that any attempt at all to be compared with that of the British company had been made in America. We had, to be sure, multitudes of steam-engines, and fleets of steam-boats, and few, very few, steam-ships; but among the whole there was no one to serve as a model or a guide for the construction and equipment of a steam-ship such as the object required, or the nature of the contract with the Government demanded. Suppose the ships already built, there were no facilities adequate to the construction of their immense engines. All was to be created, sir, at an enormous expense of time, skill, and money—all was created. By long and determined perseverance, the mechanical skill and ingenuity were found equal to the emergency. Practically the experiment has proved eminently successful. But so great has been its cost, and so powerful the rivalry, that hitherto it has not rewarded its projectors and proprietors as such a noble enterprise should. In this dilemma, the honorable Senator from Virginia advises those proprietors to relinquish the business to their rivals as the speediest means of bringing ruin on those rivals. We will examine this proposition.

Mr. President, to relinquish the Collins line would be precisely what the Cunard line particularly desires. To compel the Collins line to withdraw from its route is precisely what the Cunard line is attempting to do. Such a result once accomplished, and the business becomes a monopoly in the hands of the proprietors of that line.

They can then have their own way, regulate prices to suit themselves; and not only sustain their line by means of their business; but enrich their company. To this end, together with a pride of feeling, they have formed the determination that no American line to rival theirs shall traverse the same route. True to this determination, and well knowing that the British Government will sustain them, they have adopted that petty species of competition which has long been practiced to an extent injurious to all parties, and ruinous to some, between rival steam-boats and stage-coaches in this country. In other words, the British line has determined, cost what it may, to drive the Collins line from the ocean. The Collins line, or its proprietors, though strong in wealth, cannot compete with the Lords of the Admiralty, with the British Treasury at their command; and the question is, as our neighbors on the other side of the Atlantic seem unwilling that we should run a line of steamers to one of their ports, whether we will or will not do it at any rate. To do it, sir, some further Government aid must be granted for the present. Without such aid, the enterprise must be relinquished, and we must be reduced to an absolute dependence on Great Britain for all the facilities required by the Government and the people of this country by means of steam navigation between our own ports and those of Great Britain. But, sir, the honorable gentleman does not believe it requires the aid asked for to enable the Collins line to go on. I need take up no more time in reply to this point than to say, and which is the fact, that the stock of the company can now be purchased in the market, in any quantity, at a discount of fifty per cent. from par. This simple fact will be, to every man at all acquainted with business, a full and sufficient reply to all argument based on calculations which may be intended to show that this line can continue in operation without the aid which this amendment is intended to afford. In order to show, sir, that the proprietors of this line and the citizens of New York wish for no monopoly, I am authorized to say that $1,000,000 of the stock of the company will be sold at par, if wanted, to the citizens of any State in the Union, should this amendment prevail.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Virginia has characterized this competition as a mere trial of speed on the ocean. Sir, I have shown that it embraces much more than this. But, sir, no doubt this has had much to do with it; and, in my opinion, the gratification of a high and honorable feeling of national pride is worth something to a Government and a country. Up to the period of the war of 1812, the American people had almost unanimously yielded their assent to the oft-reiterated boast that "Britannia rules the waves." That war afforded some practical data that cast some doubts on the legitimacy of the claim in a naval point of view. Our clipper ships have increased those doubts; and the superior speed of the little yacht America, and our Collins steamers over any vessels of their description ever constructed in Great Britain, has set the matter at rest. And can it be matter of surprise that the American people, who have been so long, constantly, and bitterly taunted by the English, for their supposed inferiority in everything, should manifest some degree of national pride at these demonstrations? Is it not an amiable, patriotic feeling? It is not wonderful, then, that they, the people, should expect, and, sir, they will expect, that some aid should be rendered to this line of steamers, which, at such a heavy cost, and so much loss, has achieved the greatest victory, whether of war or peace, that was ever achieved on the ocean: a victory, not of brute force, but of science and skill!

Mr. President, I ask if the Government and the country gain nothing by this enterprise? The vast improvements introduced by this company into steam machinery for sea-going purposes, and also into the vessels themselves, are invaluable, and worth more, vastly more, to the country, than all the aid the company has heretofore received from the Government and that now solicited by them. Certainly, such an enterprise does, on the score of the public good, demand some reward for all the sacrifices it has cost.

Sir, whether this line of steamers will or will not, with the aid now asked for, be able to sustain itself, is a question which time only can definitely answer. For my own part, I should think it would. The proprietors are good business men; and they, together with those engaged in managing and navigating these ships, will, of course, be learning every day, by means of practice, where improvements can be made and expenditures reduced; and, by a truly business-like and economical line of conduct, I believe the experiment will finally be found profitable, as it has most assuredly proved successful as to speed and safety. As an American citizen and an American mechanic, I feel, in common with my fellow-citizens, proud of the Collins line, and hope it may be sustained. Sir, I see no necessity for the apprehension expressed by the honorable gentleman from Virginia, that aid now rendered shall become a precedent for the future action of Congress. Congress will hereafter, as now, should such a question come up, act on the necessity, the justice, or the expediency of the case, without regard to precedent. These ships are partially in the employment of the Government—on them the Government has a lien—and, whenever the exigencies of the case may require, they will be converted exclusively to the Government service. Shall we, then, under such circumstances, withhold the aid required, and thus second the efforts of its foreign competitors to crush the enterprise at once, and thus deprive the Government and the country of the invaluable services of the finest and best line of steam-ships in the world? Sir, I hope not. It would mortify me, and so it would, I am certain, the great body of our citizens, to witness such a result.

The honorable Senator, however, does not seem to look with a great deal of regret on the apprehended failure of the Collins line. Let it go down, he says, and by advertising we can have vessels as fleet as theirs, for a great deal less money. That the Government, by going into the market, and dickering, as the cant phrase is, with steam-ship owners, might obtain vessels for less money, is altogether likely; but whether equally fleet, is another question. They do not exist now, neither in this country nor any other. But, sir, the prudent man looks at the quality of an article as well as the price. You may procure vessels at much cheaper rates; but what will be their quality? You will not find those that have been built under the eye of the Government agent, and in accordance with the requirements of a Government contract. They may be good vessels. They may be safe vessels. Who will know, and who is to hazard the trial? Besides, sir, shall we exercise no magnanimity—no justice? True, sir, the Government has fulfilled the contract to its letter with this company, and paid all that was stipulated—all that was asked. But what then? Will the Government drive a hard bargain with its citizens; and, because they happened to make a miscalculation, compel them either to relinquish their contract, after having made enormous sacrifices in struggles for its fulfillment, or to fulfill it at a sacrifice still greater? I trust not—I trust the Government has more magnanimity, more justice, more honor, than to suffer such a result. I hope the aid to prevent it will be cheerfully afforded, and that this company will receive the encouragement and support they so richly merit.

But, sir, the honorable gentleman from Virginia went still further. He assumed that, in case the aid now asked for was granted, Congress would lie under obligation to extend similar aid, if required, to companies in any and every other port formed for similar purposes. Sir, I cannot see the force of this argument. My own impression has been that Congress possessed some discretionary powers not exactly limited by precedents. The object in view in this case seems to me to test thoroughly our steam communication with England, the ablest mechanic power in the world, and in which attempt we necessarily come in competition with her own steam-ships, for the satisfaction and benefit of our whole country. By the result of this trial people in all the ports in our country will be ruled. Those who would wish to engage in this business are as much interested in having this experiment carried out, as are the proprietors of this line. Should the experiment fail of success, then, of course, it must be abandoned, and others would not be very ambitious to renew it. Should it succeed, no further aid would be required; and thus the people everywhere will learn the result without the further sacrifice of either private or public means. But there is still another important feature of the case to be considered.

Mr. President, can any other company come here under similar circumstances with those connected with the Collins line, and present similar claims? I believe not. The gentlemen constituting this company have invested in their noble steamers the amount of very nearly $3,000,000. These ships have been regularly run at a continual heavy loss, in the fulfillment of the company's contract with the Government; and without some additional compensation for their services to the Government, their operations must cease, and the immense capital invested be very much impaired, if not lost. I believe it a case without a parallel in this country; and whenever another like it may come up here, it will be time enough to meet it. These facts would be sufficient to justify me in my own mind in voting for the relief asked for in this case; but I have others, if possible, more potent still. I refer, sir, to the contract between the Government and this company.

The Government required vessels of great strength and burden, capable of being converted into ships-of-war when required. The mail and passenger service required speed. Hence the company had to secure both objects. The ships are much heavier than would have been required for the mail and passenger service. Therefore they cost more than they would otherwise have done, required much heavier and more powerful engines, and are propelled and navigated at a much heavier expense. All these items combined make up the sum total of the extra expense for which the appeal is now made to the justice as well as magnanimity of Congress. The proprietors of the line say, and I have no doubt truly, that, in building their vessels so much stronger and heavier than they would otherwise have done in carrying out their contract with the Government, and thereby incurring a greatly-increased expense in constructing, equipping, and sailing, they acted in conformity with the wishes and instruction of the Navy Department. All this has been done by them in good faith; and after this, for them, in the face of a ruinous competition by a foreign line, sustained by a foreign Government, to be compelled to run their ships at a tremendous sacrifice to themselves, in the Government service, is, in my view, a flagrant violation of the principles of justice and equity.

Mr. President, during the discussion of this amendment, the amount paid per annum, or per trip, by the British Government to the Cunard line, has been stated and spoken of by way of comparison with the amount paid by our own Government to the Collins line. I have also made the statement, the truth of which will appear self-evident, that the cost of construction, equipment, and navigating the steamers of the Collins line, had been greatly enhanced by reason of their excess of strength and tonnage, over what would have been required for ordinary mail and passenger service alone. And the additional strength and tonnage were given to these vessels to fit them for war vessels. And, sir, I am now prepared to show, from the statement I hold in my hand, the amount paid to the Collins line will not be, all things considered, including what is contemplated in the amendment before the Senate, quite equal to the amount paid to the Cunard line.

The Cunard line has seven ships, the aggregate tonnage of which is 12,252 tons. These ships cross the Atlantic eighty-five times per year, or, rather, what is equivalent to eighty-five trips for one ship. This makes the total tonnage worked across the Atlantic, in the eighty-five trips, 148,750 tons. For this service they receive from the British Government, in round numbers, $856,820—making $5 75 per ton. The Collins line has four ships, of an aggregate of 13,702 tons, which cross the Atlantic fifty-two times per annum, or perform a service equal to fifty-two trips for one vessel, working an aggregate of 178,126 tons, across the Atlantic. The amount to be paid by this amendment, and what is now paid, is $858,000, or $4 82 per ton, and a fraction less than twenty per cent. below what is paid by the British Government to the Cunard line.

I have also a statement to which I desire to advert. In the London Times, of the 10th of March, occurs the following statement, which, though part only of it relates directly to the subject under consideration, we give entire, for the benefit of such of our commercial readers as may feel an interest in looking over a complete table of the ocean-mail service of Great Britain for the ensuing year:

"The following table, partly compiled from a parliamentary paper, will show the estimate for the post office packet service for the coming year, as compared with that for the twelve months which will terminate on the 5th of April. The increase in the contracts last year was £98,135, and now we have a further augmentation of £64,862, caused chiefly by an enlarged allowance to the Cunard line for additional service, the extension of the West India contract to Brazil, and the establishment of new lines to Africa and Australia. On the other hand, there is a diminution of £4,200 in the expense of Queen's vessels employed; and the increase upon the aggregate total is therefore reduced to £60,662:

To and from—	Company.	Year.
		1852-3	1851-2
Liverpool and Isle of Man.....	.....	£850	£850
Holyhead & Kingston.....	City of Dublin..	25,000	25,000
Aberdeen & Berwick.....	.....	900	900
Southampton & Channel Islands.....	S. W. Railway..	4,000	4,000
England and Hamburg, and England and Rotterdam.....	General Steam..	17,000	17,000
Southampton, Vigo, Oporto, Lisbon, Cadiz, and Gibraltar.....	Peninsular and Oriental.....	20,500	20,500
Liverpool and Halifax, and Boston and Liverpool, & New York.....	Cunard.....	171,364	145,000
Halifax, Bermuda, and St. Thomas's, and Halifax and St. John's, Newfoundland.....	Cunard.....	14,700	14,600
Southampton and West Indies.....	Royal Mail.....	240,000	240,000
Southampton, Brazil, and Buenos Ayres.....	Royal Mail.....	30,000	30,000
Callao and Valparaiso.....	Pacific.....	25,000	25,000
Plymouth and Cape of Good Hope.....	General Screw..	30,730	30,730
England and West Coast of Africa.....	Laird.....	11,500	-
England and Australia.....	Australian.....	26,000	-
England and Alexandria.....	Peninsular and Oriental.....	22,500	23,000
Alexandria and Bombay.....	Hall, Brothers... ..	1,560	1,600
Suez and Calcutta.....	.....	.....	.....
£115,000; less 7-16, payable by East India Company, £50,312.....	Peninsular and Oriental.....	64,688	64,688
Ceylon and Hong Kong £45,000; less as above £19,688.....	Peninsular and Oriental.....	25,312	25,312
Bombay, (proportion paid to East India Company).....	East India.....	50,000	50,000
Allowances of Government agents on board the contract packets.....	.....	10,683	9,285
Expense of Queen's vessels employed in the packet service.....	.....	77,871	82,071
Total expense.....	.....	870,158	809,496

The Cunard line receives, it will be seen for 1852..... £171,364 While it received for 1851..... 145,000

Making an increase of..... £26,364 Equal to..... $131,820

The amount now received by the Cunard line is $856,820—being within less than $2,000 of what is asked for by Mr. Collins.

But, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Virginia has said that these steamers were not fit for war steamers, as he had been informed by naval gentlemen whose judgment was to be relied on. Well, sir, suppose this statement to be correct, it would weigh nothing in the argument. On the other hand, should these steamers prove the best war vessels in the world, their owners could not claim the credit of it. If they are totally unfit to be incorporated into the Navy, it is no fault of theirs. They were built under the direction of persons appointed by the proper authorities to act for the Government. The company furnished the means, and the instructions from the Navy Department were carried out. If, then, the ships were to prove utterly worthless for war purposes, why, then, should we blame their owners, and compel them to suffer the loss?

No. 1.

NEW YORK, January 19, 1848.

SIR: Having altered the dimensions of the mail steamers to be built by myself and my associates as per contract, dated 1st November last, under a law of Congress passed 3d March last, entitled "An act providing for the building and equipment of four naval steamers," I beg leave to wait on you with a specification for building the same, which, I trust, will meet your approval; and if so, you will please substitute it for schedule "A," now attached to the contract.

Yours, very respectfully,
To the Hon. J. Y. MASON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

No. 2.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, January 26, 1848.

SIR: I have received a letter dated at New York on the 19th instant, without signature, inclosing a "specification" for the building of the New York and Liverpool mail steamers for E. K. Collins and his associates. This paper being signed by yourself, it is presumed the communication was made by you. The subject has been referred to the Bureau of Construction for opinion, and, upon the recommendation of Commodore Skinner, the dimensions and specifications for building the mail steamers under the act of 3d March last, above referred to, are approved by the Department.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. Y. MASON.

No. 3.

NEW YORK, February 10, 1848.

SIR: Your letter of the 26th ult. was duly received. The undersigned letter, therein referred to, I hand you herewith, signed. My specifications for building the steamers, as mentioned in yours of the 26th, having been accepted, I am progressing in their building with as much speed as prudence dictates, watching strictly the interest of the Government and the owners, which interests I think inseparable.

I will thank you at an early day to appoint a naval constructor to superintend their construction in conformity to the law. Yours, very respectfully,

E. K. COLLINS.

To Hon. JOHN Y. MASON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

No. 4.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 14, 1848.

SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant, with the inclosure, has been received, and Captain William Skiddy, of New York, has been appointed naval constructor for the purpose of superintending the construction of the steamers to be built under the act of Congress of March 3, 1847.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. Y. MASON.

To E. K. COLLINS, Esq., New York.

The contract referred to in the first of these letters contains the following:

"That whereas the said Collins and his associates submitted to the Postmaster General, on the sixth of March, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and forty-six, proposals to carry the United States mail between New York and Liverpool twice each month during eight months of the year, and once a month during the other four months, for the sum of three hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly, and for this purpose proposed to build five steam-ships of not less than two thousand tons measurement, and of one thousand horse-power each, to be built for great speed, and sufficiently strong for war purposes."

Schedule A states the "intended size of said steam-ships about three thousand tons."

In this connection, I will introduce the following abstract of letters written by Commodore Perry and Captain William Skiddy, in reference to the Collins line of steam-ships, to the Secretaries of the Navy.

Commodore Perry, in his letter dated February 18th, 1852, addressed to the Hon. William A. Graham, Secretary of the Navy, says:

"That the following-named Atlantic steam-ships may be converted, by slight alterations, into war-steamers of the first class: of Collins's line, the Atlantic, Pacific, Arctic, and Baltic.

"According to my calculations, the cost of the conversion of either of the before-mentioned vessels, exclusive of armaments, repair of machinery, &c., would not, or certainly ought not, to cost, for each steamer, over $20,000, and it could readily be done for this at any of our navy-yards. With respect to the description and weight of their respective armaments, I am clearly of the opinion that the first-class steamers, already named, could easily carry four 10-inch Paixhan guns, on pivots—two forward and two aft—of the weight of those in the Mississippi, and ten 8-inch Paixhan guns on the sides, and this armament would not incommode the vessels, and the weight less than the ice, which is usually forty tons, and stowed away in one mass."

Commodore Perry continues, and says:

"That in the general operations of a maritime war, they would render good service, and especially would they be useful, from their great speed, as dispatch vessels, and for the transportation of troops, always capable of attack and defense, and of overhauling or escaping from an enemy."

"The Atlantic, Pacific, Baltic, and Arctic, have all been built, inspected, and received by the Navy Department."

Commodore Perry adds to this letter a note, and says:

"That an ocean steamer of three thousand tons is of the maximum dimensions for safety and efficiency, whether for war or commercial purposes."

And this is the precise measurement of the Collins steam-ships.

In another note he says:

"That the best practical relative power of engines to tonnage for ocean steamers is one nominal horse power to every three tons of tonnage custom-house measurement."

And this is the precise ratio of power used in the Collins steam-ships.

Commodore Perry, in his letter to the Hon. John Y. Mason, Secretary of the Navy, dated January 30, 1849, says:

"In accordance with my instructions from the Department, I have carefully examined the vessels (Atlantic and Pacific) at present under construction and equipment, and in comparing them with the precise stipulations, I find some few deviations. The contract of E. K. Collins and his associates is in progress of completion. Two ships (the Atlantic and Pacific) are nearly ready, or quite ready, for launching, and their engines and boilers are sufficiently advanced for commencing the work of putting them on board. As the contract with Mr. Collins does not refer to any particular vessel as a guide for model or manner of construction of his ships, he has availed himself of the best material at command, and of his well-known judgment and experience in ship-building, and in producing two very superior sea steamers."

Commodore Perry says, according to the statement of Captain William Skiddy, "that the ships are better fastened than they were contracted for," and adds:

"The several contracts provide that all these steamers shall be so constructed as to be easily converted into war steamers, should the Government exercise the right of taking them into their public service."

"Steamers are more easily armed than sail vessels, inasmuch as they have greater space on deck for pivot guns, possessing, as they do, greater facilities of motion, and consequent choice of position, and very little time would be required in arming and equipping them for war service."

Commodore Perry concludes this official statement as follows:

"The undertaking is one of great magnitude for individual enterprise, and of momentous character to the commercial interests of the country—an undertaking alike creditable to the liberal views of the Government and the public spirit of the contractors, and reflecting honor and credit upon both contracting parties."

"They (the steam-ships) will all have the merit of possessing the great essentials of capacity, buoyancy, and fleetness, and capability of carrying effective armaments; and if taken for their estimated worth at the time of the transfer, the Government will be the gainer, at a period of emergent want for such vessels."

Captain William Skiddy writes to "Commodore Perry, general superintending agent for the United States ocean mail steamers," on the 21st of January, 1849, as follows:

"I have received your communication of the 18th inst., requesting information respecting the construction and equipment of the United States mail steamers built and building in this port (New York) under my inspection."

"Mr. E. K. Collins's specifications and agreements with the Government call for much less than has been executed, such as iron diagonal framing only one way; whereas they are double, crossing each other at right angles, and well bolted to timbers and riveted together; also the filling in amidships has been extended the whole length of the ships, with many other additions."

"These ships have great buoyancy, flat broad floors extended far forward and aft, with sharp ends, and are considered beautiful models. They have spacious deck room, and could carry guns of the largest caliber on the gun or middle deck."

"These ships can all, in case of emergency, be converted into fast war steamers. They would by law be received by appraisement on their original cost and their efficiency as to strength and materials, the necessary alteration included would cost the Government much less—perhaps one half of the amount required to build or purchase for the occasion."

"In case of a war, these are the only ships of sufficient strength and size in the United States that could be converted into war steamers."

Commodore Perry, April 9, 1850, writes to the Hon. W. B. Preston, Secretary of the Navy, thus:

"The models of the ocean mail steamers, built under the recent act of Congress, whether for the Navy or mail service, may be considered as excellent."

"Experience has shown that the best general proportions for a war steamer, with side-wheels, are six times the breadth for the length, and two thirds the breadth for the depth. [By a singular coincidence, this is the exact size of the Collins steamships.]

"The highest probable speed that can with known machinery be given to commercial steamers of 1,500 tons, and carrying fourteen days' fuel, and embracing an aggregate of voyages across the Atlantic, perhaps ten and a half knots per hour has been the average."

"The aggregate of voyages across the Atlantic by the Collins steam-ships show that twelve knots per hour has been the average."

"The mail steamers of Howland & Aspinwall, and of E. K. Collins, esq., can be easily converted into war steamers."

"These vessels, with little strengthening of the decks, can be made to carry each a few guns of heavy caliber, and may be rendered useful to convoy, and in the transportation of troops, &c. The use of steam-ships in our future naval operations must inevitably change in a great degree the art of naval war."

Captain William Skiddy, on the 18th of February, 1852, writes to the Honorable William A. Graham, Secretary of the Navy, thus:

"I herewith acknowledge your communication of the 10th inst. to Commodore M. C. Perry and myself, relative to the United States mail steamers built under contract with the Navy Department, and others carrying the mails of the United States."

"These ships (Atlantic, Pacific, Baltic, and Arctic) are not suitable for immediate war purposes, but can be made efficient in four or six weeks, and the cost of these alterations would not exceed for each ship $15,000 or $20,000. They would then be relieved of about one hundred and fifty tons weight, or nearly double the weight of guns and carriages, and would then have less resistance to water and wind, adding in increase to their already great speed."

The Hon. Wm. A. Graham, the present Secretary of the Navy, on the 20th of March, 1852, writes to the Hon. Wm. R. King, President of the Senate, in reply to a resolution for information in relation to contracts for the transportation of the mail by steam-ships between New York and California, on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, as follows:

"It is respectfully suggested that a limited number of them, (steamships,) employed in time of peace in the transportation of the mails, would be found a most useful resource of the Government on the breaking out of war."

"In conformity to the standards required by these contracts, their readiness to be used at the shortest notice, their capacity as transports for goods and munitions of war, and their great celerity of motion, enabling them to over-haul merchantmen, and at the same time escape cruisers, would render them terrible as guerrillas of the ocean, if fitted with such armaments as could be readily put upon them in their present condition."

But, sir, what are the properties necessary for a war steamer? Speed is undoubtedly one. In point of speed what other sea-going steamers equal those of the Collins line? None, sir; none. They have beat the world, and they stand confessed without a rival on the ocean. The want of speed, therefore, cannot be among the supposed delinquencies of these ships. Great strength is another necessary property. Well, sir, I hazard nothing in saying the strength of no ship in the American Navy has been so severely tested as the strength of these steamers. In gales of wind, when sailing vessels are lying to, and merely breasting the force of the waves, these ships are urging their way ahead with the mighty force of their powerful engines, perhaps at the rate of some eight or ten miles per hour, and thus increasing the resistance, and consequent strain, to at least twofold, compared with the sailing vessel. Yet, in this war of the elements, they have never suffered.

Again, Mr. President, consider the enormous power of the engines by which these steamers are propelled. Each of these engines is of the calculated power of fifteen hundred horses, operating directly on the ship itself, as the fulcrum of the mighty lever by which she is driven through the waves. Every stroke of the piston is felt, sir, from stem to stern—from plank-shear to keel—in every plank, in every timber, and in every fibre. Why, sir, one of these engines exerts a power sufficient to propel a ball of the weight of fifteen hundred pounds, with a velocity of thirty-three thousand feet per minute—a body which, taking the velocity into the account, would demolish the largest vessel that ever floated. The recoil of ten of the largest batteries in the world would not exercise so much strain on one of these steamers as does the power of her enormous engines. And yet, sir, with the buffeting of the waves, in gales and storms—with the exertion of all this propelling power—these gigantic ships, like the ocean rock amidst the waves, have withstood, unscathed and unshaken, some of the most terrible storms that agitate the Atlantic. Sir, what more perfect test can be given of strength, solidity, and sea-worthiness than has been applied to these noble ships? For myself, I can conceive of none.

But, sir, the honorable Senator now takes up another position. He says that propellers are superior to side-wheel steamers for war purposes. In this statement I perfectly agree with him, taking it as a general rule. But, sir, propellers would not answer the purpose of our Government for mail steamers. Their speed is not such as the times require. Under the Government direction, therefore, these steamers were equipped with side-wheels; and without which, however much they may take from their value and efficiency for war purposes, they would not have been available for the mail service. With the British or Cunard line the case is the same. However, sir, the honorable Senator admits that we require some side-wheel steamers; and, sir, it fortunately happens that in the Collins line we have some—that is, we have four side-wheel steamers, the best in the world. The honorable Senator, however, regrets that the Navy and the mercantile marine should be united at all. Sir, the honorable Senator's regrets come too late. As far as these steamers are concerned, it has already been done; and, in doing it we have but copied the example of the greatest naval power in the world; and I am far from apprehensive that any evil will result from the act.

Mr. President, it does appear to me that not only pride of country, but also our mercantile interests demand that this line of steamers should not be left to an untoward fate without at least one more effort of this Government to prevent such a result. Sir, the war of 1812 cost this country $300,000,000. And for what was that war waged and prosecuted on our part? It was, sir, to procure our rights and promote our commercial interests on the ocean, and to cause them to be respected. The great object was gained; and, sir, as an American citizen, I thank Heaven that my country has never succumbed to a foreign Power. Her flag still waves in all its glory, and is respected by every civilized nation on earth. Nor would I strike our flag of commerce. It has achieved a most important, though peaceful victory; and I will not give my vote to have it furled or struck to any foreign rival. But, sir, such must be the case should we refuse the aid contemplated in this amendment; and we must suffer the mortification of descending in the scale of commercial enterprise, and, for the want of some trifling pecuniary sacrifice, consenting to become second, when we were and might have remained first.

Sir, the superiority of our immense fleet of sailing vessels is already established. Foreign nations, with all their apparent superior advantages, have been unable to cope with us in this species of naval architecture. Our ships traverse every sea and unfurl our flag in every port in the world, and, wherever they appear, command the admiration of all observers. In this, our favorite and unequalled line of ocean steamers, we have also the evidence that we can excel, young as we are in this modern enterprise, all the rest of the world even in navigating the ocean by means of steam. To deprive us of this cause of triumph, and to prevent us from reaping its fruits, it is that those concerned in the British line have conspired to drive the ships of our American line from its route. This effected, and you suffer the spirit of enterprise concerned in the business to be crushed; and it will be a long time before it can again be aroused to action. On the other hand, encourage and sustain it, and but a few years will have elapsed ere we shall have a fleet of steam-ships traversing the ocean in every direction, giving much greater facilities to commerce than it ever yet enjoyed, and greatly facilitating our communication with all parts of the world. Besides this, sir, our superiority in this matter being fully established, and universally known, as it will be, what is to prevent us from obtaining a large share of that lucrative business, now monopolized by Great Britain, of building steam-ships for other nations which lack the skill to build them for themselves? This would be extremely beneficial to our merchants and mechanics, and in fact to all classes in the community.

Mr. President, the increase of our steam-marine would also make heavy draughts on our immense coal fields. From Ohio, from Indiana, from Kentucky, from Virginia, from Pennsylvania, and wherever coal is found, it may be transported to all our sea-ports, from Portland to New Orleans, and at every port it would meet with a ready sale. If all these interests are of any importance in our view, let us unite to promote them by lending a helping hand to the company which solicits it, and whose noble ships, I trust, are destined to become the nucleus of a numerous fleet, all equally excellent.

Mr. President, I cannot permit myself to close these remarks without paying a well-merited compliment to the gentlemanly proprietors of the celebrated Collins line of steamers, equalled by none that float on the bosom of the ocean. Sir, these gentlemen certainly deserve well of their country. With a degree of munificence seldom equaled they have expended their money without stint on an object truly national, and by the result have placed our country ahead of all others, in point of practical success, with respect to steam navigation on the ocean, and thus wrested the palm of victory from the brow of that mighty naval power which has claimed for centuries to be the mistress of the seas. More than this, sir: the millions they have expended, and by which they have not profited themselves, have gone to reward honest industry and mechanical science and skill. They have probably in this way done more for the working portion of the community and the cause of steam navigation than a like number of men in the same length of time have ever done before in the United States; and, whatever may be the ultimate fate of their enterprise, on which they have expended so much money, they are now honored, and will long be remembered with honor, for their noble work—a work that has opened a new era in the history of steam navigation, the effects of which will be seen and felt for generations yet unborn.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I desire to submit some observations upon the subject of the amendment before the Senate, and if no other gentleman is disposed to say anything, I will submit my remarks now. My friend from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] the other day, took occasion to remark that he stood almost alone upon this question—most, if not all, of those who had mingled in the debate having taken part in support of the pending amendment. But my friend from Virginia should have remembered, that if in number he is but one, in force he is a host. He stands amongst us like Achilles upon the plains of Troy, driving whole battalions before him, and requiring the concentrated energies of a mighty army to arrest his advance. Therefore, he must not be surprised if, when he opposes, many of us should think it necessary that we should support—well knowing that such is the weight and force of his reasoning, the influence of his position, the keen and skillful dexterity of his logic, by which he is able always to “make the worse appear the better reason,” it is absolutely necessary that we should summon up all our powers to secure that success to this amendment which we believe its intrinsic merits require.

My friend from Virginia yesterday was pleased to say, in reference to a remark made by the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] as to the narrowing influence produced upon the mind by occupying the position of chairman of the Finance Committee, that, if the suggestion of the Senator from New York were correct, it would be perhaps a happy thing to place me at the head of that committee, as such a narrowing influence might not be amiss upon what he supposed to be the too profuse liberality of my disposition.

Mr. President, there are several difficulties in the way of my occupying the distinguished position to which the partiality of my friend would assign me. In the first place, I do not belong to the right side of this House to assume the direction of any committee. I am much better placed in the capacity of trailing a pike under the command and direction of the honorable Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] to whose committee I have been assigned. An experiment was once made by the distinguished gentleman, who is now the presiding officer of this body, of placing me at the head of one committee of this body, and an important committee it was. He made me the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. But whether it was that I discharged my duties in that high and important position so badly, or neglected them so much, or, as my honorable friend from Michigan says, discharged them so well, and was so critical and careful about the phraseology of our laws—whatever might have been the reason, I seem to have lost caste and credit; for, at the next session, I was summarily displaced from the position of chief in command, and put where I was but a private soldier.

I am by no means ambitious of assuming the position to which my friend from Virginia would assign me; but he will permit me to say, that, if placing me at the head of that committee would have the narrowing influence which he supposes, by equal force of reasoning, it seems to me he ought to leave the station which he has assumed; for I know of no gentleman in this body, or in this country, with his high understanding and enlarged views, who needs liberalizing more than he does in regard to the public expenditures of the country for great and noble objects.

Mr. President, the question submitted for the consideration of the Senate is, we all admit, a question of high and controlling importance. It has been said in the course of this discussion, that the contest between these two lines has now become a national contest between this country and Great Britain. I desire to amend that statement. From the very moment of the institution of the Collins line, it was a national contest. It has not recently assumed that character. It has always borne it. The enterprise was very far, indeed, from being in fact, or from being regarded by the country, as a mere contest between two rival companies of ship-owners. It was one great, active contest in that mighty drama for the mastery of the seas—for superiority in everything that belongs to strength, speed, effective power, and success for war and for commercial purposes, which long has been, and ever must be, the mightiest contest between this country and Great Britain. After having entered upon this peaceful, and, at the same time, most important contest, the question presented to the American Congress now is, whether we shall dishonorably retrace our steps; whether, when the hand is just stretched out to seize the crown of victory, we shall voluntarily forego all our advantages, retire from the high and eminent position we now occupy in the eyes of all the civilized world, and voluntarily surrender that which to obtain and perpetuate Great Britain would without any hesitation sacrifice a hundred times the amount of money which is involved in the question now before the Senate.

We are now reduced to this position: We must do one of three things: we must either afford the aid which is now asked by this company, and which this amendment proposes to give it; or we must enforce upon it the performance of the contract entered into with this Government to the utter ruin of its members; or we must permit this line to go down, and permit Great Britain to be, by the acknowledgment of the world, first not only in naval power, but in naval enterprise, and in national sympathy for her own glory; and to allow her to take possession of the sea by our own voluntary retreat, which, in a fair conflict, the experience of three quarters of a century has shown she never could obtain by skill and power of her own.

I have said that we must do one of these three things; and is it not manifest that one of the three must be done? Why, sir, it is proved; it is not a subject of debate; it does not depend upon minute speculations in arithmetic; it cannot even be necessary to resort to the square-root of my friend from Kentucky to resolve it; but it is proved by clear, distinct, incontrovertible, sworn testimony, that the running of the Collins line, at the present rate of compensation, has brought, on twenty-eight trips, an average loss of nearly $17,000 each trip to the company. Now, it requires nothing to be said to show that it is impossible that the line can be kept up and maintained upon the present rate of compensation, with the loss which must necessarily be thrown upon the intelligent, enterprising, wealthy, and patriotic citizens by whom the line has been established. Gentlemen may say—the honorable gentleman from Virginia has said—that there is not a necessity for this increase of compensation. Gentlemen may say, and gentlemen may think, that the line can be run, and will be run, at the present rate of compensation; but if gentlemen so say and so think, they are greatly deceived. The members of this company are now bearing heavy drafts upon their private funds to meet daily recurring deficiencies, so large that a quarter of a year of them accruing upon persons of ordinary ability would crush them, and which no company, however able, can long sustain.

References have been made to the rate of compensation or assistance afforded by the British Government to the Cunard line; and it has been attempted to be shown that the rate of compensation so given is less than what is proposed to be given by this amendment to sustain the Collins line. Well, suppose it were so; do we not all know that the expenses of maintaining a line, consisting of steam-ships, depends not so much upon the number as upon the size of the vessels employed? No doubt, my friend from Virginia is right in saying that we could maintain a dozen steamers and send them across the ocean, not merely for twenty-six trips, but for fifty trips, at far less expense than is incurred by the Collins line, even at the present rate of compensation. What the expenses are is to depend upon the size of the vessels engaged; and what is that size? Why, there are four Collins steamers—there are seven Cunarders. The aggregate tonnage of the four Collins steamers exceeds the aggregate tonnage of the seven Cunarders by more than a thousand tons. It is, therefore, no accurate mode of proceeding, to ascertain what amount of expenditure may be needed, to calculate only according to the number of ships and the number of trips. You must take into connection with that the relative size of the vessels employed. Why, sir, in a few years, the wear and tear of these vessels, and the outlay required for the purpose of keeping them afloat, will amount to an actual absorption of the whole principal invested. Permit me to add, also, that another element is to be taken into the account, and that is, the speed with which the vessels traverse the ocean. The more the speed is increased, the greater is the injury to the ship, the more rapidly are the works worn out, and a larger outlay is required for the purpose of keeping her in a running condition. So that it may be very true, that if we would reduce our ships to the size of the Cunarders; if we would drop them down to a screw-propeller, going at the rate of six miles an hour, we might, perhaps, be able to run the vessels, to walk them, or to let them creep, at less money than is required to maintain these large ships, and keep them in that state of proud superiority as to speed which now distinguishes them.

Gentlemen may speculate upon the question, whether these ships ought to cost so much money in maintaining and running them; but the fact is, they do cost it. The fact is, that the expenses exceed the receipts of the company at the rate of nearly $17,000 a trip. Then what is proposed by this amendment? It is to add not the $17,000, but we propose to increase the rate of compensation from $19,250 a trip or voyage, to $33,000, that is, we add $13,750 to the compensation allowed for each trip. We hope for better and brighter times. We hope that with this addition, these enterprising and patriotic men may be enabled to make good the contest and maintain their superiority. If there be any truth in evidence—if any reliance can be placed upon testimony, the fact is shown that they are losing within a fraction of $17,000 upon every trip. If, therefore, we are to support or assist them at all, it is difficult to conceive what else we could do than to add between $13,000 and $14,000, to the present amount of compensation.

But again, under the additional arrangement entered into by the Post Office and the Navy Departments with these gentlemen, six additional trips have to be made, in order to maintain a constant and equal competition through the winter as well as in the spring and summer months. Then we must recollect that with regard to these winter trips, besides all the enhanced difficulties which accompany them, they fall greatly short in the ordinary remuneration. The winter freights are small, and the winter passengers are few. So that putting all these considerations together, I think it must be evident to every gentleman, that if any assistance is to be afforded, that proposed in the amendment is by no means unreasonably large.

Gentlemen may suppose that if this assistance is withheld, this enterprise will still be prosecuted. Permit me to assure them that they are entirely mistaken. So sure as the proposed amendment is rejected, and Congress declines to give the asked for, the desired aid, the very next step will be an application from these gentlemen to be relieved from the ruinous contract into which they have entered with the Government. If we refuse this aid, the other application we cannot deny. It would be unjust and cruelly ungenerous to deny it. No question can remain but that the moment that application is made to Congress, it will be favorably considered, and promptly granted. Then how should we stand? The line is to be discontinued! Who would benefit by its discontinuance? English capital, English enterprise, English reputation, and the national honor and glory of England. By whom is the loss to be borne? In each and every one of these particulars it is to be borne by us.

My honorable friend from Virginia said, that if at a single stroke all these Collins steamers were sunk into the bottom of the ocean, there was no doubt but that the Cunard steamers would still bring us the mails. No doubt of that, sir. And

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No. 80.

does any man doubt that if the whole American marine were to-morrow gulfed in the depths of the ocean, but that British commercial vessels would still bring us the products of foreign countries, and take away the products of our own? But is there any man here, is there any man in America, whose soul is so dead to the perceptions of national honor and national interest, who would be willing to accept the last alternative? Not my friend from Virginia, I am sure. But, if there be any correctness in the reasoning which he applied to the case of the steamers, the reasoning applies with precisely the same force, and is entitled to just the same weight, in the case to which I apply it. Would anybody be benefited? Why, surely not, sir. Would the vessels engaged in prosecuting, under sail and without the aid of steam, the commercial pursuits of the United States gain the advantage of discontinuing this line? Surely they would not, sir. The passengers would then go by the Cunard line from this country to England, and from England here. And why? Because in the rage for rapid motion now prevailing, men will always travel by that conveyance which gives them the speediest transmission from one end of their journey to the other. Would sailing vessels be benefited with regard to freights by the discontinuance of this line? Surely not; for the freights which are transmitted by the Collins line would then, for a very obvious reason, be transmitted by the Cunard line. If the Collins line were put out of the way, there would be no effectual competition in regard to freights between ordinary sail-vessels and steam-vessels. The steamers carry those freights which are of comparative lightness and of increased value. The ordinary heavy freights which seek sure and cheap transmission cannot afford to bear the additional expense of steamer transportation.

My friend from Virginia mentioned yesterday that he understood from some persons concerned in iron works, that these steamers had actually brought over iron at so small a rate as almost to put it on the footing of taking it in for ballast. Now, I think my friend's informant must have been mistaken. I learn from a source which is, I think, entitled to the highest credit, that not one ton of iron has ever been brought in these steamers as ballast. They do not want ballast, with the immense weight of their machinery, with the immense quantities of coal which they carry. One great object is to reduce the amount of pressure, and to enable them to move, therefore, with more rapidity. Sail vessels are in the habit often of carrying articles in that way, because when they are solid and heavy, it relieves them from the necessity of cumbering themselves with the ballast which they would otherwise require.

Then it seems to me that the discontinuance of this line involves the certain consequence of giving the whole steam communication between this country and Great Britain, and as a consequence of it, the steam communication between this country and the continent of Europe, into the hands of British steam-ship owners. There is no escape from it.

If I were now to suppose that a large outlay would be required during the whole continuance of this contract for a very small remuneration in the form of postages to the United States, I should, for one, be exceedingly unwilling to see this line go down. I do not exactly agree with my friend from Virginia. I do not believe that money is devoted to its proper purposes by being hoarded. I do not believe that money expended to advance the honor, to promote the interests, to maintain the supremacy of my own country, is ever otherwise than well and effectually bestowed—bringing that return which nations should consider as the highest and the best—the improvement of the condition of their people, the elevation of the character of the whole; for with regard to nations, the reputation of strength is strength. He who has established a character of invincibility will not be very likely to have his pretensions put to the test by an actual conflict. Nothing undoubtedly supports independent States more in the world than the reputation of perseverance, strength, and inflexible integrity. But then is there any reason to suppose that we shall be left in such a situation?

My friend from Virginia does not believe that this line will be so prosecuted, or can be so prosecuted as to make an adequate return to the Treasury, in the shape of postages, for the expenditures which will be involved. Now upon what is that founded? In all our domestic concerns have we not ever found that the postages of the country are upon the increase? that every facility given to correspondence increases correspondence, and that just and reasonable reductions upon the prices of postage are followed by a large increase in the amount received from postages? Postal arrangements by steam-vessels are now in their beginning. They are just in the commencement, where they are showing us what they will do. I entertain a strong and confident expectation and hope, that if we give the required assistance to this line it will be able to maintain itself, and overmaster the competition in which it is now engaged; and that in a few years we shall have not only the satisfaction of knowing that our country has maintained, increased, and consolidated its reputation in the eyes of the world as a great naval power, as a nation of enterprise and untiring perseverance, but that even in a pecuniary point of view we shall receive the just reward of this high and elevated course of conduct, by having immense amounts of money poured into the Treasury. What has been the increase already? Why, the increase of last year over the year before makes nearly $200,000. Who shall set bounds to it? No one.

If, therefore, it were to be viewed solely as a question of dollars and cents—as the outlay of money with the expectation of a return in money—I think the case is one which, if my friend from Virginia would bring his peculiar tact to bear of calculating, which, as the chairman of the Committee on Finance, he ought to do, how much will be received for a given sum laid out, he will see that even upon that mode of treating this subject, and keeping a careful and watchful eye upon the Treasury, we are likely to bring a great deal more into it than will be paid out of it by this proposition.

Then, Mr. President, there are other considerations connected with this matter. These are war steamers. They enable us not only to accomplish the mastery, and to insure victory in the peaceful contest of skill and enterprise in which we are now embarked, but they are well calculated, in the event of another and bloody contest, to enable us to maintain in that the same superiority. My friend from Virginia thinks they are not calculated for war steamers. I have heretofore said on another occasion, that I should consider them as capable of being efficient vessels of war until the contrary had been demonstrated by experiment. And why, sir? They were built for vessels of war—they were built under the direction of the Navy Department, directed and superintended by all the skill in naval construction of which that Department is master. Every requisition made by Government in their construction was fully and completely complied with, and with regard to strength, the requirements of the Department were even exceeded by the proprietors of the line.

Mr. HUNTER. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but does he mean to say that these steamers are built of white oak, as ships of war are built?

Mr. BADGER. I said they were built according to the requisitions of the Navy Department. Although I once had the honor to be at the head of the Navy Department, I do not claim for myself a perfect acquaintance with all the details of naval armament. I do not say that I have not the time, but I have not the energy of my friend from Virginia, to make myself acquainted with these particulars. I take my position here. I have no skill in such matters; I pretend to none. These vessels were built under the direction of an act of Congress, which required that they should be built under the superintendence of the Navy Department. They were built under the supervision of the proper officers of the Navy Department—those officers to whom the Government trusts when it builds ships of its own, to see that they have the necessary qualities. I suppose that when my friend used the term "white oak," he did not mean "white oak," but "live oak." I understand from my friend from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE,] who comes from a quarter of country where every man understands these matters, even Senators, that they are built of white oak, though not of live oak.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY,] who is acquainted with these subjects, tells me that they are planked with pine, and not with white oak, as is usual with vessels of war.

Mr. BADGER. Well, sir, I was not speaking of planking. I was speaking of timbers.

Mr. HUNTER. The strength of vessels depends in some degree on the planking.

Mr. BADGER. I wish my friend from Florida would get up and give his testimony now.

Mr. MALLORY. What testimony is it?

Mr. BADGER. I do not know. You are not my witness. [Laughter.]

Mr. MALLORY. If the question is what the steamers are planked with, I will say that every ship that I have happened to know anything about, built under naval directions, has been planked with oak planks. The Collins steamers are planked with pine. If they are not, they have been officially misrepresented. The timbers and frames of naval vessels are live oak; and the timbers and frames of the Collins steamers are a mixture of live oak, locust, and pine.

Mr. BADGER. Well, be it so. I would ask the Senator from Florida one question. He says these steamers are planked with pine. Are they not planked with southern pine?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BADGER. Enough said. If they are planked with southern pine, it is a great deal better than northern oak. [Laughter.]

Mr. MALLORY. All I have to say is, that it has not been so considered by the naval authorities of this country, who have uniformly preferred oak.

Mr. BADGER. That is because they have inclined to Northern interests. I am very happy to say that they are coming round. I am for Southern pine against Northern oak. The naval constructors had the direction of these vessels, they were approved by them, and they were accepted by the Department. As I have said, and now repeat, I shall consider them as competent steam war-vessels, until, by some experiments, the contrary shall be shown. Nothing can be urged against this but opinion. My friend from New Jersey [Mr. MILLER] the other day, read two brief opinions upon this subject, one from the naval constructor, and the other from one of the most eminent gentlemen who belong to the Navy.

Commodore Perry, in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, says:

"According to my calculations, the cost of the conversion of either the before-mentioned vessels, exclusive of armaments, repair of machinery, &c., would not, or certainly ought not to cost for each steamer over $20,000; and it could readily be done for this at any of our navy-yards. With respect to the description and weight of their respective armaments, I am clearly of the opinion that the first class steamers already named could easily carry four 10-inch Paixhan guns on pivots—two forward and two aft—of the weight of those in the Mississippi, and ten 8 inch Paixhan guns on the sides; and this armament would not incommode the vessels, and the weight less than the ice, which is usually forty tons, and stowed away in one mass."

Again, he says:

"In the general operations of a maritime war they could render good service, and especially would they be useful from their great speed as dispatch vessels, and for the transportation of troops, always capable of attack and defense and of overhauling or escaping from an enemy."

"The Atlantic, Pacific, Baltic, and Arctic have all been built, inspected, and received by the Navy Department."

My friend from New Jersey also read a letter of Mr. Grice, very well known for his skill as a naval constructor. He says in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs:

UNITED STATES NAVY YARD,
PHILADELPHIA, April 14, 1852.

SIR: In answer to yours of the 13th, I have to state, as chief naval constructor, the specifications for building the Collins line of steamers were submitted to me, and approved, as in accordance with the act of 3d of March, 1847. They can be converted into war-steamers to carry a battery equal to our largest steam frigates, in a short time, and the necessary alterations to be made to receive such a battery will not exceed a cost of $20,000 each.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,
FRANCIS GRICE.

To the Hon. Wm. M. GWIN,
United States Senate, Washington.

We have, then, the opinion of Commodore Perry, that these vessels, in case of a general maritime war, would be exceedingly valuable, not merely as transports, as my friend from Virginia seemed to suppose, but that they would be pre-eminently valuable for war purposes, from two considerations—first, their superiority of speed; and secondly, their power both of attack and defense.

But my friend from Virginia seemed to be of opinion that speed was not any recommendation to a war vessel. "What!" said he, "do we prepare our ships with speed in order that they may run away from an enemy?" I answer, Yes, when there is occasion to run; and we should furnish them with speed to overtake an enemy when there is occasion to overtake him. However dignified and lofty it may sound for a gentleman to say that he does not think it a recommendation that one of our ships-of-war should have speed to escape from an enemy, yet tried by its practical application to things, every man knows that there are occasions in the history of all bodies of men, whether they serve by land or by sea, where nothing is of more importance than to have speed, in order to escape a foe whom they cannot overmaster or successfully resist. My friend from Virginia should recollect, that the very speed which enables them to escape a superiority of force, carries them also with triumphant power and unexpected suddenness, which gives additional force to the attack upon an enemy whom it is desirable to meet, and against whom they are capable of successfully contending.

It seems to me, then, that in either view of the subject, first considering these vessels as mere instrumentalities for the transmission of intelligence, and maintaining our postal arrangements, we have every reason to believe that the money which this amendment proposes to give, in addition to their present compensation, will be amply remunerated to us. And, in the second place, if this were not so, we have, what is of great importance to us, the four largest and fleetest steamers in the world, ready at any and at all times to be incorporated into our warlike marine. The Senator from Virginia talks about there being six or eight weeks required for preparing them for war purposes. Now, they can be speedily prepared, and at a very small cost. What that "speed" means is very readily shown by the extracts which were read yesterday by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] showing that, in the British service, the change of steamers into vessels for war purposes was accomplished in three days, when it was desirable to convert them into vessels-of-war.

But, in order to avoid any difficulty whatever in regard to the supposed loss which the Government is ultimately to sustain, I have an amendment which I mean to propose, if the Senate shall adopt the amendment now under consideration, as a proviso, for transferring to the Post Office Department the charge of this line of steamers, and supposing it should result in such great loss, after a fair experiment has been tried upon the subject, authorizing Congress to discontinue the contract. This, I think, will relieve the amendment of all reasonable objections. I have no fear, myself, that Congress will ever be called upon to exert such a power. On the contrary, I believe that the longer the line exists and is maintained, the more the hearts of the people will cluster around it as a source of national advantage and national pride.

There is, however, Mr. President, one other objection, which has been sometimes urged against this amendment. It is said that, supposing the amendment to be proper in itself—supposing it is proper to be adopted upon a suitable bill, and at a suitable time, it is not a proper amendment to put upon this bill. Upon that subject I wish to say a few words. This is a bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the present half fiscal year. In my opinion, the amendment is in itself proper, and suitable to this bill. It will be recollected, that, during the recess of Congress, the heads of the Post Office and Navy Departments came to an arrangement or understanding with the proprietors of the Collins line, that they should increase the trips from twenty to twenty-six per annum; that they should commence the increased service on the first of January last, and that they should trust to Congress affirming what had been done, and for fixing the rate of additional compensation, if any should be given. The subject was brought to our attention by reports from the proper Departments. Now, if Congress think proper to give their sanction to this arrangement, there is a deficiency in the appropriations made at the last session for this half fiscal year. I cannot conceive why this provision is not as appropriate to this bill as any of the other provisions which are contained in it. True, sir, the necessity for this appropriation did not exist when the general appropriation bill was passed; true, the arrangement which has caused this deficiency has been made since the close of the last session of Congress; true, it has arisen under a conditional understanding and agreement, subject to the ratification of Congress; but still, if we are disposed to ratify it, we give it validity and effect from the commencement, and thereby produce the very deficiency which this appropriation is intended to supply. But suppose that it is not so. Forms must yield to substance. There is a necessity sometimes for disregarding the ordinary routine in which business is discharged, and to accomplish what is necessary at the time and in the manner in which it can alone be accomplished. Now, if this amendment is not put here, it will be too late. The moment it is rejected, we shall be called upon by this company to discharge them from the obligation of running the line which they are now running at such ruinous sacrifices—a call which we cannot, without great injustice and want of generosity, resist. The consequence will be, if this amendment is thrown out upon an idea that it is not appropriate to the bill now pending before the Senate, that the line will go down.

I had in my possession a few days ago (and which, I am very sorry to say, I have lost) a letter addressed to my honorable friend from New York, [Mr. Fish,] by a very distinguished citizen of this country, well known as once a member of the other House from the State of New York—well known for being one of the most liberal, intelligent, and enterprising of American merchants for many years. I mean Moses H. Grinnell. He wrote a letter to my friend from New York upon the subject of this line, and with that letter I had proposed to support, as by authority, some of the suggestions which I have ventured to throw out. I have unfortunately mislaid it. In that letter he says to my friend, it might be supposed that the maintenance of this line would operate injuriously upon the large packet interests in which he is concerned. But he says that he wishes him distinctly to understand that his pride as an American would never permit him to suffer any such paltry interests of his own to stand in the way of the maintenance of a line which was reflecting such distinguished honor and bringing such distinguished advantage to the country. Besides, he says, that even that view must be considered to a great extent fallacious; because, if this line were discontinued, it would do nothing for the sailing packets, but would merely throw what is now transported of passengers and of freight by the Collins line entirely into the hands of the English steamers. He makes another remark, that enterprising and intelligent merchants who look far ahead—further, I believe, than politicians or even statesmen, for their horizon is generally bounded by the approaching presidential election, and we are too much in the habit of controlling our views and circumscribing our patriotism by considerations connected with the advance or defeat of a particular party—see in the present condition of Europe symptoms of such an outbreak there as may necessarily involve the removal, temporarily at least, of the Cunard steamers from the purposes to which they are now devoted; and, if then the Collins line should go down, one of the greatest benefits to commerce that this country or the world has ever experienced—that of speedy, prompt, almost instantaneous communication between Europe and this country would be entirely destroyed. So that in any event, whatever may be the case, he is clearly of opinion that the honor and the interests of the country equally require that Congress should give it such aid as is necessary to enable it effectually to succeed—not doled out with a grudging hand, but given with the spirit of men who realize what is their duty to themselves and their country, and who are resolved to discharge it.

Mr. President, I have occupied rather more time than I intended upon this subject. I wish to conclude by merely saying, that though personally I am as far removed from any connection with, or any immediate advantage from, the Collins line, and all the various facilities it affords, as any other gentleman on this floor, and perhaps as any other gentleman in this country, yet, as an American citizen I should deeply regret to see that line go down. I should regret it from a just and honest pride in the superiority of my country—regret it from an eager and anxious desire to see all her interests developed, and to see her growing in wealth, and in power, and in reputation. If we give this assistance, and if, having supported this line with all the available means in our power, we should at last, in a fair contest, be beaten by our English rival, I should regret that, deeply regret it; but I should feel that we had suffered no disgrace, for he who does all he can, and is overmastered, may be unfortunate, but he can never be looked upon with contempt. But if we voluntarily recede from the undertaking in which we are embarked—if we withhold the necessary aid—if we say to England, "Take possession of this great line; we retire from the contest; be you the mistress of the seas in the estimation of all the world; and let us sink into a secondary, contemptible position"—if we should do that, I should feel that we had not only committed a false step, had not only lost what we might have maintained, but had covered ourselves with dishonor. From that I hope my country will ever be safe.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I do not mean to occupy the attention of the Senate for more than two or three minutes, under the hope and expectation that the vote will be taken upon this amendment to-night. I should be sorry to say a word which would interfere with the excellent impression which the able speech of the Senator from North Carolina must have made upon the Senate. I shall vote for this amendment. I shall not go into the reasons for that vote. I wish simply to state that there is no enterprise, whether military or civil, in which this nation has been engaged in this age in which I have felt as deep an interest as in the enterprise which is now under debate. There is none that has excited my admiration so highly as this has. I may, perhaps, be incompetent to judge of it, because I have regarded it with a species of feeling that amounted to admiration. I have looked upon it from the commencement as a great trial—as a great contest between American skill, American energy, and, I might add, American perseverance, and the same qualities on the other side of the ocean. When this line was commenced, England had possession of the oceans of the world. She had taken this new power of steam which, in fact, is an American power. She had recovered herself from what the world was beginning to look upon as an expected fall. In sailing vessels, Americans were excelling England. She was beginning to lose her prestige. She then seized this new and wonderful power. She has, by means of it, seized the great lines of the world; for at this moment England has the great lines of trade and travel over the oceans of the world, with the exception of this one. I might enumerate them. There is something remarkable in this. She is levying contributions at this moment, through the medium of her great steam lines, upon the whole globe. In the Mediterranean, in the Baltic, around the Cape of Good Hope, in the East Indian seas, and in the West Indian seas, in the Gulf of Mexico, in South America, and across the Pacific. All these lines are at this moment in the hands of England. She is deriving a revenue from the trade, the commerce, the business, and the correspondence of the whole globe through the medium of this power. This was the condition in which England was when the Collins line was established. For one, I confess I am gratified at the result. The Collins line, so far as it has gone, has determined, as has been already stated, the superiority of the American line over any other in the world.

I am not going to make a speech, but I will say that to build up a great line, to place it in competition with a line long established by Great Britain, to see that line eminently successful, and then to permit it to fail is to me a most extraordinary policy. How shall we stand when this line goes down? Will it not be an abdication, as it were, of the whole ocean navigation, so far as this country is concerned? Where will you have a line to compete with England, when you permit this line to go down? Where have you a line that can live upon the ocean, but this? Not one. And do you expect, sir, as was stated by the honorable Senator from Virginia, that after you shall have allowed this line to go down, which furnishes four of the best steamers in the globe, you can reestablish lines to enter into competition with the old established lines of Great Britain?

The honorable Senator from Virginia, has made one statement in which I cannot concur. He says he wants to see the Navy and the commercial marine separated. That is not the problem, permit me to tell him, which steam is working out. On the contrary, so far as we have yet gone, steam is working out a new problem—and that is, that you can have an efficient Navy, which will add to the wealth and prosperity and business of your country, in time of peace, while it is waiting for perhaps fifty years, burning coal and exhibiting herself, for no earthly purpose but merely to be ready for the contingency of war.

Sir, I see at this moment, that in the East Indies the English have converted their whole commercial steam marine into an efficient Navy, for the purpose of aiding in the Burmese war. Yet there is not in that whole region, one vessel which is comparable to any one of the Collins line. The report from there to England is, that these vessels, when they have been thus converted into naval steamers, are likely to be as effective as any vessels now in the English service.

Mr. President, I will merely add this: If we let this line go down now, after the immense expense that has been incurred in its establishment; if we let it be abandoned, I will venture to predict, that so long as the Government of Great Britain aids the people of Great Britain, both united, in sustaining their line, the free competition of which the gentleman from Virginia speaks, and which is right in principle, can never be seen. While the competition was between the American people and the English people, the American people were successful; but when the English Government and the English people, united with the immense capital of their country, have devoted the whole energies of that nation to the building up and monopolizing the steam power of the world, it is idle to talk about American citizens entering into competition with them. It is out of the question. You will have to bring home your lines, and confine yourselves to your own inland trade, and to your interior commerce; but never again, in my humble opinion, if you abandon this line, can you enter into competition with Great Britain on the ocean, so far as steam navigation is concerned. Her Government, and her people, and her capital, all unite in sustaining her lines. England has never made such an effort as she is now making to build up a steam commercial Navy. She has recovered the dominion of the ocean by it within a few years. In the face of all this, if you let this line go down, and risk it to private competition at the present time, you will never again find four such steamers as the Collins steamers plying the Atlantic, at least in our day.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, I do not intend to trespass upon the Senate with any speech upon this subject. I simply desire to state a difficulty I have in giving my vote for this proposition, with the hope that some of its friends may be able to remove it. I am as anxious, I think, to sustain this line as any gentleman who is in favor of this amendment; and I confess that the sentiments uttered by the gentleman from North Carolina weigh very largely with me. The patriotic view that he has taken of it, the nationality of the question, has affected my mind. I repeat, I am as anxious to sustain this line, I think, as any Senator upon this floor; but with the impressions that I have, and with my convictions of duty to the whole country, I am not prepared to give my vote for this amendment as it is. One difficulty that operates very much to bring my mind to that conclusion is this, and I have sought in vain thus far from the advocates of this proposition to get an explanation which was satisfactory to my mind. We are paying the Collins line above $19,000 per trip. The English Government is paying the Cunard line, according to the statement of the gentleman from Virginia, $14,000 a trip. The Senator from Texas yesterday said that there was an error in the estimate of the gentleman from Virginia, and that the Cunard line were receiving £175,000 per annum. Taking that calculation, then, I find that the Cunarders are receiving between $16,000 and $17,000 per trip. We are paying the Collins line $19,000 a trip; and this proposition is to extend it from $19,000 to $33,000 a trip. Taking, therefore, the largest estimate which has been made by the friends of this measure for the Cunard line, to wit: the £175,000 per annum—it makes between $16,000 and $17,000 per trip that the Cunarders are receiving. We are asked now to give the Collins line $33,000 per trip. I confess there is a vast difference between these two propositions, and I cannot for the life of me see how it is possible that our vessels cannot run for less than $33,000 per trip, when the Cunarders run for $16,000 per trip.

I know the argument which has been made by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. JAMES,] and reaffirmed by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER.] It is this: That the difference is to be found in the magnitude of the vessel—in the size of the vessel, and the increased cost of running a large vessel over a small one. They argue from that that there is the difference, and that we are justified in making the additional compensation from $19,000 to $33,000 a trip. Now, I think there is some mistake about this. I do not profess to have the slightest knowledge upon the subject of navigation; but I do profess to have a little common sense about machinery; and to know that there cannot be that difference between the running of a large vessel and a small vessel, which gentlemen seem to assume. It takes no greater number of officers to command a large vessel than a small vessel. The only difference between running a large vessel and a small vessel, is the amount of the consumption of fuel, and the additional number of hands necessary to supply that fuel. The same captain—the same officers—the same engineers—the same pilots—all are identically the same in a small vessel as in a large one, and therefore there cannot be the difference that is claimed. How will the account then stand? The Cunarders average a little less than two thousand tons per vessel. The Collins vessels are three thousand tons a ship. The Cunarders then receive $8,000 per ton. For two thousand tons burden they receive $16,000 a trip. Our vessels are three thousand tons; and if we give them $8,000 for each ton, it would amount to $24,000 a trip, and this is the maximum to which gentlemen can carry it by their own arguments and their own estimates. Assuming their ground to be true, that just in proportion as a vessel increases in magnitude and tonnage, in the same ratio you must increase the expenditure for running her, and you cannot get above the sum of $24,000 per trip. That is my difficulty. If gentlemen can remove it, I am as ready to vote for the proposition as they are.

I should regard it as a national misfortune if this enterprise should fail. I think our pride is enlisted in it. As an American citizen, I am willing to sustain it as far as I can, consistently with my convictions of justice to the parties interested, and to the whole country. But if we are to go on increasing the compensation from $19,000 to $33,000 per trip, in my humble opinion, humiliating as it may be, it is better for us to abandon it at once. If this will not sustain them, where shall we find means to sustain them? If this line requires this enormous extension of patronage from the Government, every other line under the patronage of the Government is justly entitled to a like extent. Where is this thing to end?

If gentlemen can satisfy me as to this difference between the two lines, and show me that there is justice or equity in allowing the sum proposed in the amendment, and that it will work no evil to all the parties interested, I am ready to go for it. But with the lights now before me, I shall be reluctantly compelled to vote against the amendment, unless it can be altered in some proper form.

I am willing to vote a large and liberal allowance. I am willing to carry it up to perfect and full equality with the Cunarders. I am willing to go somewhat beyond that; but when you ask me to vote $33,000 per trip, I am not prepared to stand it just now.

Mr. BADGER. I intimated a short time ago, that I had an amendment which I should propose, if the Senate should adopt this provision for the increase of compensation. I have been requested by some of my friends to read it, in order that the Senate may understand what it is. It is this:

Provided, That the contract for the transportation of said mails be, and hereby is, transferred from the Navy to the Post Office Department; and the Postmaster General is hereby required to contract with said steam-ship company, to carry said mail in their present steamers, at the rates aforesaid, payable out of the Treasury, for the unexpired term of the original contract; reserving, nevertheless, to Congress, the right to direct the Postmaster General to put an end to the contract at any time after the first day of December, 1854, upon giving six months' notice thereof to said company.

Mr. HALE. I want to ask the honorable Senator from North Carolina, who proposes the amendment, whether he contemplates the abandonment of the clause permitting these vessels to be used contingently for war purposes?

Mr. BADGER. It contemplates giving to Congress the power of putting an end to the contract on such terms as it pleases.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from North Carolina does not understand me. Does he, by this amendment, look to abandoning the idea that these vessels are to be converted into war steamers, whenever they may be wanted as such?

The PRESIDENT. The paper which the honorable Senator from North Carolina has read, is not an amendment properly before the Senate. It is only one which he intends to offer.

Mr. BADGER. I would say, in explanation, that I do not propose anything about it. I propose to reserve to Congress the right, after that time, to put an end to the contract. If the contract is put an end to, I suppose that terminates it.

Mr. HALE. My idea was, that by turning over this matter to the Postmaster General's Department instead of the Secretary of the Navy, we might lose the war feature.

Mr. BADGER. Not at all.

Mr. PRATT. I want to ask my friend from Texas, or the Senator from North Carolina, two questions, if they can answer them. I wish to know what is the cost of the English steamers; and then I would like to know the cost of the American steamers? I wish to know the relative original cost of the Collins and Cunard steamers?

Mr. BADGER. I understand that the English vessels cost about two-thirds what the American vessels cost.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator mean the whole of the vessels?

Mr. BADGER. Each vessel.

Mr. PRATT. My object in making the inquiry was to suggest to the honorable Senator from Tennessee, whether that fact does not furnish an answer to the argument which he makes. His argument is, that the English Government are paying $8,000 per ton; and that if you make the same payment to the American vessels, it would make $24,000 instead of $33,000 per trip. He asked whether any gentleman could show him why there should be a reason for the increased payment to the American vessels according to the tonnage? and that if it could be shown, his mind would be relieved from all difficulty and he would go with those who support this amendment. Now, in the first place, if one vessel costs a million of dollars, and another costs five hundred thousand dollars, the insurance upon the vessels which cost a million would of course be double the insurance upon the other; and the cost of repairs, the damage or deterioration by the use of the vessel would be, of course, in proportion to its original cost. Then, the interest on the money invested in a vessel costing a million of dollars, would be double the interest on a vessel which only cost five hundred thousand dollars. Therefore, according to my humble judgment, the reason which the Senator from Tennessee assigned for the difficulty which prevailed with him is certainly answered, if, in his own mind, he will only run over these considerations.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, I am much obliged to the Senator from Maryland for his kind effort to enlighten me on this subject; but I am sorry that I do not perceive it. Now, if he assumes that the difference in the cost of these vessels is to determine the question of payment, why, I would say to the Senator, we allow that difference in the increased price we have paid. The cost of a vessel is to be determined by its size and finish. The burden of our vessels being three thousand tons, and of the Cunards two thousand tons, we are adding one-third, we are paying an additional eight thousand to our vessels expressly on the ground of their superior cost and the consequently larger expenditure in running them. But, then, if the gentleman's argument amounts to anything, it seems to me it is on the other side; because the vessels of the Cunarders, in the aggregate, cost much more than ours in the aggregate. If the argument of the Senator from Maryland, therefore, proves anything, it proves exactly the reverse of that which he assumes.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee seems to leave out of view the fact, that the receipts of the Collins line and the Cunard line are rendered greatly disproportionate by the fact that the Cunard line makes more trips than the Collins line. Now, as far as the carriage of letters is concerned, as far as mercantile transactions are concerned, as far as the transmission of freight and valuable merchandise is concerned, promptitude and dispatch are important. Does not the honorable Senator from Tennessee see at once that of two rival lines, the one passing oftener between two different points would come in for the larger amount of freight? Does he not see, besides, that this one would get the largest amount of passengers over the other steamships? And that is one of the important elements which has caused this disproportion in the expenses and remuneration of these different lines.

There is another thing which he seemed to forget, and that is this: The Cunard line had something like ten years the start of the Collins line. They had machine shops, because they had gone more largely into the building of steamships in England than in the United States. At the time this enterprise was undertaken by Mr. Collins and his associates, there were, as I understand, no shops here sufficient to make machinery for the vessels, and a large portion of it had to be purchased in England and imported. In addition to this there were no experienced engineers here whom they could put in charge of the vessels. They had to hire foreign engineers at a very large price, more than they now have to pay. This fact, while it accounts for the difference between the two lines, shows one important reason why you should sustain this line.

Four years ago you could not have built a war-steamer of the size of one of the Collins steamers. You would have had to depend for the machinery upon Great Britain. Now you can build one in case of emergency. Four years ago you had no engineers who could be trusted with the charge of ships of this description across the ocean, because you had not entered into the business. Now you have plenty of them, and, perhaps, better engineers than there are in England.

There is another matter which should be taken into account, which manifests itself in the Senate—manifests itself all over the country, but which does not manifest itself in England. It is a sort of disregard of American enterprise. If the Senator will look into the facts, he will find that Americans patronize the Cunard line, and, therefore, enable it to make more profits than the Collins line can make. He will find that the freight of American houses go by the Cunard line. Ay, more, if he will investigate this subject to the end, he will find Americans writing in the newspapers for the purpose of breaking down the Collins line—for British interests and British influence.

I will not pretend to go into all the items which show this difference; but I have given some, and I can give more that conclusively accounts for it. In England, I understand that coal is three dollars per ton; and in this country I believe it is six dollars per ton.

There is another important item which enters into the expenditures in the first instance. These ships, when they first went to England, were so large that there were no docks there into which they could enter; and these gentlemen, as I understand, had, at a large outlay of money, to build docks there for the entrance of these ships.

There are many considerations of this description, but the question to my mind is now: Will you abandon the enterprise, and force your citizens, whether they will or not, to pay ten or a hundred, or a thousand times perhaps, more in the shape of money to the Cunard line, for the transmission of freight, passengers, and letters, to be taken from the pockets of American citizens and transferred to the coffers of the British Government, to strengthen a steam marine vastly superior to our own in numbers? This, as it seems to me, is the question.

Mr. JAMES. I merely rise to address one remark to my friend, the honorable Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] on a matter of fact. The Cunard line now receives from the British Government $5 75 per ton for each of these steamers that cross and recross the Atlantic. The Collins line, allowing $33,000 per trip, will only receive $4 82 per ton; something like twenty per cent. less than is now paid to the Cunard line. One other fact, and I am done: I am not as well acquainted with the cost of building steamships in England as I am with the value and cost of all kinds of English machinery; but I can say that there is a difference of thirty-three and one third per cent. in favor of English machinery in cost. That being the fact, I presume that the English steamers are built at about that difference less than the same vessels could be built for in this country. That is all I have to say.

Mr. SEWARD. I have to submit one remark for the consideration of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

The rate of interest in England is three per cent.; the rate of interest in this country on capital employed in operations of this kind, is seven per cent.; a difference of more than one half. That would make a difference of between $210,000 and $135,000 against this company. The rate of wages for the persons employed as captains, engineers, and common seamen, is about one third higher in this country than in England. The rate of insurance in this country is six per cent., and in England three per cent.; the insurance on the Collins steamers amounts to about $175,000 a year, or one half of all the compensation received from the Government of the United States. These items make up very largely the difference that the Senator wishes to have explained. I will state these items more carefully and specifically:

Insurance on the Cunard line of steamships, valued at $500,000, at three per cent. in England, is.....	$15,000
Insurance of the Collins line of steamships, valued at $700,000, at six per cent. is.....	42,000
The total insurance on the Collins line is.....	168,000
The total insurance on the Cunard line is.....	60,000
Making a difference against the Collins line of....	108,000

These items show that we are contending against a very powerful competition with England. I know that the inference will be drawn, that if we contend against such disadvantages, we may as well retire from the contest; but I submit to the Senator, and to all other Senators, that there have been precisely the same disadvantages in the ordinary trade of the country—in the merchant marine; and, notwithstanding these disadvantages, arising from the deficiency of capital in this country, and from the deficiency of persons skilled in the management of such vessels, yet we have excelled Great Britain in the other branch; and, therefore, there is no reason to suppose that we shall not equally succeed in this, provided we continue the competition.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] permit me to ask him a question? Whether he states it as a fact, that the Collins and Cunard steamers, both lines plying between Liverpool and New York, pay different prices for the labor they employ, for the fuel they consume, and also pay different rates of interest? That is, are we to understand it as a fact that in the business transactions of this country, as compared with those of England, the business of two lines of steamers, owned and conducted by intelligent business men, is conducted and carried on at double the expense by one as compared with the other?—that, while insurance offices are opened in England and in the United States, Cunard gets his steamers insured for three per cent., and Collins is obliged to pay six per cent.—that, while the price of coal in the United States is double what it is in England, that Collins, although going backward and forward between Liverpool and New York for months, pays double the amount in New York that Cunard pays in Liverpool?—or that he pays double the amount of salary to his sailors and officers, when he can employ them on one side or the other, just as he thinks proper? If these are facts, to my mind they are astonishing facts. I should like to know whether they are correct or not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not rise for the purpose of detaining the Senate. It was not my intention to say another word on this subject. I simply desire information, so that I may not be called upon to vote in the dark. I confess, however, that the further I go, the worse I get. There is something in the remark of the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] that does go to account for this difference; but I want to know from that Senator, and from the friends of this measure, if the allowance which is here asked for, is to be supported on the ground which he assumes? If that be so, and if the advocates of this amendment will withdraw it as it is, in its present restricted shape, and make it a general proposition, applicable to every such case, I will go with them; for it is just the doctrine which I have advocated all my life—the doctrine of protection. Now, the honorable Senator from New York, in my judgment, predicates it upon the only ground on which it can be sustained, and the only objection which I have is, that it is a special law, whereas I am in favor of making the law general.

The Senator says that labor in England is cheaper than it is in America. That is the very argument which I have used in favor of protection to American industry. He says that the cost of building vessels in England, is less than the cost of building them here. That, sir, I again say, is the very argument which I have used in favor of protection to American industry. If that is the argument, I will go for it most heartily, provided you will make it general, and applicable to all similar enterprises.

But the Senator from Texas [Mr. RUSK] made a remark which attracted my attention. It was this: In attempting to account for this difference, or rather in attempting to assign a reason why the Cunarders could afford to run their ships for much less money than the Collinses, he said the difference was to be found in the fact that the first-named proprietors made so many more trips, and thereby secured a larger amount of patronage in the transportation of passengers and property. If that be true, then all that Collins has to do is, to run four or five times as many trips, and four or five times as many vessels, in order to have a complete monopoly of the whole thing. [A laugh.] Now, we are told that the Collinses cannot afford to run these vessels, because they are losing $16,000 on every trip, when, according to the argument of the Senator from Texas, he has only to multiply the trips, and increase the number of his vessels, to secure an amount of patronage which will place him beyond the necessity of asking this patronage from the Government.

But another argument which that Senator uses is this: that there is an anti-American feeling that sustains the Cunarders, and disregards the Collins line. If that is so, all I have to say is, that the man who disregards it, violates a great principle of nationality according to the argument of the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] but, sir, no man will deny the right of an American citizen to give his patronage to whom he will; and when we hear of this anti-American feeling, I should like to know who are the guilty perpetrators of this outrage. [Laughter.] If they choose to give their patronage to the Cunarders, and then appeal to the Government to sustain the Collins line, I say that it is a flagrant outrage.

But, sir, I wish to know if the question does not resolve itself back into the same great and glorious principle of giving protection to American industry and enterprise? Put it upon that ground, and I am with you. Make it a general law, and let us give protection to American industry in all its departments, and I shall have my cordial support. If you will do that, I am willing to sit here till Christmas, provided gentlemen will aid me in passing such a law; but I am not willing to pass a special law to aid a particular company, and thus give to one individual, or to an isolated company, an advantage, to the injury of every other interest in the land.

Mr. HALE. It is getting late, sir, and—
Mr. MANGUM. Let us have a vote.
Several SENATORS. "Vote!" "Vote!"
Mr. HALE. I only said it is getting late, sir—

Mr. CASS, (to Mr. HALE.) Move to adjourn.
Mr. HALE. I have sat very patiently, Mr. President, and listened—

Mr. CASS. Move to adjourn.

Mr. HALE. Very well, sir; then I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Felch, Geyer, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Sebastian, Sumner, Walker, and Whitcomb—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Berrien, Bradbury, Clarke, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fish, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, James, Mangum, Miller, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Stockton, Underwood, Upland, Wade, and Weller—28.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Several SENATORS. "Now let us have the question on the amendment!"

Mr. BELL. I had made some preparation a few days ago to give my views somewhat at length upon this subject; but I have dismissed all intention of doing so on account of the anxiety of the Senate to dispose of this bill. But now it becomes necessary, inasmuch as I may differ with honorable gentlemen on this floor with whom I should be very happy to agree, that I should state in a few words the ground on which I had expected to give my support to this proposition. I believe I stated to the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] that I could not give my support to it, unless some modification were made. That modification has been proposed by him, either on account of what I said, or perhaps from a desire expressed by other Senators also. I have desired from the first, upon principle, and I expect a good deal upon feeling, to sustain this Collins line; but I have said to some of the more earnest advocates of the measure that I thought it would be more judicious that this proposition should be brought forward in some different shape from that in which it is presented.

I do not pretend to have a very intimate acquaintance with what is the cost of building or running these ships, or what are the probable losses which have been sustained, and may be expected to be sustained; nor am I able to calculate what amount of support this line must receive from the Government, if it is sustained. But I have knowledge enough, and I gather it from the papers that have been read and reported, and from the debates of honorable Senators, to be satisfied in my own judgment, that the running of the Collins line at this time does not cost $65,000 per voyage. If I am wrong, I hope some gentleman will correct me. But still, that does not satisfy me that the amount of compensation claimed ought not, in justice and in liberality, to be awarded for the support of this line, for the present. The suggestion that I threw out with regard to bringing up the subject in a different shape was founded on this idea. I understood—from no verbal authority—I only infer it from the papers exhibited by different honorable gentlemen, that the estimate of the expense of running this line at $65,000 per voyage, is founded upon the alleged original cost of these vessels, in the first place.

Mr. RUSK. No, sir.

Mr. BELL. I shall be very happy to be corrected in any item. But I will go through with the enumeration of the basis of the calculation of this cost of $65,000. If it be based on the ordinary mode of calculating cost, I think I am right. The elements of that calculation must be founded upon the original cost; and when you have the cost, you can estimate the interest and other items of expense. Putting the cost at $3,000,000, the interest at six per cent. would be $180,000. That is one element of the cost per annum.

Mr. BADGER. The interest is seven per cent. in New York.

Mr. BELL. I calculated it at six per cent. Another element of the cost in making up the average expense per voyage to $65,000, is the insurance upon the investment in the ships. Estimating that in this country at six per cent., it will amount to $180,000 more. Then another element, and perhaps a more important one than either of those I have named, is the deterioration of these vessels. I have put that at ten per cent., including all the ordinary repairs of the vessels and their machinery. These I consider the true elements of the expense for running these ships one voyage, so far as they go. The insurance upon $3,000,000, the interest upon $3,000,000, and the deterioration of the four vessels at a cost of nearly $3,000,000, calculated at ten per cent., which last item amounts to $300,000, making an aggregate cost per annum of $660,000. Add to this sum the salary of officers, the wages of seamen, and the cost of fuel and of provisions for the year, and then divide by the number of trips during the year, and you have the average cost of the trip or voyage to Liverpool and back. I have put the loss by deterioration at ten per cent., though I see that the honorable Senator from Texas has put it at seven per cent. I think that ten per cent. is not too high, if we include ordinary repairs.

Mr. MILLER. It is rather too low.

Mr. BELL. It should, perhaps, be twelve per cent. But this is sufficiently accurate for the purpose of my statement.

If the honorable Senator from Texas should answer me upon this point, there is another element which I wish to know, whether it is proper to introduce into the calculation or not. As I understand, this $65,000 per trip, based upon these elements, so far as they go, is not all. The $65,000 is not the average cost of recent trips; it is the whole cost upon the twenty-eight trips which these steamers have made during nearly two years.

Mr. RUSK. The cost is computed up to December last.

Mr. BELL. Undoubtedly. What I thought would be more judicious and proper, would be to state this fairly. Not that I suppose it was intended to state it at all unfairly, but I want it stated so clearly that the country can understand it; because the country will be startled by being informed that these lines cannot be run without a government bounty of $808,000 per annum. This $65,000 includes the average cost of all the trips, and therefore includes the early losses incurred by the first experiments made by these vessels. I understand they did not know how to estimate the quantity of coal which would be necessary for their voyages, and, consequently, they found themselves out of coal midway of some of their first voyages. Hence there was a great loss of time, which makes a further element in estimating the cost so as to find the average expense of these twenty trips, or more. The $65,000 includes also, the breakage of the machinery of the Atlantic, and her long detention in England, which, I suppose, alone must have been upwards of $100,000; perhaps $200,000. The immense loss consequent upon want of proper skill in making the machinery, is to be included. I presume I am right in making this estimate an element in making up the cost of $65,000 as the average expense of each trip. Am I not right?

Mr. MILLER. I cannot say, sir.

Mr. BELL. I presume I am right. I beg gentlemen not to misunderstand me. I do not think that a fair consideration should not be given to all these circumstances. These vessels, as I understand, cost about $200,000 each, more than they would have cost, if the machinery proper for the purpose of building their engines had existed in the country before this enterprise was undertaken. I apprehend that the cost of these four vessels together would have been $800,000 less than the Messrs. Collins would have had to pay, if we had the adequate machinery and the adequate skill for constructing engines of the necessary size; and if adequate experiments had been made to test that skill. This patriotic company have made the experiment at their own risk, at a cost, as I believe, of $800,000—which they would not have had to pay but for the experiment of constructing those ships, from the simple fact that no venture was made in this country on so large a scale at any previous time. The very object which they accomplished, of introducing large machinery for the manufacture of these great engines, I regard as a boon to this country; and I beg to remind the Senate, if I do not trespass on their patience, of a fact connected with this subject, which I read some fifteen months ago, I believe, in the book referred to by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] When the English Government resolved on making an experiment to test the value of screw propellers for war purposes, one of the first steps of the Admiralty was to give out a contract to eleven of the best engine manufacturers in England and Scotland—not limiting the cost, but leaving a large margin for the contractors to derive some profit—by way of experiment. And further, to illustrate the liberality, and not the liberality merely, but the far-seeing policy and statesmanship of the British Government, they gave out thirteen contracts to the best ship-builders for the construction of the hulls of the vessels, in order that they might obtain a model of the fastest running water-lines, and at the same time vessels capable of carrying the greatest number of guns. That was the condition of England in regard to machinery; but what was the condition of this patriotic company when it undertook to put this line in operation? Then, or a short time previous, on the construction of the steamers Georgia and Ohio, by Law & Company, no machinery of this description had been introduced in this country—I am not aware whether they preceded the Collins company or not—but I say that the introduction of the machinery for the purpose of constructing the engines of these vessels as well as of the Georgia and Ohio, was an immense benefit to this country. I do not know how to estimate its value. Who can estimate its value? But I should think if we were to put it down at a million of dollars, considering all its results, it would be a very pitiful calculation.

I had occasion to make inquiry of one of the most experienced officers of the Navy not long since, what would be our condition if we were suddenly called on to meet the Navy of England, or that of any other maritime power of Europe, and I inquired how many of these large steamships could be constructed in a year. I ascertained that only four of the largest steamers could be built within a year. How is that? We have plenty of timber, and we have navy-yards and all the facilities for building vessels, but we have not the machinery. Even now, although we have had machinery introduced for building the engines of these large steamers, it is said that we cannot construct more than four vessels of this description in a year. The fact looked appalling to me. We have machinery which will manufacture the engines for the ordinary steamers of the Western waters and for the coast trade of the Atlantic. But the machinery which is required for the larger engines, setting aside the cost, is such as cannot be obtained upon an order. It must be built, and it requires, perhaps, a year to construct one of these large double engines.

I look upon the introduction of that kind of machinery into this country as a great point gained, and although I have not consulted any one upon that point, I think I may safely infer that the cost of the introduction of such machinery entered into the estimate of these ships. I do not think, therefore, when we have the skill and the machinery which we now have, that the fitting out of one of these ships will cost more than $500,000; and if so, the cost of four such ships would be $2,000,000. The insurance and interest upon that would reduce the expense of running them, by the difference of interest and insurance upon $1,000,000, below what it is, estimating the cost at $3,000,000. It is a little surprising, that gentlemen make calculations which they do without knowing the elements of them. The cost of running these vessels, by the estimate which has been presented, of $65,000 per trip, undoubtedly includes the interest and insurance upon the $800,000 of the extra cost of the vessels, as well as all the other losses incident to a first experiment of constructing and running vessels of this class. Now the question is, ought we to throw upon this company the burden of these losses? Ought not the country, in the exercise of magnanimity, to remunerate these gentlemen for their patriotic feeling and public spirit? I say they are entitled, for their public spirit, to a compensation. I say, for myself, that if this country will not compensate these gentlemen for their losses in taking the initiative in building these ships, it must suffer in the estimation of all liberal-minded men of every country. I would like to know what would be a fair compensation to these gentlemen, for running these vessels at this time, after all these experiments have been made. Then we should show the country what we are doing. I would then vote for a proper sum to indemnify them for the extraordinary cost of introducing this machinery of which I have spoken, and the cost of these vessels, and the necessary cost in making the experiments consequent upon their introduction upon the ocean. I would make the country bear that loss, as far as my voice could go. I am willing to do this; but I am not prepared to say that I would vote the $845,000, proposed as an annual compensation to this company for an indefinite time, or until the end of their contract. But I am willing to indemnify the company for the necessary expense and losses in taking the initiative in these experiments. I feel that the honor of the country is concerned in it, and that, as was observed by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] the national spirit is kept alive by it.

If the Senate desires to take the question, I will conclude here; but I desire to state further, that, as the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] to limit the compensation proposed in the amendment offered by the committee to the year 1854, may indemnify this public-spirited company for the losses and extra expenses incurred in a new adventure, I am ready to give my vote in its favor; and we shall then be able to see what the remuneration ought to be thereafter, until the contract is closed. At first, and before they had established any character, travelers were afraid to venture across the Atlantic in these vessels; they had to compete with an old company; and people naturally held back; but, having established a character for speed and safety, I should suppose that both as regards passengers and freight, there will be a large increase; and when the limitation of time proposed by the Senator from North Carolina expires, we shall have the means of calculating with some certainty what the future protection and bounty of the Government should be.

Mr. HALE. I have never in my life known the courtesy of the Senate to fail, except upon one condition—

Mr. NORRIS. Will my colleague give way for one moment?

Mr. HALE. I am sorry to say to my colleague that I cannot. I gave way once, and I lost the floor.

A SENATOR. Go on, go on.

Mr. HALE. When I was up before, I was going to say that I had sat patiently through this long and protracted debate without opening my mouth, and I suppose there are some Senators who think that it must have been as great a trial to me as to others of the Senate to sit through this long debate, listening eagerly and patiently and anxiously without saying a word; but that has been my condition, and I have been amply repaid for it; for I have been instructed by a vast amount of eloquence in all its various characters—eloquence forensic and didactic—for which I have felt very grateful to the Senate in general, and to some gentlemen in particular, who have aided to enlighten me. But I felt still more grateful, still more gratified, when I saw the complacency of those gentlemen who had addressed the Senate, and enlightened our minds, so ready to call for the question; and the complacency with which they voted "no," when somebody else rose and moved an adjournment.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. I do not blame you, sir. [A laugh.]

Mr. DODGE. The Senator from New Hampshire did not disclose the fact that he wished to address the Senate, or I should have voted for the adjournment. I hope the Senate will accommodate him now.

[Cries of "Adjourn!" "Adjourn!"]

Mr. HALE. I do not know how a gentleman can understand that a man wishes to address the Senate, except by his beginning to do so. I made a beginning, and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CASS] suggested that I should move to adjourn. I made the motion, and the Senate refused to adjourn. I think we had better have a vote to-night.

Several SENATORS. "Adjourn!" "Adjourn!"

Mr. HALE. No, no; you must have a speech whether you take a vote on the question to-night or not, because the floor is mine, and I promise I will be very short. I say I could not but be gratified with the complacency with which some gentlemen refused to adjourn; but I excuse it on the same ground on which a celebrated Mohammedan conqueror justified the burning of the Alexandrian library. He said if it contained anything contrary to the Koran, it ought to be burned; and, on the other hand, that if there was nothing there but what coincided with the Koran, then it was unnecessary and useless, and ought to be burned.

Mr. President, I do not expect to enlighten anybody upon this subject; but I rose simply to say, that from the beginning I have been in the situation of a friend of mine in one of our New Hampshire towns at the time of a public election. He was sent out among the voters to canvass, and to see how they stood. When he returned, he said, "In one district they are all Whigs but four, and they are doubtful—of which I am one." [A laugh.] That was just exactly my case in reference to this amendment. I felt an earnest and anxious inclination to vote for it from the first. I felt that there was a sort of "manifest destiny" that I should vote for it; and it strikes me that the opponents of this bill who have undertaken to discuss it on the supposition that it bears any analogy to anything else have mistaken its character. Sir, this belongs to the "manifest destiny" question. [Laughter.] I suppose, sir, that we are bound to have a contest with England in regard to superiority in these matters, and the "manifest destiny" is that we shall beat them. It belongs more exclusively to that school of questions than to any other, not excepting the question of the annexation of Texas, which was a pure one of "manifest destiny," (my friend from Texas will excuse me,) as exclusively to that school as any other question which was ever before the Senate. Now, I confess that that is sufficient. It is said that one good reason for anything is generally sufficient, without any other. I recollect once hearing of an attorney who got up in court to make an excuse for the absence of his client. He said he had many reasons—a dozen or fifteen good and sufficient reasons why his client was not there, all of which he would lay before the court, if necessary; but the first one that he had to assign was that his client was dead, and could not come, [laughter,] and the court very wisely decided that that reason was sufficient, without adducing the other fourteen. And, sir, it appears to me that this reason of "manifest destiny" is a good and sufficient reason why I should vote for this amendment.

But, sir, there is one view of this question which will influence my vote, and I shall vote for the amendment without going into an examination of these details, for I am not able to go into them—and it is this: I see, by a document to which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] alluded, that the Secretary of the Navy reports that the annual expense of a ship-of-the-line of the first class, is a fraction short of $300,000. I have it from one of the members of the Naval Committee of the Senate, that the actual expense is over $300,000; but, in this report, it is put down at $287,500; while a frigate of the first class is put down at $186,000, and a steamer of the first class is put down at $190,000. This expense has to be incurred in one ship or another; and then comes the question of a comparison as to the best mode in which it should be incurred. To keep afloat one of this line of steamers, going to and from Liverpool, making twenty-six trips a year, will cost us, upon the rate of compensation proposed by this amendment, something like $200,000 a year. To keep afloat one of our war steamers costs just about the same amount. It is put down, in this report, at $190,600.

In hastily looking over the report of the Secretary of the Navy, I see that we have five of these war steamers now afloat; of the frigates and ships-of-the-line, I do not know how many, but we have a vast number of frigates afloat. I do not know that we have any ships-of-the-line afloat, and the expenses of war steamers and frigates may be set down, in round numbers, at $200,000 each, and one of these steamers at the same expense. Well, which will result in the greatest benefit to the country, to all the interests of civilized society, to all the interests which should commend themselves to a patriot and a Christian—one of those steamers, making her trip semi-monthly, across the Atlantic ocean, freighted with all the means by which affectionate hearts are bound together; by all the means by which the intercourse of civilized, social, polished, and Christian society is bound together, and kept in operation, ministering to its elevation in the highest sense, and advancing the great cause of human progress, and the amelioration of the human condition, by the multiplication of facilities for the interchange of mutual benefits; or one of your war steamers, which goes out in state, and anchors at Mahon, or some other port in the Mediterranean, Pacific, or East Indies, there lying in idle state, making, possibly, one or two pleasure cruises, and entertaining some semi-barbarian chief, for which, by the way, a bill of expense will be brought in, when the commander returns—incurs these expenses every two years? The question that suggests itself to my mind is, which of those two is the most meritorious? Which is the more meritorious, your war steamer, which goes out and effects no practical purpose under heaven, except to make drafts upon your Treasury, which ministers nothing to the civilization, refinement, or progress of the age, and after lying in idle state some two years, making and receiving some few visits of ceremony, and then coming home, having cost $400,000 per trip; or one of the Collins line of steamers, which has crossed the Atlantic some twenty-six times in the same period, and ministered to all the great purposes of social and civilized life, and in addition to that, has been pouring treasures into your coffers in the return of postages which she pays over to the General Government?

It is this view which I have taken, which commends this system and this measure, not only to my judgment, but to my heart; and I say that if these expenditures are to be made, let them be made in such a manner that they shall minister to something that is valuable, something that will advance our progress, and for which, when we have spent our money, we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that it has been spent for some great and noble purpose. These are views which have not been presented to the Senate by any one of all the eloquent and distinguished gentlemen who have edified and delighted the Senate on this subject, and then would not adjourn to give somebody else a chance to say something. But in my darkness these thoughts suggested themselves to me, and these are the considerations which impel me to vote as I shall vote. It is by this process of reasoning that I have come to the conclusion to which I have arrived. Whether I am right or wrong, it is my own conclusion, and one which I think can be demonstrated. And I will go still further. You may take home your Saranac, Mississippi, and Susquehanna, and all the rest of your war steamers, which are nothing on earth but idle pageants abroad, and substitute for them something which has the beauty of utility, and that can minister to something besides national vanity.. For these reasons I shall vote for this amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is it competent to move to amend the amendment?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. JONES. I propose to strike out "thirty-three," and insert "twenty-five," so that the amount of compensation shall not be $33,000 per trip, but $25,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that amendment I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CASS. I have an amendment which I wish to offer, and I desire that it may be read before I say anything, in order that the Senate may more fully understand the purport of my observations.

Mr. WELLER. With the consent of the Senator, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Let us hear the amendment read first.

Mr. WELLER. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

The amendment offered by Mr. Cass was then read, as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a commission, composed of three officers of the Navy and of two experienced scientific engineers, who shall make a thorough examination of the said vessels, and who shall report upon their fitness for the purposes of war in the various situations in which it might be necessary to employ them, and whether they are such vessels as would probably be needed, having reference to the different objects of a military steam marine, together with any other information which may be useful in forming an opinion of the importance of such vessels to the public service; and also what additional expense would be required to adapt them to war purposes; and such report shall be laid before Congress, by the Secretary of the Navy, at the commencement of the next session.

Mr. CASS. I wish the number of the officers to be appointed left blank, so as to be filled hereafter.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator propose to amend by striking out any portion of the amendment of the committee for the purpose of inserting what has been read?

Mr. CASS. Not at all; I intend to offer it at the proper time as a separate amendment.

The PRESIDENT. Then the proposition now pending is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and on a division there were—ayes 17, noes 23.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. CASS. As the Senate have determined to sit I will say what I have to say now; if the Senate will hear me.

Mr. ATCHISON. If the Senator will give way I will renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection that we should adjourn now, if we do so with the understanding that we can devote to-morrow to the consideration of this bill. I am anxious to have it disposed of.

Mr. PRATT. No, sir; I shall object to that decidedly. We have now devoted three days, which properly belong to the consideration of the Private Calendar, to the discussion of this bill, and I shall object to its being done again to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri persist in his motion?

Mr. ATCHISON. I do.

The question was then taken, and there were, on a division—ayes 24, noes not counted.

So the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 6, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the report of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. APPLETON, of Massachusetts, having asked and obtained unanimous consent for the purpose, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill for the relief of S. Morris Wain; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. APPLETON, of Massachusetts, it was Ordered, That the Committee of Ways and Means be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Henry Kershaw, praying to be allowed extra pay as a paymaster's clerk, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

COURTS IN DELAWARE.

Mr. McLANAHAN. The session of the circuit court for the district of Delaware is near at hand, and at the same time the supreme court of that State holds its session; consequently the circuit court cannot transact the business before it at the time, as the lawyers are mainly engaged in business before the supreme court of the State. A bill has passed the Senate changing the time of holding the circuit court of the United States in the State of Delaware. This change will save expense to the Government, and afford greater facilities for the transaction of business before the courts in that State.

I ask the unanimous consent of the House, inasmuch as the period for holding the courts has nearly arrived, to report that bill to the House, from the Judiciary Committee, and to put it upon its passage.

No objection being made,

Mr. McLANAHAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, without amendment and with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 136, entitled "An act concerning the sessions of the courts of the United States in the district of Delaware."

Mr. POLK. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLANAHAN. Certainly.

Mr. POLK. Did I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state that the entire delegation from Delaware are in favor of that bill?

Mr. McLANAHAN. I take great pleasure in answering the question of the gentleman, and in informing him that the Chief Justice of the United States, who holds that circuit court, the Senators from that State, and, I think, the distinguished gentleman who represents that State upon this floor, are all in favor of this bill.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and, having been read the third time, it was passed.

Mr. FREEMAN. I desire to obtain the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to report, for the purpose of reference, three or four bills from the Committee on Public Lands. I desire to leave the city for a few days, and I would consider it a great favor to have that privilege.

Mr. OLDS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the reports cannot be received.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that I may be permitted to report back from the Committee on Commerce an important memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, in relation to the treaty between this country and France, and its operation upon our commerce; and I do this for the purpose of giving it the right direction—of having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Objection was made, and the report was not received.

Mr. FREEMAN. I understood the House to give its consent that I might make a report. The members of the Committee on Public Lands having the right to the floor, I understand it is in order that they may report, at all events. If one objection can prevent me from reporting, I desire to ask the sense of the House upon that subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the business in order this morning is the consideration of the report made by the Committee on Printing. That report was made under a special rule of the House, which gives the privilege to that Committee, at any time, to report; and that right carries with it the right to consider the report when made by the committee. That is the first business in order, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. FREEMAN. Does the Chair decide that I have not the privilege of reporting this morning?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; none, under our rules, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I understand the objection made to my reporting back the memorial I have spoken of from the Chamber of Commerce of New York, is withdrawn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the regular business.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I believe the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FREEMAN] has the floor, and I am upon it by his permission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi was upon the floor upon a question of order, which the Chair overruled.

Mr. BAYLY. I only want to say that I thought the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FREEMAN] were not understood. He stated that he was desirous of leaving the city for a few days, and hence wanted to make a report from the Committee on Public Lands, merely for the purpose of reference.

The SPEAKER. Another appeal is made to allow the gentleman from Mississippi to make a report. Is it objected to?

Mr. FOWLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] asks the unanimous consent of the House to submit a motion to discharge the Committee on Commerce from the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, with the view of having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Is there any objection?

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I would say that this is an important memorial, relating to a subject affecting the whole commerce of the country; and the only object I have is, to report it back to the House, that it may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, inasmuch as it relates to a treaty between this country and France. I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. HIBBARD. I want to inquire of the gentleman whether the memorial relates to the old treaty as to French spoliation, or to the operation of the present treaty?

Mr. SEYMOUR. It relates to the present treaty.

Mr. AVERETT. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to, and the regular order of business is called for.

Mr. POLK. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I wish to call the attention of the House to one fact. Here is one of our fellow-members, desirous of leaving this city, and he has several bills which he wishes to get off his hands previous to leaving. This is a privilege always granted to members. He asks not to put any bill upon its passage, but merely that he may report them, get them out of his hands, and have them put upon the calendar. We have never refused anything of this sort, and I trust the House will allow the gentleman [Mr. FREEMAN] to have the same privilege.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!" all over the House.]

No objection was made.

SOUTHERN ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. FREEMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, the following Senate bill, which was read, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, viz: S. 72, "An act granting to the State of Mississippi the right of way and a donation of public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Brandon to the eastern boundary of that State, in the direction of Montgomery, Alabama."

Mr. FREEMAN said:

Mr. SPEAKER: This bill for the Mississippi road has passed the Senate three times, and has failed in this House on each occasion because it was not reached on the Calendar before Congress adjourned: I hope, therefore, that the House will indulge me with an attentive ear, while I state a few of the leading facts connected with this enterprise.

The road from Brandon to the Alabama line passes through a portion of the public lands, and is ninety-three miles in length; it has been surveyed and located, and the State is now engaged in grading the road. The public lands through which this road runs have been in market seventeen years, and are the poorest quality of pine lands. By a law of the State of Mississippi, the assessors of taxes have been required to ascertain the quantity and the value per acre of all the public lands in that State. I hold in my hand the official returns of those officers, from which it appears that the average value of the lands in ten counties adjoining the line of this road is twenty-two and a half cents per acre; and unless this road is built, they cannot be sold at all. Hence it will be seen that the Federal Government have much to gain and nothing to lose by making this grant.

From Brandon, west, to the city of Jackson, the State has completed thirteen miles of road, and made it part of the same line. From Jackson to Vicksburg on the Mississippi river, a railroad has been in operation for many years; so that these roads, when completed, will span the State, from Vicksburg, on the Mississippi river, to the Alabama line. The State of Mississippi has already invested $400,000 in these roads. The State of Alabama has chartered a road running from Montgomery, the capital of that State, to connect with the Mississippi road at the line of the two States, and has made a large loan of money to a company to construct that part of the road. From Montgomery, Alabama, to Savannah, Georgia, and to Charleston, South Carolina, there is a continuous line of railroad, except fifty miles, from West Point to Newnan, Georgia. These fifty miles are already nearly graded, and will be in operation in the course of a year. The completion of these roads connects the great valley of the Mississippi with the Atlantic ocean at Savannah and Charleston. From these points, we have already steamboat and railroad communication with all the Atlantic cities, and thence to the interior of all the Atlantic, Northern, and Western States and Territories on the east side of the Rocky mountains.

RAILROAD FROM VICKSBURG TO SAN DIEGO ON THE PACIFIC.

The Committee on Public Lands propose, by a bill I am directed to report, to continue this southern chain of railroad from Vicksburg, on the Mississippi river, directly west, to Shreveport, on Red river, and thence to the Texas line. A survey of the route, from the Mississippi river across the State of Louisiana to the Great Bend on Red river, has been made by W. H. Sidell, civil engineer, under the direction of the Federal Government. He reports that the route is in all respects feasible, and that a railroad with a single track, with iron weighing sixty pounds to the yard, and otherwise well constructed, will cost at the rate of $18,313 per mile.

I am informed by the delegation on this floor from Texas, that the Legislature of that State has already granted the right of way, and donated a tract of land eight miles in width for the entire length of the road, to aid its construction through the territory of that State, a distance of about seven hundred miles. The line of the road runs through the heart of this great agricultural region, and I am authorized to say that any reasonable quantity of lands, necessary to insure the construction of the road, will be freely given by Texas.

SURVEY OF CAPTAIN MARCY.

In pursuance of an order of the War Department, an accurate survey of the country from Preston, on Red river, through the center of Texas, to El Paso del Norte, has been made by Captain Marcy, of the Topographical Engineers; and the official report of Captain Marcy will be found at length in Senate Document No. 64, pages from 169 to 233, of the First Session Thirty-first Congress.

The following description of the country will be found at pp. 224-'5-'6-'7:

"By a reference to the map, it will be seen that we kept near the plain upon the head branches of the Colorado and the clear fork of the Brazos. Here we found a smooth road over a gently-undulating country of prairies and timber, and abounding with numerous clear spring branches for two hundred miles, and, in many places, covered with large groves of mesquite timber, which makes the very best of fuel. The soil cannot be surpassed for fertility. The grass remains green during the entire winter, and the climate is salubrious and healthy; indeed, it possesses all the requisites that can be desired for making a fine agricultural country; and I venture to predict, that at no very distant period, it will contain a very dense population. It is only necessary for our farmers to see it, and have protection from the incursions of the Indians to settle it at once."

"As there is grass on this route at all seasons of the year, it can be traveled at any time. It is true, that the old grass dries up early in the spring, but appears to cure like hay, and does not lose its nutritious properties."

"From all I can learn of the other routes to California, I am induced to believe, that should our Government at any future time, determine upon making a national road of any description across the continent, the southern route we have traveled is eminently worthy of consideration: We find upon none of the northern routes as much water, timber, or rich, fertile soil, as upon this. There are many more mountains to pass over, and during a part of the year they are buried in deep snows."

"I have been kindly allowed the perusal of a letter written by an officer of the army—an attentive and experienced observer of nature—who has recently passed over that portion of the northern route between Fort Kearny and Fort Laramie, in which he speaks of the country in the following language:

"The country between Fort Kearny and Fort Laramie is a vast, undulating, sandy desert—but little wood or water—totally destitute of interest, and utterly worthless, and must remain so forever: it never can be inhabited to any extent, as there is no soil, and the seasons are too short."

"The distance between these two places is three hundred and sixty five miles. In one place, wood for cooking has to be carried for three consecutive days, in wagons, and, in several places, it is necessary to carry water."

"The road from Independence, after passing through a country of poor soil, and very destitute of wood for a great distance, passes over lofty and rugged mountains near Santa Fe."

"Lieutenant Colonel Emory states that the arable soil upon this road extends to the ninety-ninth degree of longitude. Therefore, if a road could be made from the Missouri river to California, it would pass through a very barren country, which could not be settled or improved; whereas, one constructed through the country we have passed over, from Doña Ana to Fort Smith, with the protection which a chain of military posts along the route would afford, would open a vast tract of beautiful country to the notice of agriculturists, and would be settled in a very short time."

"The advantages which this route possesses over others, adapt it, in a preëminent degree, to the construction of a railroad. For the reasons I have mentioned, and from all the examination and consideration which I have been able to give the subject, I cannot resist the strength of my own convictions, that any experienced and impartial engineer, after a thorough and careful reconnaissance of all the different routes, would at once give this the preference over any other."

"From Doña Ana, or El Paso, to near where we crossed Red river—a distance of seven hundred miles—there are, probably, as few difficulties to encounter as upon any other road that can be found in our country. Throughout this entire distance, it would not be necessary to make a single tunnel, or to use a stationary engine. There would be but few heavy excavations or embankments; and, for a great portion of the distance, the surface of the earth is so perfectly firm and smooth, that it would appear to have been designed by the Great Architect of the Universe for a railroad, and adapted and fitted, by nature's handiwork, for the superstructure. There is an abundance of building stone, and an inexhaustible amount of mesquite timber, which, for its durability, is admirably adapted for use, as sleepers and for fuel."

"From Red river, it would be carried to Fort Smith without difficulty, or to any other point that might be selected. This, united with a railroad from the Rio Grande to the San Diego, would give us a great national highway across our continent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in a very direct line, and would enable the traveler to pass safely and comfortably over a distance in a week, which, before, required four months of toil, hardship, and danger. It would afford our Government a cheap and rapid transit for troops and munitions of war, and would enable us to communicate with our far-distant Territories in a few hours."

"These considerations, in connection with the vast and incalculable commercial benefits that the whole civilized world would receive, would render it a monument to the genius, enterprise, and philanthropy of the American people."

SURVEY OF MAJOR EMORY.

From El Paso del Norte, we have the survey of Brevet Major Emory, of the United States Topographical Engineers, from which we learn that the country west of El Paso del Norte to San Diego, is similar to that described by Captain Marcy, and presents no obstacles to a railway.

With regard to the harbor of San Diego, Major Emory says:

"At present, San Diego is, all things considered, perhaps one of the best harbors on the coast, from Callao to Puget's Sound, with a single exception—that of San Francisco. In the opinion of some intelligent navy officers, it is preferable even to this. The harbor of San Francisco has more water, but that of San Diego has more uniform climate, better anchorage, and perfect security from the winds in any direction. However, the commercial metropolis must be at San Francisco, owing to the greater extent and superiority of the country adjacent, watered by the rivers Sacramento and San Joaquin, unless, indeed, San Diego should be made the terminus of a railroad, leading by the route of the Gila to the Del Norte, and thence to the Mississippi and the Atlantic."

SURVEY OF MAJOR COOK.

Major Cook, of the 2d United States Dragoons, explored the same country, and in his official report, says:

"I left the river (Rio Grande) when in view of a point marked on the common maps as 'San Diego,' on the Del Norte, and the distant view towards El Paso, proved the country to be unbroken and comparatively level."

After describing the country thence to San Diego, on the Pacific, as unusually level, Major Cook concludes his report as follows:

"The Rio Grande bottoms, for a hundred miles above, and at the point where I left, are well timbered." "Rock is everywhere to be had, secondary rocks of almost every kind; but by this wonderfully level route the continent may be passed with scarcely a view of granite. As far as Tucson, the grama grass is abundant; it will fatten cattle while working and in winter. The route from Tucson passes through a country abounding in exceedingly rich gold mines."

SURVEY OF THE BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

John N. Bartlett, Esq., the present chief of the Mexican Boundary Commission, under date of September 21, 1851, writes to the Secretary of the Interior as follows:

"I am now enabled to state, with great satisfaction, that the direct route traveled by the commissions nearly west from Ajo de Vacca, is a route far more practicable for a road or railway than that known as Cook's road; that the distance from water to water is less; that the hills and mountains to be crossed are infinitely less in height, and easier to pass; and lastly, that there is a saving in the distance between this route and Cook's of more than one hundred miles. I say this with confidence, having twice been over Colonel Cook's road, nearly to the San Pedro."

"To show the practicability of our route for wagons, I will state that Lieutenant Whipple had one wagon, Mr. Gray and myself another, and Colonel Graham three, making five in all, which came through without difficulty."

This completes the satisfactory evidence as to the entire feasibility of the route.

San Diego on the Pacific, Vicksburg and Jackson, Mississippi; Montgomery, Alabama; and Charleston, South Carolina, are all in a direct line from the Atlantic to the Pacific, of nearly thirty-two degrees north latitude. El Paso del Norte is about fifty miles south of this line, and would curve the road to that extent.

By the treaty with Mexico, we have the privilege of constructing a railway on the Mexican side of the Gila, if we find it either necessary or expedient to do so.

GRANT OF LAND TO CALIFORNIA AND NEW MEXICO.

All that is now necessary to be done to insure the completion of this entire road, is for Congress to pass the bills reported by the committee, granting lands to Mississippi and Louisiana for the construction of the road through those States, and to grant also to the Territory of New Mexico, and the State of California a tract of land equivalent to thirty miles in width on each side of the line of the road, with the privilege of locating the land on the northern side of the road, in the event that it runs so near the Mexican line as to prevent its location on the south side. Such a donation would enable the Legislatures of that State and Territory to put the road under contract for its immediate construction.

By granting the right of way and the land to the State and Territory, and permitting those local governments to control the construction of the road, we not only perform a bounden duty to those infant republics, but avoid the objection of establishing a system of internal improvements by the Federal Government. At the same time we bring to our aid all the influence of State pride, State interest, and State wealth; and the States, by their local legislation, induce private enterprise and private capital to enlist in the same cause. While this powerful combination of interest and of capital cannot fail of success, it will bind the people of the American Union together by a mutual self-interest stronger than all the ties of Federal legislation.

The integrity and perpetuity of the Union demand the construction of this road. Nature has not only prepared the surface of the earth for the reception of the cast-iron horse, with all his paraphernalia, but excavated the Rocky Mountains for his transit, and profusely strewn his path with all the necessary material to perfect his gigantic race-course.

ROADS ALREADY CONSTRUCTED.

In fact, one half of the road is already finished. There is now a continuous line of railway from Waterville, in the State of Maine, through the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, to New York, 410 miles.

From New York, through the States of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, and North Carolina, to Wilmington—thence by steam-boat to Charleston, South Carolina..... 670 "

From Charleston, through South Carolina and Georgia, to Montgomery, Alabama..... 400 "

From Montgomery, Alabama, to Brandon, Mississippi, roads are chartered and building..... 200 "

From Brandon to Jackson, and thence to Vicksburg, a railroad is in operation..... 60 "

Making a continuous line of railroads of..... 1,740 miles, fifteen hundred miles of which are now in operation, and the remaining two hundred and forty miles rapidly constructing.

From Vicksburg to San Diego, via Shreveport and El Paso del Norte, is 1,625 miles.

From Waterville, in Maine, to San Diego, California..... 3,365 miles.—showing 1,500 miles of the road now in operation, and leaving 1,625 miles to be constructed west of the Mississippi. With the wonderful facilities afforded by the perpetual mildness of the climate, the uniform and firm surface of the earth, the fertility of the soil, its numerous valuable productions, and its capacity to furnish immediate support to a dense population, together with the abundance of the best building material everywhere at hand, I am warranted in saying that most of the road may be built at an average cost of $15,000 per mile, which would make an aggregate of $27,375,000 to build the road from Vicksburg to San Diego.

PROBABLE PROFITS OF THE ROAD.

Having shown the feasibility of this route, and its probable cost, let us now look at the profits that would probably arise from it.

All the internal commerce of the United States flows from the Rocky Mountains and intermediate country to the Atlantic coast and Gulf of Mexico, while all our external commerce flows from the Atlantic and the Pacific to the same points, and thence to the interior of the Union.

There are now 10,814 miles of railroad in successful operation in the United States, and about 15,000 miles projected, with a reasonable prospect of completion. All of these roads, with their freight and passengers, have the Atlantic coast and Gulf of Mexico for their final destination, to and fro, and would therefore be lateral railways to the great trunk of the Southern Pacific Road.

The same is the fact with regard to the rivers east of the mountains—they all flow and carry their commerce to and from the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico, and, with their freight and passengers, would intersect and fall into this line of communication.

The inland steam marine of the United States consists of 767 steamers, with a tonnage of 204,723 tons; carrying 5,860,950 passengers per annum.

Our external steam marine consists of 625 steamers, with a tonnage of 212,500 tons, and annually carrying 33,342,846 passengers.

The immense losses which annually occur in steam-boat navigation afford powerful stimulants to the construction of railways, on which no freight is lost, and very few lives.

The shipwrecks in the United States on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and Gulf of Mexico during the year ending July, 1851, were fifty ships, fifty-nine brigs, one hundred and ninety schooners, nine sloops, and twenty steamers; total, three hundred and twenty;—of which two hundred and seventy-eight were by tempest, fourteen by fire, fifteen by collisions, nineteen by snags, and two by explosions; the number of lives lost was three hundred and eighteen. None of these causes of loss exist upon a railway.

The steam-boat disasters on the Mississippi and tributaries since the introduction of steam to 1848, are, by collision, forty-five; fire, one hundred and four; snags, four hundred and sixty-nine; total, six hundred and eighteen. The original cost of the boats was $43,955,040 96. The loss in 1849 was $2,000,000 and six hundred and twenty-eight lives. In fact, almost every mail bears the frightful intelligence of the explosion of a steamboat and a great destruction of human life.

The sea voyage from New Orleans to New York is one of great peril to life and property, and the completion of the railways now in progress from New Orleans to Jackson, Mississippi, and thence to Montgomery, Alabama, would complete the railway connection from New Orleans to New York, and divert all the passenger and a large portion of the carrying trade from New Orleans and the intermediate points to the Northern Atlantic cities.

The total marine insurance paid for the year 1849 was $6,227,000. This sum of money lost in one year, would build four hundred and fifteen miles of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and in four years, sixteen hundred and sixty miles, which would more than complete the road from Vicksburg, Mississippi, to San Diego, on the Pacific.

These immense losses of property, and the great peril of human life from steam-boat navigation, indicate with unerring certainty that railways are, in a great degree, to supersede the internal steam marine of the United States. They are now running on parallel lines with several navigable rivers and lakes, and competing successfully with steam-boat navigation.

From Maine to Texas inclusive, there are nineteen States bordering on the Atlantic and its bays and the Gulf of Mexico, and with the exception of Florida, Louisiana, and Texas, they are all traversed by a completed chain of railway and steam-boat navigation (less two hundred miles) from Maine to the Mississippi river. Intersecting and crossing this line of road are the following roads projected and in operation:

The New Orleans and Jackson great Northern road, leading through Mississippi to Nashville, Tennessee, and running on a parallel line between the Mississippi and Pearl rivers, in the State of Mississippi—projected, and $3,000,000 of stock taken.

The Mobile and Chicago road, running north from Mobile, through a part of Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Illinois, to Chicago, on Lake Michigan, is now building, and from that point roads are projected to Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota.

The Savannah Railroad, now in operation from that city, through Georgia, to Chattanooga, Tennessee, and projected thence to Nashville.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, now in operation from Baltimore to Cumberland, and thence to Wheeling, on the Ohio river. From Philadelphia 1,146 miles of railway jet out to various points reaching the Ohio, and thence to Cleveland, on Lake Erie. From New York city that great State is traversed with 1,400 miles of railway leading to Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, from which points roads are now constructed or constructing, to most of the Northern and Western States and Territories. From Boston, 1,100 miles of railway traverses Massachusetts, crossing New Hampshire and Vermont, to Lake Champlain, thence to the St. Lawrence and Montreal, in Canada; and roads also extend from Boston to Portsmouth, Portland, and Waterville, in Maine; and from this latter point a road is now chartered, traversing the north-eastern part of Maine to St. John's, in New Brunswick, and thence to Halifax, in Nova Scotia; a distance from Waterville of 800 miles. From Halifax, a line of steam-ships is to connect with Galway, in Ireland, and thence by railway and steamboat to Liverpool and London.

This wonderful accumulation of railways east of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, demonstrates the fact that our internal commerce, State and National, is to be principally conducted by them.

The completion of the proposed road from Vicksburg, on the Mississippi, to San Diego, on the Pacific, running, as it does, through the richest and healthiest agricultural regions in the world, would immediately flood the whole extent of the adjoining country with our toiling millions, and draw after it the construction of lateral railways from the States of Louisiana, Texas, Missouri, California, the Territory of New Mexico, and even the Republic of Mexico itself.

With an eastern terminus at New York, and a northeastern terminus at Halifax, this road would greatly increase not only our commerce with all parts of Europe, but induce a transatlantic travel and postal communication, the value of which can scarcely be measured. The western terminus on the Pacific would command the entire commerce on that ocean—north and south. The hundreds of millions of gold produced by the mines of California, the rapid development of our possessions in Oregon, the great increase of the whale trade in the North Pacific, now amounting to several millions per annum, an increased trade with Mexico and South America, and the absolute certainty of finally crushing the Chinese walls and Japanese non-intercourse, and opening commercial relations with the seven hundred millions of people who inhabit Asia, would furnish all the transportation the road could carry.

The speed of rail cars, in England, has reached fifty miles an hour; in the United States from twenty-four to thirty miles an hour. The steamship passage from Liverpool to New York, has been made in ten days:

THE DISTANCE—
From Liverpool to New York by seas .....	3,100 miles.
From New York to San Diego .....	2,955 "
From San Diego to San Francisco .....	500 "
From San Francisco to Canton, China .....	5,400 "
Distance from Liverpool to Canton, China, via
San Francisco .....	11,955 miles.
TIME OF TRANSIT—
From Liverpool to New York .....	10 days.
From New York to San Francisco .....	5 "
From San Francisco to Canton, China .....	15 "
Transit from Liverpool to Canton, China .....	30 days.

This would make the trip from New York to San Diego in four days, to San Francisco in five days, and to Canton, China, in twenty days. So that a cargo of teas from Canton could be delivered at New York in twenty days, and at Liverpool, or London, in thirty days. Gold dust could be carried from San Francisco to New York in five days, and to Liverpool in fifteen days.

With this great acceleration of transit, and the perfect security to life and property, it is certain that commerce and travel would no longer undergo the expensive, tedious, and perilous voyage of months around Cape Horn, nor even of weeks across the Isthmus of Panama or Tehuantepec; but everything susceptible of railroad transportation would pass on the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, and pour millions into its coffers.

The State of Massachusetts has about 1,150 miles of railway, which, in the year 1850, transported 8,973,681 passengers. There is, about 11,000 miles of railway now in operation in the United States. Estimating their passengers by those of the Massachusetts roads, they carried, in the year 1850, 85,822,000. The passengers carried by our steam marine, for the same year, were 8,669,169.

These facts in relation to the "human movement" in the United States, reveal the wonderful influence of railroads upon the internal commerce of the Union. But a small portion of the people of the United States travel for pleasure—they are all engaged in some profitable employment, and those who travel most are usually engaged in the purchase, transportation, and sale of merchandise; so that the "human movement" affords some index of the vast amount of "material movement" that follows in the wake of the railroad passengers in the United States.

The annual commerce of the Mississippi valley alone is estimated at $300,000,000. The cotton States alone, through which the line of this road passes, produce annually from two to two and a half millions of bales of cotton, and in 1851 the crop was worth $112,315,317. The lands westward to the Pacific are equally productive, and many large rivers cross the line of the road.

Mr. Asa Whitney, in his memorial to Congress in 1848, for his Northern Pacific route, estimates the value of the foreign trade of Europe and Asia for his road at $25,000,000 per annum for transit alone. Add to this, for our internal trade to and from California and Oregon, the small sum of $2,000,000, and we have $27,000,000 per annum, as the income of a road which will cost but about that sum for its construction from Vicksburg to San Diego.

This Government now pays $750,000 per annum for the transmission of a semi-monthly mail via Panama to California and Oregon. By the treaty of peace with Mexico, we are compelled to protect that Republic from the incursions of the Western Indians, and shall need a military establishment on the line of this road for that purpose. Our commerce on the Pacific, like our commerce on the Atlantic coast, will require the construction of custom-houses, mints, forts, arsenals, dock-yards, navy-yards, light-houses, and kindred works, and for all these purposes the Government will require the transportation to that country of great quantities of material for all time to come.

The following estimate was made by P. P. F. DeGrand for the Northern Pacific road via St. Louis:

"When the railroad is in operation from Boston to San Francisco, the length of passage, for its 3,000 miles, (going night and day at the rate of 25 miles per hour, including stops,) will, for the express train, be only 5 days.
"For first class cars, at 2 cents per mile, the fare will be only $60.
"For second class cars, at 1 cent per mile, the fare will be only $30.
"The cost, then, of transporting from the Atlantic seaboard 150,000 persons to California, and of bringing back 50,000 persons from California, will be as follows:
Fare of 150,000 passengers, first class, at $60 each .....	$9,000,000
Time and food for said 150,000 passengers for five days, at $5 per day, say $25 for each person .....	3,750,000
Fare of 50,000 second class passengers, at $30 each .....	1,500,000
Time and food for said 50,000 passengers for five days, at $2 per day, say $10 for each person .....	500,000
Total cost by the railroad line .....	$14,750,000

Let us now examine what is the expense by the sea route for the same individuals.

To transport, by the sea route, the same number of persons, will cost as follows, part going round Cape Horn, part through the Straits of Magellan, and part through the Isthmus of Panama:

Passage for 150,000 first class passengers, at $1 50 each .....	$22,500,000
Time of said 150,000 passengers, for 100 days, on an average, at $5 50 per day, say $350 for each person .....	52,500,000
Passage for 50,000 second class passengers, at $50 each .....	2,500,000
Total cost by the sea route .....	$77,500,000
Deduct cost by the railroad line .....	14,750,000
Clear saving in the expense .....	$62,750,000

To this saving we may add the extra risk of life by the sea route, and the disappointments and extra delays occasionally incident to a voyage by sea.

In point of time, of great hardships, and of expense, the route by land, as it now exists, over a trackless waste, compares even more unfavorably with the railroad line.

If, then, we estimate that there will go to California, annually, one hundred and fifty thousand persons, and that one hundred thousand of them will settle there, and fifty thousand will come back, the annual saving of expense, by having the railroad, will be $62,750,000.

WHITNEY'S NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

I am aware, sir, that Mr. Whitney's project has many friends in the United States; but for this he is more indebted for the great anxiety that prevails for a speedy and cheap communication with our vast interests on the Pacific, than for any merit pertaining to the location of his road, or his scheme for its construction. The distance from New York city to Lake Michigan is eight hundred miles. From this point Mr. Whitney proposes to construct a railway to the mouth of the Columbia river on the Pacific, which is about one thousand five hundred miles north of San Francisco and the gold mines.

The distance from Lake Michigan to the mouth of the Columbia is estimated by Mr. Whitney at 2,200 miles, which is nearly 700 miles further than the route from Vicksburg to San Diego, and nearly as far as the entire southern route from New York. In his memorial to Congress in 1848, Mr. Whitney states his plan in these words:

"Your memorialist would now represent and explain the plan by which he proposes to carry out his great work. He prays that your honorable body will be pleased to set apart and sell to him sixty miles wide of the public lands (and an equivalent for any which may have been taken up) from Lake Michigan to the Pacific ocean, for this especial purpose. He has explored and examined a part of the route; and from the lake onward, for 800 miles, the land is of the very best quality, but nearly 500 miles of this 800 without timber, and then no timber on to the Rocky Mountains. That after this 800 miles, onward nearly to the ocean, the land is represented as very poor—too poor to sustain settlement; therefore the whole work is based upon 800 miles of the first part, with the belief that the facilities which the road would create and give to settlement, intercourse, and communication with the markets, would render a part of the poor land useful and valuable."

From this it will be seen that Mr. Whitney, although occupied solely for many years on this scheme, has only explored his proposed route to the Rocky Mountains, and he has no accurate information on which to rest the belief that his road can cross the mountains at all.

Again he says, five hundred of the first eight hundred miles of his route is "without timber, and then no timber on to the Rocky Mountains;" and that the balance of the route, being fourteen hundred miles, is "too poor to sustain settlement."

This confession alone, the truth of which is confirmed by travelers, is sufficient to satisfy any practical mind that his road cannot be built. With fourteen hundred miles of uninhabitable country, and more than five hundred miles destitute of timber either for fuel or building purposes in the frozen region of 42° of north latitude, with no means in the immediate country of sustaining either man or beast during the construction of the road, or after its completion, and an entire absence of building material for many hundred miles, the cost of the structure could scarcely be calculated. If the road were built, it could impart no value to the fourteen hundred miles of desert which is "too poor to sustain settlement;" and, consequently, it would not open the public domain to emigration or cultivation, and the road would receive no lateral support whatever.

Add to these objections the certainty of the heavy falls of snow which annually occur in this inhospitable region, with the imminent peril of being frozen to death for six months in the year, and the conviction becomes irresistible that the work will never be accomplished.

The Hon. WILLARD P. HALL, of Missouri, now a member on this floor, has himself made a personal reconnaissance of a part of the country in question, and in a communication to the Committee on Public Lands, under date of May, 1848, he speaks as follows:

"It is exceedingly problematical whether a railroad will be found practicable by the way of the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific ocean. In June last one of the undersigned left California on his return to the United States. On the 22d of that month he crossed one of the ridges of the Rocky Mountains by what is denominated 'a pass.' On that day he traveled for thirty miles over snow which was frequently more than twenty feet deep. He was informed by persons he fell in with from the Willamette Valley that the snows on the Cascade mountains of Oregon were as deep in June last as those he encountered in the California mountains. The whole country, from the South Pass to the valleys of California and Oregon, is not only exceedingly rugged, but is so elevated that, if one may believe his own senses, it is covered for many months in the year with almost impassable snows." * * * * *

Again: the donation to one man of a domain sixty miles wide by two thousand two hundred miles in length, covering an area larger than several States of this Union, is a proposition at which every mind revolts. But even if Mr. Whitney's road could be built and put into successful operation, the great length of time it would require to construct it through a barren, uninhabited, and frozen region, forsaken alike by God and man, should be regarded as an insuperable objection.

The memorial of John Plumb to the Congress of the United States, contains the following illustration on this point:

"The following brief letter, which has been repeatedly published, has never been satisfactorily answered, and it is therefore presumed that Mr. Whitney is unable to controvert the general correctness of its contents:

Boston, September 10, 1849.

To the Chamber of Commerce, New York:

GENTLEMEN: We observe that you recommend Whitney's plan for a railroad to the Pacific. We had previously understood that you were in favor of some plan that would insure the use of the road to the present generation. Will you be so kind as to explain to us how the use of the road can be obtained for the present generation by Whitney's plan?

He proposes first to build ten miles of road, and then (by the sale of lands) to create the means of building the next ten miles. May we not safely assume that it will take him at least one year to build the first ten miles, then one year more to sell the land; then three years more to get his pay! Thus, at the end of five years, he will be prepared (money in hand) to build the next ten miles.

According to this ratio of five successive years for each successive ten miles, it will take eight hundred and fifty years to make one thousand seven hundred and fifty miles of railroad! If (by a stretch of imagination) it should be said that he will, in a single year, build the first ten miles, and within the same year sell his land and get his pay, even then it will take one hundred and seventy years to build one thousand seven hundred miles of railroad.

An early reply will oblige, respectfully,

WILLIAM INGALLS,

E. H. DERRY,

J. C. DUNN,

P. F. DEGRAND,

O. D. ASHLEY,

Committee.

A short review of Mr. Whitney's plan makes it evident that the location of his road, and his scheme for its construction, present obstacles which cannot be overcome.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC ROUTE.

From this barren, frigid, and desolate picture, we turn with pleasure to the Southern Pacific route, where we find that nature has furnished every inducement, alike to the cupidity and the patriotism of man, to engage in the construction of this magnificent work—the greatest either of ancient or of modern times. Without designing, or even knowing the fact, "a divinity within" has "so shaped our ends," that we have already constructed fifteen hundred miles of this road, and the vast plain that stretches from the banks of the Mississippi to the shore of the Pacific, cries out to us in the language of Scripture, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" The political events which have successively given to us the territories of Louisiana, Texas, Utah, New Mexico, and California, seem now to have been providential acts whereby our national dominion has grasped the entire breadth of the continent, and planted our infant cities upon its western brink. The same events have possessed us of the Paso del Norte, that great natural breach in the otherwise impenetrable chain of the Rocky Mountains, and on either side spread out before us the grand plateaus that now invite our free and thriving millions to their rich and teeming bosoms, and furnish alike the ample means and the inexorable necessity of constructing the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad.

He was a prophet who declared that "Westward the star of empire takes its way." With the inexhaustible mines, the numerous and abundant agricultural productions, and the more genial climate of our Pacific possessions; with the unruffled surface of the vast Pacific—that great millennium of waters—spread out by nature to receive and secure the commerce of a world; with seven hundred millions of industrious, but comparatively feeble and inoffensive people on its opposite shore, and with a dependent race of people in Mexico and South America, what is to prevent our Pacific from rivaling our Atlantic coast in its population, its magnificent cities, its shipping, its commerce, its temples of worship, its academies of arts and sciences, and all that constitutes semi-national greatness?

With the facilities that will follow the completion of the railway, what people will dare dispute our empire upon the Northern and Southern Pacific oceans? Who will presume to say the fabled wealth of Ind is not ours?

If we have conquered the rolling tides of the tempestuous Atlantic, and grown rich by a limited commerce with a small portion of the two hundred millions of diplomatic and warlike beings that inhabit Europe, and make pecuniary gain their principal occupation, what profits may we not anticipate from our trade with the untutored Islanders of the mild Pacific, and the seven hundred millions of Asiatics, who have yet to learn the wiles of commercial diplomacy, and who will never compete with us for the mastery of the seas?

Where, then, is the objections to the construction of the road?

As a financial operation, it bids fair to rival the mines of California. As a commercial enterprise, it has no equal in magnitude, and can never be rivaled in its results.

As a national work, it will cement the mutual affections of our people, and bind together the union of our States by all the inducements that can excite a common interest, that can elevate national pride, and perpetuate national fame.

On some future occasion, when it may suit the convenience of the House, I will discuss the legal objections that have been raised against the donations of land to railways constructed by the States.

Mr. FREEMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 121, entitled "A bill granting the right of way and a portion of the public land, to the State of Arkansas, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in that State; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FREEMAN also, from the same committee, reported the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, viz:

"A bill granting the right of way and making a donation of public land, to the States of Mississippi and Louisiana, in aid of the construction of a railroad from the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, to Jackson, in the State of Mississippi;"

"A bill granting to the States of Illinois and Indiana the right of way and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lafayette, Indiana, via Middleport, Iroquois county, to La Salle county, in Illinois;" and

"A bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land, to the State of Louisiana, to aid in the construction of certain railroads."

Mr. MOORE. I ask the permission of the House to introduce an amendment to the last bill just reported, that it may be printed with the bill—an amendment giving the right of way only, to one of those railroads without any grant of lands, but not affecting the others.

No objection being made, such permission was granted.

Mr. POLK. I now renew my motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. There seems to be a desire of the House to take up the report of the Committee on Printing, and to dispose of it. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion for that purpose.

Mr. POLK. I withdraw my motion.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT—PUBLIC PRINTING.

The SPEAKER. The report of the Committee on Printing is in order. It is in the following words:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, fifty thousand copies of the mechanical part of the Patent Office Report, and three thousand additional copies for the use of the Commissioner of Patents.

The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] in connection with this subject, has moved the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the report be committed, and the Committee on Printing are hereby instructed to report to the House what, if any, arrangement has been made to have the public printing executed; and if any other than the public printer has been employed, to report what price they have agreed to pay, and that said committee be instructed to let out such printing as the present contractors cannot execute, to the lowest responsible bidder, after ten days' notice.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] has moved to amend the instructions by inserting after the word "Resolved," the words "by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled." When the House adjourned yesterday, the question immediately pending was the demand for the previous question.

I desire the ear of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] who proposed an amendment to the resolution, and also the attention of the House, for a single moment. Under the rules, in the opinion of the Chair, the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia, the object of which was to change the resolution of the House to a joint resolution of the two Houses, is not in order. If its character was thus changed to a joint resolution, it would have all the features of a bill about it, and under the rule which the Chair will read, the House will see at once that it is not in order.

The SPEAKER then read rule 114, as follows: "Every bill shall be introduced on the report of a committee, or by motion for leave. In the latter case, at least one day's notice shall be given of the motion in the House, or by filing a memorandum thereof with the Clerk, and having it entered on the Journal; and the motion shall be made, and the bill introduced, if leave is given, when resolutions are called for; such motion, or the bill when introduced, may be committed."

The Chair decides, therefore, that the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia, which is to change the character of the resolution by giving it the form of a joint resolution, is not in order.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order, founded upon two points; the first of which is, that the objection comes too late, because a motion has been entertained in the mean time for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Let us settle the first point. The Chair begs leave to read the following decision by his predecessor:

"Mr. W. R. W. COBB having called up the motion submitted by him on Tuesday last, viz.: to reconsider the vote by which the House on the previous day had refused to suspend the rules so as to enable the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] to present the memorial of the meeting of anti-slavery friends held at Newport, Indiana, on the subject of slavery and the repeal of the fugitive slave law—

"The SPEAKER stated, that when he permitted this motion to be entered on the Journal, he expressed doubts as to the propriety of entertaining it. Subsequent examination of the subject had confirmed him in the opinion that the motion to reconsider a vote upon a motion to suspend the rules was not in order; and he, therefore, ruled the said motion out of order. In this decision the House acquiesced."

That happened several days after the motion was submitted and entered upon the Journal. The Chair, therefore, overrules the first branch of the point of order.

Mr. BAYLY. The second I shall not press. It is a point of principle—the precise question which was decided yesterday as to its being a question of the propriety of the House to determine upon, and not a rule of order. I will not press the point. I attained my object in moving the objection, which was to exhibit, as far as I could, the absurdity of one House undertaking to instruct a committee in reference to a subject upon which its duties were defined by law. I take no appeal from, but acquiesce in, the decision of the Chair.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon the motion to recommit the report of the committee with instructions, and it was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 95, noes not counted.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. POLK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then put and carried in the affirmative. Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBARD in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the business before the committee, the consideration of House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and for other purposes. The Clerk will read the bill through.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Is it in order to move to suspend its reading?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be, as the reading has been suspended before in similar cases.

Mr. HARRIS. I then submit that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I think that it had better be read by sections.

Mr. MEACHAM. I object. Let the bill be read through.

The Clerk then read the original bill through, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every man or widow who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to enter, free of cost, one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body, in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the persons applying for the benefit of this act shall, upon application to the register of the land office in which he or she is about to make such entry, make an affidavit before the said register, that he or she is the head of a family, and is not the owner of any estate in land at the time of such application, and has not disposed of any estate in land to obtain the benefits of this act; and upon making the affidavit as above required, and filing the affidavit with the register, he or she shall thereupon be permitted to enter the quantity of land already specified: Provided, however, That no certificate shall be given, or patent issued therefor, until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry; and if, at the expiration of such time, the person making such entry, or if he be dead, his widow, or in case of her death, his heirs or devisee, or in case of a widow making such entry, her heirs or devisee, in case of her death, shall prove by two credible witnesses, that he, she, or they have continued to reside upon and cultivate said land, and still reside upon the same, and have not alienated the same, or any part thereof, then, in such case, he, she, or they shall be entitled to a patent as in other cases provided for by law.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the register of the land office shall note all such applications on the tract books and plats of his office; keep a register of all such entries, and make return to the General Land Office, together with the proof upon which they have been founded.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all land acquired under the provisions of this act, shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if, at any time after filing the affidavit as required in the second section of this act, and before the expiration of the five years aforesaid, it shall be proven by two or more respectable witnesses testifying upon oath, to the satisfaction of the register of the land office, that the person having filed such affidavit, shall have actually changed his or her residence, or abandoned the said entry for more than six months at any one time, then, and in that event, the land so entered shall revert back to the Government, and be disposed of as other public lands are now by law.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, be at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the natural born citizens of the United States.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That no individual shall be permitted to make more than one entry under the provisions of this act; and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby required to prepare and issue such rules and regulations consistent with this act, as shall be necessary and proper to carry its provisions into effect; and that the registers and receivers of the several land offices shall be entitled to receive the same compensation for any lands patented under the provisions of this act, that they are now entitled to receive when the same quantity of land is entered with money to be paid by the party to whom the patent shall be issued.

The first section of the bill was then again read with the view to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will announce the question before the committee. The Committee on Agriculture, to whom the bill was referred, reported it back to the House, with sundry propositions to amend. They propose to amend the first section of the bill by inserting after the word "States" the words "on the first day of January, 1852, who is not the owner of any land, nor worth the sum of $500, and who has not disposed of his or her land for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the provisions of this act;" and the question immediately pending is upon this amendment.

Mr. BEALE. I move to strike out the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment offered to the first section of the bill by the Committee on Agriculture, and the Chair is of the opinion, that until that amendment and other amendments to the first section are acted upon, the gentleman's motion will not be in order. It will be hereafter.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not in order, at the present time, to submit the motion to strike out the first section? It is in order, I am aware, to perfect the section before the vote is taken upon striking out.

The CHAIRMAN. There is pending an amendment to the first section reported by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I will suggest, for the purpose of getting rightly started upon this bill, that the committee reporting it have made some amendments to the bill, as it now stands. There is an amendment to be offered in lieu of the first section, in the event that the amendments of the committee are adopted or rejected. The question recurs first upon the section submitted in lieu of the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair. An amendment to the amendment of the committee is now in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I propose to submit an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BEALE] obtained the floor, and moved to strike out the first section of the bill. I insist it is in order to entertain that motion at this time. It is, to be sure, in order, before the vote can be taken, to perfect the first section. Gentlemen may offer as many amendments to the first section, before the vote is taken upon the motion to strike out, as they may deem proper. I insist that the gentleman's motion was in order, and that he is entitled to the floor to debate his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, independently of what has been stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] that there is now pending an amendment to strike out the first section, and to insert, in its stead, a substitute. It is the decision of the Chair that two questions to strike out the same matter cannot properly be before the committee at the same time. There is now also pending an amendment, reported by the Committee on Agriculture, to the original bill. When disposed of, other amendments, tending to the perfection of the first section of the bill, will be in order. An amendment has already been introduced to strike out the first section.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not an amendment proposing to strike out the whole bill after the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. There is pending an amendment to strike out the whole of the first section. There is also pending, the Chair believes, such an amendment as he states. The Chair will state, that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BEALE] rose in his place, and offered an amendment, which was ruled out of order. Then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAMPBELL] obtained the floor, and expressed his intention of moving an amendment, when the gentleman rose to a question of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to strike out the first section, and, in its stead, to insert what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment of the committee is now in order. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is of another character, and therefore is not in order.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana. I move to strike out, in the sixth and seventh lines, the words "nor worth the sum of $500."

I cannot, Mr. Chairman, see that any good reason whatever can be ascribed for the introduction of these words in this bill. This land, as I understand, belongs to the whole community—to the whole people of the United States. Why should it be, then, granted to those only who are not in the possession of $500 of real estate? There is, again, this other powerful objection against the insertion of that restriction. It throws out strong temptations to perjury; and you provide that land be given to the man who will swear that he is worth less than $500 worth of property. The man who holds in possession property to the value of $499 is entitled to the benefit of this measure, while the man holding real estate worth $501 is entirely excluded. Is it fair—is it proper to make this discrimination between a man owning property of a certain value, and another owning property worth two dollars more? The conscientious man would be fearful that he valued his property too low, while the designing man would take an oath, without any hesitation whatever, that he was worth less than $500, although he knew that he was worth more. The object to be accomplished, as I understand it, by this measure is to bring into cultivation our public domain. Now, I can very readily conceive that the greatest good will be derived from the cultivation of these lands by men who are worth a little over $500. Suppose, for instance, that a man worth $1,000 emigrated to the State of Louisiana, and settled upon a piece of land there in order to put it into cultivation, it would be necessary for his object to hire the services of others to assist him in clearing the land. Money would have to be invested in axes and other implements of labor. He would have to purchase hoes, plows, horses and cattle, to effect the cultivation of the land. When the land had been cultivated it would be necessary—for in our country we raise cotton—for him to expend money in the building of a gin-house. Under this bill this man, and all others worth more than $500, would be entirely cut off from availing themselves of the privilege granted to this bill. For what reason has this distinction been instituted? By striking out the words proposed to be stricken out by my amendment, the poor man will not be excluded—not at all. He will still be enabled to possess himself of the benefits of this homestead bill. He can still, by settling upon a quarter section of the public domain, and putting it into cultivation after five years' residence, possess himself of its title. Influenced by these reasons, I make the motion to strike out the words "worth more than $500."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If the Clerk will just read the substitute for the first section of the bill, I think it will set this question all right, and come up to the precise idea which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Moore] desires.

It was read, as follows:

That any person who is the head of a family and a native-born citizen of the United States, or any person who is the head of a family and had become a citizen prior to the first day of January, 1852, as required by the naturalization law of the United States, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to enter, free of cost, one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed.

I do not intend to be troublesome to the House, for I have but one great object, if I know myself, which I have to accomplish, and that is, the passage of this bill in a form acceptable to the country.

It will be seen that this section carries out the idea intended by the gentleman from Louisiana, and all that in relation, for instance, to the $500 restriction. We see that this section excludes the part objectionable to the gentleman from Louisiana, which requires the individual to come forward and make oath before making an entry, that he or she is not worth the sum of $500, and has not disposed of his or her land for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of this act. So far as I am concerned, I will take the section either way, with or without the restraint, but I believe the amendment offered in lieu of the first section of the bill, meets with the approbation of the majority of this House. I think so, at least, and if the House think proper to adopt that in lieu of the first section of the bill, I am inclined to think that the bill is in as acceptable shape as we, in all probability, shall get it. So far as some gentlemen have suggested in relation to foreigners, if I know myself, I repeat again, that my feelings are as kind to foreigners as those of any man. I will go as far as he who goes furthest, under proper circumstances, but I want, so far as the public lands are concerned—so far as an inducement is held out in the bill—to let the public lands rest precisely upon the same principle that they do now; neither to add to, nor diminish, the inducement, so far as foreigners are concerned, in regard to coming into this country. I want to leave that just as it is. This bill provides for all that are in the country, who were naturalized prior to the 1st January, 1852. It provides for all those here, who are not citizens but inhabitants of the States or Territories, upon condition that they will come forward and make a declaration of their intention to become citizens; and their title inures to the land provided they are naturalized and become citizens. This leaves the land standing as it did before, holding out precisely, and no more, the inducements which were held out before this bill shall have passed.

Now, I make one appeal to the friends and the foes of this bill. This is a naked, clean homestead proposition, which is intended to ameliorate and elevate the condition of our kind. I want to appeal to those who are opposed to it, and to those who are its friends, to desist upon this occasion from offering amendments. Let us withhold our amendments, and adopt this first section in the form most acceptable of the two proposed. The remainder of the bill is, I think, as perfect as we will be likely to make it. What will satisfy one, will not satisfy another. It is impossible for us to perfect this bill to the satisfaction of every member of this body. The Senate must do something. They will do something. And even if we were to make the bill perfect, going upon the ground that the Senate would do something, they would make it imperfect; and hence, if we leave it a little imperfect, we may take it for granted that the Senate will do something towards its perfection. Let us adopt, then, the amendment in lieu of the first section, and take the bill as it is. Let me appeal to the friends of the bill who have amendments to offer, to let them go over. We cannot all secure the adoption of our amendments. It is impossible for that to be accomplished. It is impossible that we can frame such a bill as will be acceptable to all. We cannot do as Minerva, in old times, who sprung from the brain of the Imperial Jove with a complete coat of armor. We cannot perfect a bill emanating from a committee—emanating from members of this House, that would be completely perfect in all its parts. Let us take the principle. Let us get the Government committed to this great policy, and the defects and imperfections of this bill will be cured hereafter. Shall we who are friendly to this bill, after this long struggle—after having routed the enemy, horse, foot, and dragoons; after having met them at all their strong points, demolished them in argument, and driven them from the field; shall we, from a contest among the friends of the measure, after this struggle, see, like the Dead Sea fruit, all our toils and labors turn to ashes upon our lips? I appeal to the friends and enemies of this bill to forbear. Let it have a fair test. Let it go to the country; and if it is wrong, let the country pass upon it.

Mr. SWEETSER. I wish the House to permit me, although it may be technically out of order, in a five minutes' speech, to reply to that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Johnson] has expired, but by the unanimous consent of the House, it will be competent for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sweetser] to proceed, and not otherwise.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"

Mr. SWEETSER. I will not occupy five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair—

Mr. SWEETSER. Does the Chair consider the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee as now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The gentleman from Ohio is in possession of the floor.

Mr. SWEETSER. Will the Chair indulge me a moment? The object I had in view was to reply to the gentleman's remarks which attack the amendment, and not the one which the gentleman from Louisiana made to the bill. He picked up his amendment of the 30th March, to which he directed his attention. My object is to reply to the points made upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be in order when the amendment comes up for consideration.

Mr. SWEETSER. I do not wish to be out of order.

Mr. CARTTER. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana proposes to amend the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture, by striking out the words "nor worth the sum of $500."

The question was then taken, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BEALE. I propose to amend the amendment by striking out "$500," and inserting "$1."

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have just voted to strike out those words.

Mr. BEALE. I move to strike out the words "1852," and in their place to substitute "1853." Is that in order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Mr. BEALE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to give my opinion on this bill particularly, because it involves vital political principles that are about to be disregarded. I can take but a limited view of this subject in the brief time allowed me. In this debate, the finger of scorn has been pointed to a certain class of politicians who have been denominated Abstractionists. Mr. Madison, in his report of 1799, setting out the true theory of Federal powers, and Mr. Jefferson, in carrying out this theory in the practical application of our affairs during his administration, are the prominent offenders of this class, and to those who would direct its action to the accomplishment of selfish and sectional purposes. I belong to the school of 1799. If the plain construction of the Constitution in the early and best days of the Republic is right and true, this bill is in violation of such opinions and the practices growing out of them. No one doubts the just power of this Government to raise money. But any one at all conversant with constitutional law, ought also to know that this power does not carry with it an unlimited discretion in the use and application of money. The objects to which Congress may make a just application of money, or of public property, are limited by the specific grants contained in the Constitution, or to such other incidental powers only as are necessary and proper to carry those grants into execution. This may all have been done in error. It is barely possible that Congress ought to have had the power to suppress the liberty of speech and of the press, to have established a religion, &c., &c. But the facts are otherwise. This Government is derivative in its character, and has no beneficiary powers. That has been reserved to the States and to the domestic circle untrammelled, as it should be. The people and the States, in the fundamental law, have chosen to intrust to you that class of power by which, and by which only, you may work out the public good. Can any one point out such grants of power in the Constitution, or such incidents, as would characterize this bill as a necessary mode of procuring the public good in conformity to the fundamental law? It is scarcely pretended. It is spoken of as an act of supreme beneficence—our feelings of kindness and humanity are appealed to—it is based merely upon the old, and I had hoped the exploded, doctrine of Federalism, that we are neither bound by the will of our constituents nor constitutional limitations, but may legislate at will for the public welfare. I would ask Democrats—who will forgive this repetition—have you any means of promoting the public welfare, except you confine your legislation within the pale of the Constitution? Have not the people and the States chosen to limit your action by the primordial law? If this is not so—if this conclusion is an abstraction, where, I ask, but in your own will and pleasure, is the limitation to the most wild, experimental, and chimerical projects of legislation? Will gentlemen be so good as to point out what project may not be undertaken and, therefore, justified, because of the reason that it admits of the application of money, or is characterized by a lofty beneficence? You have, therefore, no constitutional power to pass this bill.

You are also restricted in the passage of this bill by solemn compact. When Virginia and other States ceded a large amount of those lands, it was upon the clear and well-known conditions that they were to be used for the express purpose of paying the debts and defraying the general charges and expenditures of this Government. Did you not accept them upon those terms, and, having so accepted them, are you not bound, in good faith, to keep holy and untouched the terms of the contract? But some say, in answer to this view, "Virginia was a party to the contract of the Constitution of 1789, and by her consent placed the public lands at the disposal of this Government." The disposal of those lands had been placed there before—there was no change expressed or contemplated in the transfer to the new Government. In proof of the assertion, there was no change in the action of the Government in this relation for many years of the good time of the Republic. Those lands acquired by purchase, as well as by donation, were used for the purposes set out in the cession act of 1784. You have, therefore, the construction the Government itself put upon this matter for the last forty years. We have had advancement in Government affairs, but no revolution that would abrogate previously-existing contracts in relation to pecuniary matters. But suppose we had, what is the practice of nations in our own times in regard to this matter? Did not Louis Philippe pay to the United States twenty-five millions of francs for captures made of American property under the Imperial Government of France after several revolutions? Shall our Government feel itself less bound to observe its pecuniary contracts, especially when it is remembered that this cession of lands by the States at the period when made removed existing impediments, and greatly contributed to the formation of the Union? Do not tell me of precedents in the bestowal of the public lands heretofore; they were acts of a generous and unthinking beneficence to our own people struggling with the difficulties of settlement in a new country, without a cautious reference to your legitimate power. You may, for the effect it would have upon my judgment, as well refer to the precedents of legislation violative of the rights of speech and the liberty of the press of a former period. I disregard legislative precedent when opposed to what I esteem as fundamental political truth. The very act, however, which you are about to perpetrate will probably be heralded as a precedent hereafter to weaken the force of constitutional obligation, and to break up this noble fabric of constitution and law into a convenient machinery to advance sectional and party interest, or to manage more efficiently a presidential election.

The sole argument made use of in this debate to sustain the constitutionality of this measure, is the mere assertion that the prominent object of the Government in the acquisition of new territory, was to its settlement. That settlement was a consequence foreseen; that it was an element entering into and controlling, to some extent, the idea of its value, is true; that its cultivation, including the building up of towns and cities, with a wide-spread civilization, was anticipated, is probable, and formed, if you choose, a laudable motive for action. But are we not brought back to the inquiry, Does the object to be attained justify you in this description of means for its accomplishment? And does not the history of both the transfer and acquisition by purchase of those lands, give a very different, but the true view of the object intended by the Government? The Conventional Government required of the States the donations that were made. Could, I ask, the Convention which formed the Constitution, have intended to violate the terms of the contract so recently made with the States? Were not those transfers made for the purpose of obtaining money for the uses of the Central Government at a period of great financial difficulty? And were not those acquired by purchase used and disposed of for the identical purposes, to wit, to pay the debt and defray the general charges and expenditures of the Government?

If this is fancy and not fact, why, then, you can not only give them away, as you now contemplate, but you can also hire men out of the moneys of the Treasury, both to settle and to cultivate those lands; which is not pretended. The argument based upon settlement proves too much, and therefore is fallacious.

But suppose those barriers to the passage of this bill were removed, then is it wise and prudent? Is it in conformity to the plan of our ancestors to advance the best interests of man? Is not the scheme of protecting the life, liberty, and property of men sufficient of itself? Let the successful advancement in this country of all that constitutes national greatness and individual happiness, answer this question. Can gentlemen show an instance in the long history of our race, when governmental bounties were ever bestowed, except in the most corrupt times, and for most corrupt purposes? Bounties and despotism are near of kin to each other. Your system of pensions, running into sinecures on the one hand, and of flogging and ball-chaining in the Navy on the other, are weak imitations of European policy, that are hostile alike to the genius of our institutions and the sentiments of our people. Let us keep clear of both. Let us leave men to pursue their own good in their own way. God has implanted in the heart of man a self-love that impels him with sufficient speed, and needs not governmental propulsion. Let us make clear his way, and take care only that he does not run foul of the rights of others. This is as much, and perhaps more than government has ever effected anywhere or at any time. Beware of bounties. It destroys that energy of character and intrepid perseverance which has spread a high civilization from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean, and which the drones of gifts and benevolences could never have effected.

What Democrat can go for this bill, when the argument in its support assumes as a government duty to interfere and direct the labor, skill, and capital, by holding the temptation of bounties to a free people, and controlling labor by legislative bribe? Men manage their own affairs better than government can do it for them. To be let alone is in most instances a great blessing of political liberty. The peculiar condition of things in this country will, by the law of demand and supply, direct the labor and pursuits of community.

Will you, at the expense of the rights of the sovereignty and dignity of the State governments, induce the people of the United States to look up to this Federal Government as the only and sole dispensers of gifts and of bounties—indeed, the great beneficiary of the people, to the discredit and disrepute of their State governments, who have less means to bribe with so lavish a hand.

Again, as the public lands belong to all the people of the United States, does not your bill violate all ideas of equality, and therefore of justice, in bestowing it in such a manner that its benefits will only accrue to a part of the people?

Have you not, by the act of 1846, pledged the moneys arising from the sale of the public lands for the redemption of the principal and payment of the interest of some $40,000,000 expended in prosecuting the Mexican war? and does not this bill, if it pass into law, violate that solemn and voluntary pledge, so recently made?

Suppose so improbable a suggestion as that the Representatives of the manufacturing States should favor the passage of this bill for the reason, that if you withhold the means by which money will be placed into the public Treasury for the sale of the public lands, you thereby induce the necessity in case of emergency of causing an increase of duty on foreign importations by which the interest of your own peculiar labor is advanced. But suppose this effect were to follow, will it not operate in another point of view greatly to your injury? Why are the people of the Northeast engaged in manufactures? Because they occupy a sterile soil, a rigid climate, a dense population, cheap labor, and have acquired an excess of capital. Why are those of the South, the Southwest, and the Northwest consumers of the products of your ingenuity? For causes precisely the reverse—a rich virgin soil, a bland and genial climate, a sparse population, high price of labor, with less pecuniary means. Do you not hasten a condition of things in the West that will change the relations at present existing, much to your disadvantage? How long will the people of the West pay transportation and profits on articles that they will make then as cheaply as you do now?

A strong objection may be made to this bill from its pecuniary consequences. When those lands are given away, no dollar can come into your Treasury from that source. You will then have to look to other means of revenue to sustain the costs of the system incurred by surveys, registers' offices, General Land Office at this place, together with the payment of Indian annuities already amounting to many millions incident to the purchase of those lands.

Gentlemen may think it patriotic if they advance the interest of their particular State or district. This may be so. But to have a regard to equality of rights, to justice, to constitutional obligation, constitutes, in my opinion, a much better, and the American definition of that term.

Mr. SWEETSER. Mr. Chairman, my object in rising is not to speak to the pro forma amendment of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, but to reply to the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I am at issue with him, and with his amendment to the original bill, which was submitted to the House on the 30th March last, the principles of which amendment he has made the subject of his remarks this day.

That amendment limits the benefits of this measure to native citizens, and to foreigners who are residents and citizens of the United States on the 1st day of January, 1852.

Now, sir, I am opposed to any such limitation. I am in favor of extending this bounty of the Government to the landless, now residents of the United States, irrespective of any limitation as to the place or time of their birth. I do not wish to be misunderstood in relation to this matter. I am in favor of the bill and the principles it involves, in the most liberal sense; and do not wish to see any invidious distinctions made between native born, or naturalized citizens. Nor do I wish to confine its provisions to the present inhabitants of this country. It is said if we extend its benefits to the future, it will be an invitation to the landless of Europe—be it so. I desire that the whole world may know and appreciate the munificence of this Government; and that its policy proclaims an invitation to the downtrodden and famished Irishman, the prudent and enterprising Dutchman, and the landless and destitute of all countries. That the United States of America has enough and to spare, and that "giving doth not impoverish, or withholding enrich." We have territory enough for all that will seek our shores and become tillers of the soil. Our object is to bring our vacant lands into cultivation, and to develop our resources. We want for that purpose strong arms and patriotic hearts, and we care not from what country they come, or at what period they arrive, if they come with the intention of making our happy country their home, and cast their lot among us, and are willing to take up their abode on our Western frontier—make their declaration of intention to become citizens of the United States. Let them enter and take possession; and after an occupancy of five years, and when they shall have perfected their intention, by becoming citizens in conformity to law, they shall have my vote, and the aid of my voice, to extend to them the benefits of this bill.

Sir, I regret that my liberal and honorable friend should have seen fit to offer an amendment, and to lend his aid to a proposition that will mar the beauty and throw a shade over this great measure. The honorable gentleman will recollect that, in all our contests, when we call for volunteers, (as was the case in the late Mexican war,) the foreigners upon our shores, aliens and citizens, volunteered and shed their blood for the honor of our flag on every battle-field in Mexico. Many a gallant spirit, who has manifested his attachment for our Government by fighting under our flag, has a brother, perhaps a father, who has been induced to seek out our country for his future home, by the inducements held out in this bill, and may be now on the billow, with all he possesses, and all that is dear to him, stimulated by the provisions of this bill.

Sir, since this measure has been mooted in Congress, and sustained by an enlightened expression of public opinion, the conviction has been fixed upon the country that our public domain must be surrendered to the actual settlers—to the man who would clear up the wilderness, defend the frontier, and submit to deprivation, disease, and death, for the benefit of a coming generation, because such has been, and will always be, the fate of the pioneer. Sir, the object of the Government is to discharge the trust, and to so dispose of the public domain that the whole people will be fairly dealt by, and that the lands may be brought into cultivation, the resources of the country developed, and the improved lands share the burdens of Government by taxation.

That object being accomplished, will an enlightened statesman ever inquire whether this mighty work has been accomplished by a native-born citizen, or a foreigner, or at what period the foreigner emigrated? I think not.

I confess that my desires are to extend the blessings that will result from this measure to the whole race.

Yet I shall content myself with any and all the amendments which the committee may make to the bill. If I cannot embrace all, I will not picture to the committee the spectacle of a brother or father, of a fortunate man, who emigrated in time to be a recipient—who may settle down beside a more fortunate relation, and pay $1 25 for their lands. Such a picture would not be gratifying to the honorable gentleman who advocates this amendment, and whose heart is so warm in favor of the great principles involved. It has been my good fortune hitherto to agree with him.

The question was taken upon Mr. BEALE's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I would ask now, if an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not now in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I move to amend the first section by striking out the word "citizen," and inserting the word "resident."

The CHAIRMAN. That is an amendment to the original section, and is not in order until the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I supposed that the amendment had been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the committee has not yet been voted upon.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to strike out the words "native born" in the second line, and the remainder in that line after the word "States," and then the third, fourth, and fifth lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not now in order.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. Will it be in order to move to strike out the entire original bill, and offer a substitute for it?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. BROWN. What is the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Is it in order to say a word in opposition to that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. STEVENS. There has been no speech made upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not an amendment offered since the committee went into session, and therefore not debatable under the five-minute rule.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out the whole amendment proposed by the committee which reported the bill.

Mr. STUART. That is the pending amendment. A motion to strike that out cannot be in order as an amendment to an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is equivalent to a question upon the original amendment, and is not therefore in order.

Mr. STEVENS. I would modify the amendment if I am entitled to the floor. I move to strike out after the word "fifty-two." I understand it has been amended on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. MOORE,] by striking out the five-hundred-dollar qualification. I know no reason why a man who owns a farm in one of the old States, and sells it for the very purpose of improving his condition in a new State, and takes the proceeds of his labor with him, should not be allowed the benefits of this bill precisely the same as a man who sells his personal property. I can see no reason in it. If a man chooses to remove from one of the old States into a new State and settle there, let him sell his own land in the old State; let him go and improve this land. As was well said by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. MOORE,] the great object is to have the land cultivated, and it is not desirable that it should be cultivated by poor men altogether.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to ask my friend if he would not become landless after he has sold it?

Mr. STEVENS. But there is a provision that a man who has sold his land for the purpose of going there shall not be entitled. I wish to strike that out. Let him sell his lands for the purpose of emigrating to that country. Let him take the proceeds of it. Let him lay out his money in that country, and improve the land. It would be a very unhappy condition in society if that country was to be settled altogether by paupers—by men who had no means. I do not wish to enlarge upon the subject. I make the suggestion because it is in accordance with the spirit of the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. MOORE,] which, I think, was a very proper one.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. By the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr.

STEVENS,] I will make a single remark. The idea which he wishes incorporated in the first section is clearly embraced in the substitute which I have proposed for the first section of the bill. It strikes out all in regard to the selling of property.

Mr. STEVENS. What I understand is, that we are first to amend this, and if we cannot get it right, then we will take the vote upon the amendment, and after we have taken the vote upon his we can amend no further. I modify my amendment by striking out all after the words "who is not the owner of land," the balance of the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture, as follows:

"And who has not disposed of his or her land for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the provision of this act."

Mr. McMULLIN. I understand the object of the amendment of the gentleman over the way, is to allow those persons to sell their land and emigrate to the West, so as to become the beneficiaries of this law. I hope it will not be the pleasure of the House to adopt that amendment. A gentleman upon my right says: suppose the man sells fifty acres? There is a general provision in this bill which provides that persons must not be worth five hundred dollars who avail themselves of the benefits of this law.

A VOICE. That has been stricken out.

Mr. McMULLIN. That, I understand, has been stricken out. The committee, then, has thwarted one of the objects of the committee who reported this bill. I beg gentlemen to remember that if you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] and allow persons to sell their lands so as to accept the benefits of this law, you will defeat one of the great objects of the friends of the bill. A man may go further, and sell $50,000 worth of land. It is the purpose, as I understand, of the friends of this bill to allow only such persons to receive at the hands of the Government one hundred and sixty acres of land, as are unable to purchase homes from the Government.

Mr. AVERETT. I wish to know of my colleague whether he contends that this Government is to deny to a man owning land an equality of rights with other citizens, simply because he owns land?

Mr. McMULLIN resumed: I do not mean to discuss the question of equality with him. My colleague discussed that question the other day, and he is too intelligent not to know that one half of the laws passed by Congress are not equal. It is contrary to the legislation of your country that all law shall operate equally and alike. Does not my colleague know—does not every member of this House know, that one half of the laws which we pass do operate unequally and unjust? I say here in my place, as one of the friends of this bill, that if we go on and allow amendment after amendment, you may make this bill so objectionable, that its friends will be compelled to vote against it. I do hope that those gentlemen who, in good faith, choose to vote for this bill, will not allow this amendment to prevail. I repeat again, if this provision is stricken out, I shall be compelled to vote against the bill. I will not allow myself to give one hundred and sixty acres of land to an individual who has the means to purchase a home from the Government. The object of this bill is to be charitable to the poor. The rich men of the country have advantages enough now in the ordinary legislation of the country; and here they are coming forward again to amend this bill so as to allow them to be benefited still further. I trust that the gentleman over the way [Mr. STEVENS] will withdraw his amendment. If he will not, I appeal to gentlemen on each side of the House, who are disposed to go for this bill, and pass it in good faith, to vote it down; and I beg gentlemen, who are the friends of this bill, to remember furthermore, that every gentleman who intends to vote against the bill, will vote for every amendment presented, so as to make the bill as objectionable as possible. I beg gentlemen to be on their guard. I know enough of this sort of legislation not to know that the enemies of the bill will resort to every possible legislative strategy to defeat it by indirection.

Mr. STUART. If the gentleman from Virginia will allow me to say, I deem it the most important thing for the States in which these lands lie, as connected with the whole subject of this bill, to strike out this limitation, so that the very best population may come into the States, of which the character of the measure is susceptible.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope my friend will pardon me, but my time is short. I beg gentlemen to remember that there are but few members from the old States who are going to vote for this bill, and that those of us who represent the old States must look to our own interests—

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon Mr. STEVENS's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. SACKETT. Is an amendment in order which would strike out the whole amendment offered by the Committee on Public Lands, and also a part of the original sections? I desire to offer an amendment which embraces a small portion of the original section and the entire amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending, the Chair believes, reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SACKETT. From the Committee on Agriculture, then.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, an amendment is only admissible which applies to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SACKETT. I will state my amendment, that the Chair may see precisely what I wish to embrace. I wish to strike out all after the word "every," in the original section, to and including the word "shall," which would comprehend the entire amendment proposed to be inserted by the Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not be in order until the committee have acted upon the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SACKETT. That is an amendment which I desire to submit at some proper time.

Mr. PARKER. I move further to amend the amendment by striking out the words "who is not the owner of any land."

I think if the committee will direct their attention to that matter for one moment, they will see that it ought to be done. I regard it as very important. I wish to direct the attention of the committee to this fact, that there are frequently large families, who, upon the decease of the head of the family, have the real estate divided out amongst them. That real estate becomes actually invested in them—in each member of the family of some ten or twelve. It is cut up into small parcels, and each member of the family probably will not own an amount exceeding fifty or one hundred dollars' worth of the old homestead. If this feature of the bill is retained, it will debar all the members of that family who may be heads of families from acquiring any advantages by virtue of this bill until they have sold the little estate they have in land. They cannot avail themselves of it until that is done. It is possible they might meet with a purchaser and thus obviate the difficulty, but that could not always be, and they would thus have inducement to sacrifice the little estate they may have for the purpose of acquiring new. I think, however, it is wrong in principle, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has already indicated. You do not wish to make these Western States an asylum for the poor alone. As the bill now stands a man may own a million of dollars of personal estate, but if he have one hundred dollars of real estate he cannot avail himself of the benefits of this measure. I did not rise to consume any length of time.

Mr. BEALE made a few remarks in opposition to the amendment, which will be found incorporated in his previous speech.

The question was then taken on Mr. PARKER's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. SACKETT. I propose to strike out the words, "and who has not disposed of his or her land for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Those words have already been stricken out.

Mr. SACKETT. Then I would inquire of the Chair whether the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture has been so disposed of that an amendment to it is now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. A part of the amendment yet remains to be acted on.

Mr. SACKETT. Then I move to strike out the words, "on the first day of January, 1852."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that that amendment is not in order, because it is equivalent to a vote on the adoption of the amendment. The question now pending is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SACKETT. Then I move, as a pro forma amendment, to strike out "59," and insert "54."

I hope the committee will indulge me in a little latitude of remark upon this very limited amendment. My object in offering it is to say a few words on the subject of the classification, or rather the limitation of the citizens to whom the bounties of this bill are to apply. I think that all these limitations should be stricken out.

Now, if I understand the objects of this bill, one of the great and important objects to be obtained by it is, that the public lands may become settled, occupied, and cultivated; and that the consequences to the Government, to grow out of the bill, are consequences to arise from the settlement and cultivation of the public lands. If that be so, clearly there should be no distinction as to who should have the right of enjoying the bounties provided by this bill.

Now, this bill is not solely intended as a gratuity. If it is intended as a gratuity, why, then, the bounty is only provided for a certain class of citizens. This is wrong in principle. But gratuity is not the great foundation on which the bill stands. It is a bill, according to its title, for the settlement of the public lands, to promote agriculture, to promote commerce, to promote manufactures—in other words, to promote the general interests of the country. The benefits offered by it are indeed of immense consequence to the people; but that is not the sole principle on which it stands. If this be so, what propriety is there in saying that any one particular citizen or class of citizens shall be the beneficiaries under the law, or instrumentality through which this benefit shall arise to the Government? If benefit is to arise to the Government, it will arise from the occupation of the land by one citizen as well as by another. I intend, at the proper time, to move to strike out all that part of the bill that provides for this limitation, so that the section will read, that every citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, shall be entitled to the benefits of the law. If we are to act upon the principle which the particular friends of this bill say it is based upon, I can see no propriety in the distinction provided, that limits its benefits to heads of families, and cuts off every young man in the country. I believe in the soundness of the principle which I have stated. I am in favor of the passage of a bill based upon such a principle; I believe it will promote agriculture; I believe it will promote commerce; I believe it will advance the general interest of the community. I am in favor of the principle of the measure, but let the nation at large, and all the citizens at large, have the benefit of the provisions of the bill.

I will not now undertake to say what my views may be, in regard to the details of this particular bill. But in regard to this section, I wish to state that, at the proper time, I shall move an amendment to give each citizen, after he has attained the age of twenty-one years, the benefit of the provisions of this bill.

I am also in favor of securing its provisions to such adopted citizens and foreigners who are permanent residents here, as may wish to avail themselves of it—I have no fear of the influence of farmers, cultivators of the soil, whether born in this or a foreign country.

Mr. HOWARD. I am opposed to the amendment, for the reason that it enlarges the operation of the bill. We are told that the object of this bill is to provide, gratuitously, homes for the poor. Now, I wish to know under what provision of the Constitution we have a right to establish charities within the States, or elsewhere? Have we a right to give away the public treasure for the purpose of establishing charitable institutions in any State? And if we have no right to give away the public money, by what species of reasoning do you arrive at the conclusion that we have a right to give away the public lands, or any other public property, to create a great national alms-house for the benefit of the people of this country? Sir, it strikes me that there is no sound distinction, and that none can be drawn between the public lands and other public property, in the power to give away. We have no right to give away the public money or the public property for these objects. It does not come within any of the provisions of the Constitution which clothe us with Federal power.

But, if it were constitutional, where is this thing to stop? This year you give to the poor men the public lands. Next year, the men who live in the cities will come and say, "You have given away our public property, you have given away the common property, in which we are all interested—"

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order. The five-minute rule requires that the speakers shall confine themselves to speaking in favor of, or in opposition to, the pending amendment, and not go into the merits of the bill at large.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the rule requires gentlemen to confine themselves to the discussion of the amendment before the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. I am doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to say that he does not think the gentleman from Texas is wandering from the question now before the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. I am confining myself to the merits of the amendment, which enlarges the operation of the bill.

Well, sir, what is to be the result of this thing? Why, next year the men who are not land-owners—the manufacturers, the mechanics, and artisans—will come and say, "You have given away the public lands in which we were jointly interested; we do not understand farming; we cannot avail ourselves of this law; but inasmuch as you have given away our property, now make us equal by giving us money with which to buy bread, and fuel, and raiment." And how can you answer them? Sir, in my humble estimation, is a wilder scheme of socialism than the French socialist ever dreamed of in his wildest visions. What did he ask for? All he ever asked was, that the Government should furnish him employment by which he could earn the means of procuring food and raiment. But now you come and say that you will buy lands and actually give a farm and a home to every man in the country who is not worth a certain amount, or, rather, to every man, no matter how much he may be worth—for I believe the limitation has been stricken out. Sir, where is all this thing to stop? What is to be the end of it? When once you embark in this system of national largess—of federal donation, there will be no end to the evils of it. One partition of lands will be followed by another, and the gift of land by that of money and food.

Sir, it is one of the signs of the times not the least significant, that almost all the candidates for the Presidency—"old fogies" and all—have declared themselves in favor of some provision of this sort. And how long will it be, if you embark in this system, before the presidential office will be put up at auction to the candidate who will promise the largest donations to the landless in the shape of homes and farms?

I believe that this measure, if it prevails, is one fraught with infinite mischief, and that it will have precisely the opposite effect from that which is contemplated by the distinguished gentleman who introduced it, and whose motives in this matter I know are good. I have lived on the frontier long enough to see the operation of all such measures as this. Wherever you give away property, the possessor of that property, who acquires it for nothing, esteems it at little or no value, and is willing to transfer it for a very moderate compensation. The natural result of this measure will be to throw the public domain into the hands of a few monopolists, and to place it beyond the reach of the honest cultivator, who desires a home for himself and his family. This has uniformly been the effect of holding lands at so cheap a rate as to induce large investments of capital in its purchase.

The question being upon Mr. SACKETT's amendment, to strike out "two" and insert "four"—

Mr. SACKETT, by unanimous consent, withdrew it.

Mr. STANLY. Is it in order to amend that section?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the vote is taken upon the amendment offered by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to amend the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not now in order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. But is not an amendment now in order to this section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state that an amendment is not in order until the vote has been taken upon the amendment proposed by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to the section, to come in in the eleventh line.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order until the vote has been taken upon the pending amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is the very amendment which I wish to amend. I wish to offer an amendment to that amendment, to come in in the eleventh line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must again inform the gentleman that the part proposed to be amended by him is not the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture, but a part of the original section; and it is not, therefore, in order.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by the Committee on Agriculture; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I ask now, if an amendment is in order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] which I understand is now before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendment to the original action, it will be in order.

Mr. SACKETT. I have an amendment to offer to the original section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the original section. I move to strike out the word "citizen," and insert the word "resident."

Mr. Chairman, this is the substance of an amendment which I did intend to offer to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I am aware that amendments are frequently resorted to by the enemies of a measure, for the purpose of securing its rejection. But, sir, in offering the principle which my amendment is intended to assert, I apprehend that I am in no danger of rendering myself obnoxious to any such charge; because, I yield to no man upon this floor, in sincerity and zeal, for the legislative assertion of the great principle contained in this bill. Indeed I feel a little of remorse that I did not avail myself of the sixty minute instead of the five minute rule, to which I am now confined, for the purpose of giving utterance to my views upon this great question; not that I have the vanity to suppose that I could add anything new to that which has already been so eloquently, so strongly, so fervently, and so argumentatively urged by the several distinguished gentlemen who have participated in this discussion, and in doing so, an earnest expectation which very many of my constituents had just reason to entertain would have been realized, and another voice, feeble as it is, would have been heard in this Hall, in vindication of the rights of oppressed labor.

The amendment which I propose, relieves the bill of what I conceive to be an odious distinction, and an unjust restriction. Instead of confining the benefits of the measure to the native-born citizen, or natural citizen, it gives it a wider range, and allows all those who are hereafter to come to this country with the intention of making it their residence—of making it their homes. I desire that when they shall come here and declare their intention, under the laws of the United States, to become naturalized citizens of this Republic; they shall be placed upon an equal footing with those of their countrymen more fortunate than themselves, and who, by this bill, are made participants in all the benefits and all the privileges which it is intended to confer.

If I correctly comprehend the principle upon which this whole measure rests, it is not, as it has been represented to be, an actual gift of a hundred and sixty acres of the public domain to all who are willing to receive it, but it is a sale made by the Government to the citizen for a valuable consideration, indeed a more valuable consideration than $1 25 per acre. The settler, under the provisions of this bill, instead of paying for the land in gold and silver, pays for it with the labor of his own hands; this is the only difference. Under our present system, the foreigner can purchase with money as much land as he may see fit. By what rule, then, would you exclude the same class of people from paying for one hundred and sixty acres with his labor instead of dollars and cents? If the danger consists in allowing foreigners to hold real estate in this country before they have become naturalized citizens, the objection is as forcible in the one case as in the other; nay, more so, because when a foreigner pays with his money for the land he purchases from the Government, he feels under no particular obligations to the Government; but when he will receive under the generous and humane provisions of this bill, he will feel inspired with sentiments of the profoundest gratitude to the Government of his adoption. I do not belong to that class that tremble and grow pale whenever they hear of a foreigner landing on our shores lest he bring with him the elements of destruction and disunion. Much less am I disposed to encourage that still narrower prejudice which we too frequently heard urged against our foreign population—I mean that which relates to their religious faith. I for one, sir, say, let them come, and bring their religion along with them; I would not have them without it. While the genius of religious toleration has an abiding place in the country of Washington, the oppressed and persecuted of all lands will find a vine and a fig-tree, under which they can worship their Creator according to the dictates of their own conscience, and there will be none found to molest them or make them afraid. But, sir, if there is any class I would exclude from all participation in the benefits of this bill, it would be those who say in their hearts, "there is no God."

One of the greatest, and indeed the main object which this bill is intended to achieve, is the settlement, cultivation, and productive improvement of the public lands; and what difference does it make whether this great end be attained by native or foreign sinews? Without labor, of what value is your vast public domain? If your hills were gold, and your valleys silver, the earth would not be one grain of wheat the richer. There is no real wealth, except the labor of man. I am for that policy, sir, that will throw open our vast and almost boundless prairies to the hardy sons of toil, no matter from what country they may come. That which was intended for all, the few have no right to appropriate to their own exclusive benefit, while downtrodden millions starve in the garrets of Europe, and cry from its caverns that they, too, were created heirs of the earth, and claim its division. This, by some, may be called agrarian in its tendency; but, sir, if to advocate a policy which will feed the hungry, clothe the naked, reform the depraved, and give stability and permanency to honest labor, then, sir, from my place here, on the floor of the American Congress, I proclaim myself to be—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALL. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CAMPBELL.] I think we ought to confine the benefits of this bill to the citizens of the United States. I am willing, however, to include those who have come to the country, and become citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intentions to become citizens hereafter.

My object in rising, however, is to notice a remark made by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD,] a remark which, I must confess, I was a little astonished to hear coming from that quarter. If I understand the drift of the gentleman's argument, it is to declare the power asserted by this bill as unconstitutional. Now, I have heard this argument urged from other sources, but it does seem to me, with all due respect to the gentleman who offered it, that it is as baseless as any argument I have heard offered.

For what purpose does the Government of the United States acquire territory? Is it for the purpose of speculation? Is it for the purpose of bringing money into the Treasury of the United States? No, sir; it is for the purpose of extending our population over it. That was the only purpose for which Louisiana was purchased. It was the great purpose for which Virginia ceded her lands.

Mr. AVERETT, (interrupting,) here made a remark which was inaudible to the Reporter.

Mr. HALL, (continuing,) I have only five minutes, and cannot yield to the gentleman.

Now, I say, every gentleman must know that was the great argument, and it is the only argument ever urged in favor of the acquisition of territory by this Government. It is to cover it with population, and not for the purpose of speculation. Now, sir, if we acquire territory for this purpose, have we not the right to adopt the means which in our judgment will most effectually secure that object? The Constitution gives you no right to buy muskets. Where, then, do you get the right? Why, the right comes from the fact that they are incident to your Army. Your Army would be useless without arms in their hands. The Constitution of the United States nowhere says you have the right to provide your Army with powder and ball; and where do you get the right? You get it from the fact that they are necessary to the efficiency of your Army and Navy. There is where you get it. But when you acquire territory, you do it for the purpose of covering it with population; and for the purpose of securing the great object of that acquisition, you have the right to adopt the means which you deem the best to secure a population for that territory.

But the gentleman says it is contrary to the practice of the Government. I can tell the gentleman that if he will examine the history of the country he will find that it will go but a very little way to confirm his—as they seem to me—very narrow and contracted notions of public policy. He will find that the policy of granting land to actual settlers originated as early as the days of George Washington. There is where he will find it.

But the gentleman from Texas says that if you adopt this policy to-day, and give the land to actual settlers to-morrow, you will have to give money to those who do not go upon the public lands. Now, I ask the gentleman from Texas if that is the fact in his own State? The laws of Texas, I believe, grant lands to actual settlers. If I understand them, every man who goes into the State and settles upon Texas lands, is entitled to a certain quantity of lands, upon the condition of occupancy.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, that has been repealed.

Mr. HALL. Well, it was the law formerly, and I ask the gentleman if the grants of lands made under the provisions of that law induced the citizens of Texas who were not recipients to come and ask for gratuities out of the public treasury of that State? We give pensions to men who have been wounded in the service of the country; yet does it follow that you must give a gratuity to a person who has never served in the Army or Navy? But it is proposed to confine the benefits of this provision to the citizens of the United States. Now, if an individual comes hereafter to this country, he may claim, that in justice, you ought to give him a quarter section of land.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon Mr. CAMPBELL's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. EVANS. Is it in order to move to strike out the whole section?

The CHAIRMAN. Not in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire to offer an amendment to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EVANS. I shall not submit any motion unless I can move to strike out the whole section.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out in the third line, the words "who is the head of a family."

Mr. Chairman, we have been making amendments, and striking out parts of sections, for the purpose of preventing invidious distinctions being made. Now, as I am in favor of that object being carried out, I wish to make this amendment. I wish to strike out these words, because they make a distinction against a very respectable portion of our fellow-citizens, and very honorable, some of whom are upon this floor. I should dislike very much that one of my colleagues [Mr. STEVENS] should be prohibited from entering upon the public lands, and appropriating one hundred and sixty acres to himself, or that the worthy gentleman from Tennessee, across the way, [Mr. JONES,] or the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] who has just taken his seat, should be prohibited from appropriating one hundred and sixty acres of the public domain. I wish that they may have the same privilege that we have, who are heads of families. It is wrong to make such a distinction. I hope, further, that if this amendment I have proposed shall be adopted, some of the gallant gentlemen who occupy the positions I have indicated, will have the gallantry to further amend the bill, so as to provide that one hundred and sixty acres of land shall also be given to persons of the opposite sex. [Laughter.] I believe this amendment would be favorably received, and particularly by those bachelor gentlemen who are the most deeply interested.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I am opposed to that amendment for many reasons. It seems to embrace the principles upon which the gentleman from Texas opposes the bill generally. That gentleman is the last one I expected to hear urge upon this floor, the reasons that he has urged against the passage of this bill. In the first instance, when we look to his own State, and that, too, after he manifests such great astonishment at this bill, denouncing it as the perfection of Fourierism, how does the matter stand there? We find that one of the distinguished men of this nation, [Mr. Housron]—an aspirant to the Presidency of the United States, who has distinguished himself in military, as well as in civil life, the individual we may say, who almost spoke Texas into existence; the individual who has shed his blood, and has periled his life and reputation that Texas should be brought into existence—comes forward with a similar proposition before the Senate of the United States, and he does not see any agrarianism or any Fourierism in it. He does not discover it.

The gentleman talks about gratuity. How long has it been since Texas was the recipient of ten millions of dollars at the hands of this Government? Talk about vacant and unappropriated territory! The territory she ceded to the United States was but a song, and valueless. It was a dead limb to Texas; and the Government did a great favor in amputating and separating that dead limb from her body. And for the poor privilege of performing this surgical operation of separating this dead limb from Texas, we come forward, and in principle and substance, give her a gratuity of ten millions, thereby enabling her to pay a debt which was heavy and pressing upon her people.

Might not this idea have been running through the mind of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD,] that, if Congress should adopt the principle of this bill, in relation to the public lands generally, it might interfere with emigration to some extent, which might be setting towards Texas? Would not individuals, would not settlers in Louisiana, in Arkansas, in Missouri, and Alabama, if we adopt this policy, be diverted from going to Texas? Texas offers her lands almost as a gratuity, yet Texas does not discover in that, all these dangerous consequences and effects upon society, which the gentleman predicts will follow this system, if adopted by the Federal Government. No such thing is to take place there. Texas can throw her lands into market cheap, but the Federal Government must hold its lands at high prices, and thereby drive the population into Texas, and prevent it from going into the other States, both the free and slave States. Now, these may be some of the reasons operating upon the gentleman's mind, in opposing this bill. Have they not made large grants of land to individuals, thousands and thousands of acres, conditional that they shall get so many settlers to the country? and do not those individuals, thus obtaining those grants, go into the old States and get settlers, and pay their expenses of going there, and then give them the lands?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. ALLISON, and it was not agreed to.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, announcing the passage, by the Senate, of certain bills.]

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I rise again, at this stage of the proceeding, to move the substitute, of which I gave notice some days since. I move it, sir, as a substitute for the whole bill, and I ask the Chairman whether I have the right to do so at this stage of the proceeding?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that the substitute will not be in order until the committee have proceeded through with the bill to the end. Then the substitute will be in order.

Mr. BROWN. If the Chair will indulge me, I apprehend that I have the right, at any time, to

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

MONDAY, MAY 10, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No. 81.

move a substitute to the original bill, but that that does not affect the right of the committee to go on and perfect the original bill before they act upon the substitute. They will first act upon the original proposition, making that as perfect as they can, and then upon my substitute, and take a vote upon it—the motion upon my substitute, in the mean time, being held in abeyance until both the original proposition and the substitute shall have been perfected to the satisfaction of the committee. Taking that view of the subject, I propose, at this stage of the proceedings, to tender my substitute, asking no vote upon it, nor expecting that the committee is to be estopped at all in the process of perfecting the original proposition.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. What is the pending proposition now?

The CHAIRMAN. If no other or further amendment to the original section is offered, the question will be upon the substitute for the first section, offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Mr. STEPHENS. The pending question, then, is—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] will wait until the question raised by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] is disposed of. The Chair is of opinion that, while an amendment is pending upon which action is in order, it cannot be in order to offer an amendment upon which action is not in order. Those two questions cannot be presented at the same time. When, however, the committee shall have proceeded through the bill, and have acted upon such amendments as shall be offered, a substitute to the whole bill will be in order, and such is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BROWN. I do not desire to appeal from the decision of the Chairman, but still I think the decision is wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will beg leave to say, that he is aware that a different practice has to some extent prevailed, but he believes that a better practice, sanctioned by usage, and in accordance with the rule, is as he states.

Mr. STEPHENS. I beg to state a point of order. Upon all propositions it is in order to move to amend the original proposition, unless the amendment is more than two degrees removed. The pending question I understand now is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] to the original proposition. That is only one degree removed from the original proposition. I submit to the Chair if it is not perfectly in order, at this stage of the proceeding, to move to amend the original proposition, as well as the pending amendment, by moving to strike out the original proposition and pending amendment, and submit the substitute which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] has offered?

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi were confined to the first section alone, it would be in order, being then such an amendment as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] indicates. But the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi proposes to go further.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the section by inserting in the fourth line, after the words "United States," and striking out the rest of the bill, the words—

"Shall be entitled to have issued to him or her by the Commissioner of Public Lands a warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, to be located in the same manner as that under which the bounty land warrants heretofore issued have been located on any of the public lands of the United States subject to entry, the applicant being required to make proof, in support of his claim, in such manner and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

The few remarks, Mr. Chairman, which I shall make on this amendment will explain its operation. It will be seen by the committee that this is an important amendment. I do not exactly like the policy of this bill, but if it is to pass, I hope it will pass in the shape which I propose. I mean that if we are to make a disposition of the public lands, I desire it to be an equitable one. The bill of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] provides that every man who goes upon the public land, and occupies it for a certain length of time, shall be entitled to the land. I do not regard those persons who have no property—nothing to keep them at home—as the most meritorious class of the community. I have a great many constituents, honest, industrious men, who will not find it practicable to leave their homes—to leave their property and friends—and emigrate to the West. Yet these men pay taxes and contribute to the support of the Government, and are ready to fight for the Government. In fact, as a class, I believe they are more meritorious than the landless, or those who have no property. I will not, however, draw any distinctions between them. I have no doubt many a man is poor, because he is unfortunate, and not because he is not industrious and energetic. But it cannot be pretended that men who have accumulated no property, and have nothing to tie them at home, and can march off at any time and settle for the sake of getting the land, are better citizens than the men who find it inconvenient to do so.

Now, what I desire is, that every citizen of the United States who is at the head of a family, and every widow—according to the language of the first section of the bill—shall have a warrant for one hundred and sixty acres. If the person is poor, and has no property to keep him at home, he may go off and occupy the land, and he will be in just as good a position, as the bill of my friend [Mr. JOHNSON] proposes to place him, and rather better, he having a warrant to locate with, without waiting for five years before he can get a title. On the other hand, those people who have something to bind them at home, having the warrant, may sell it for whatever they can get, or, if they do not choose to sell it, they can keep it until their children grow up, and then let some one of their children go and occupy it.

This is obviously a just mode of getting along, if we are to dispose of the public lands, and put every citizen upon an equal footing. I trust, therefore, that the House will adopt this amendment, and if it is adopted, I rather think I can vote for the bill. At any rate, no one would like to go to his constituents and say, "I am not willing that you, because you have some property to go with, shall have any share of the public domain; but I will give to that man, the poor laborer, a part of your property, and cut you out of it."

This short explanation will enable everybody to understand the operation of the amendment; and I hope, therefore, that if the bill passes, it will pass in the shape in which my amendment will put it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CARTER. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the honorable gentleman, which is evidently an attack upon the success of this bill. The honorable gentleman from North Carolina has got it up as a diversion, with a view of killing the bill. That is pretty much all I have to say directly against the amendment. There have been two arguments advanced against this measure which I wish to dissent from. One is, that we have no constitutional power to pass this homestead bill; and the other is, that it will result, if passed, in speculation. Both of these arguments originated from the honorable and able member from Texas, [Mr. HOWARD.] His views are also held by other gentlemen. This constitutional provision in reference to the territory of the United States is a curious thing under the rendering of a political statesman. It was but the other day that my honorable friend from Texas uttered a dissent from what he called "squatter sovereignty" of the right of the Territories to act beyond the powers conferred by the Federal Legislature, under the Nicholson letter construction of the Constitution as I understood it. A large class of politicians contend that under the Constitution you have no power to give the political disposal of the Territories by reducing them to the order of government. Thus, you are deprived of all political control over them. Another class of politicians say that you have no power to dispose of the fee. Now put the two arguments together and see what kind of condition you are in. You have neither the power to hold political disposition of the territory, nor the power to give away or sell it. Where is your power over it? I understand my honorable friend to deny the power of the Government to grant away this territory. Now, it is sufficient for all my constitutional compunctions upon this subject to find in the Constitution the plain language that Congress shall have the power to dispose of it. It leaves in Congress a wise discretion in the disposition of it, and this talk about unconstitutionality, in my judgment, is pure gammon, not only in denying your power to govern it, but in denying your power to dispose of it. I believe one position is as absurd as the other.

Another proposition made in resisting this bill is, that its tendency is to speculation in land. It seems to me that it must be obvious to every man who will give the bill a momentary consideration, that its direct tendency is to put an estoppel upon it. The privilege to take possession and occupy land under this bill in behalf of those who wish to bestow their labor upon the cultivation of the earth, will operate upon the speculative grant which we have heretofore made of land warrants, and will control them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOLONY. Is the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. But an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina is in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to modify my amendment by inserting the words "except members of Congress." I do not want the members of the House to vote anything to themselves. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I do not believe that any member of Congress, after having been here two years, will be able to do much farming. They will never go there.

Mr. POLK. Does the gentleman refer to members of the present Congress, or to those who may hereafter become members?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I refer to members of the present Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am sure that my friend will accept another modification of his amendment. It is, "that the lobby members be also excluded."

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand tellers upon my amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. From the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, I judge that under its operation widows will be excluded. The grant is only to issue "to him." I desire that the words "or her" shall be introduced into the amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I accept the modification. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MOLONY and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was rejected—the tellers having reported—ayes 28, noes 89.

Mr. SACKETT. I move to strike out all in the section, beginning with the word, "that," in the third line, to the word "shall," in the ninth line, and insert, in lieu thereof, "that every citizen of the age of twenty-one years."

The effect of the amendment I propose is this: It strikes out that limitation in the bill which gives the benefit of the bill to the heads of families. The other portions of the bill have been stricken out with regard to property, real or personal. It strikes out the limitation as to heads of families, and leaves the bill, so far as this provision is concerned, in the form that any citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who will go on to the lands and occupy them according to its provisions, will be entitled to its benefits. I wish to say that I regard this amendment as an important one, and one which I suppose the gentlemen from the frontier States, that portion of the Union in which the public lands are situated, will be inclined to favor, for if the original provision is retained, it practically excludes the young men of the country from going on to the public lands, because this will be the system of settlement hereafter to be adopted.

Mr. FICKLIN. I do not know what the effect will be if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] shall be adopted. I wish to give notice to him that the term "enter," which is used in the first section of the bill; I wish to change to the word, "occupy."

Mr. SACKETT. I think that there will be no difficulty in relation to the remaining provisions of the bill. It will be seen; without spending any time upon this question, that it is a question intended to give to the young men of the country the opportunity to settle and occupy these lands, the same as heads of families. I think it is an amendment of decided importance to the frontier States, to that portion of the Union where these lands are situated. I do not know that I can enlighten the committee by spending time upon this matter. It is a plain proposition, and the question is whether the friends of the bill will limit it only to the heads of families; or whether they will give to any citizen, who may be twenty-one years of age, the opportunity of enjoying the benefits of this bill, and occupying these public lands. I hope the amendment I have offered will be adopted.

Mr. HOWARD. I am opposed to this amendment because it tends to squander the public lands much more than the original bill. Some gentlemen who have preceded me have supposed that it was peculiarly inconsistent for me to go against this measure, because the State of Texas at one time adopted a similar policy. It is the evil effect of that policy upon that country which I wish to state here, and it will be found one of the best arguments which can be made against this bill. Texas at one period gave her public lands to settlers in amounts from one hundred and sixty to four thousand one hundred and twenty-eight acres, upon the condition that they should be settled upon. The principal motive for that was to acquire men to defend the country at the time when she was prosecuting an harassing and expensive war with Mexico.

But I wish to speak of the results of the measure. In a short time they released the condition of settlement upon the land, as will be done here in a short time if you adopt this measure. The result of the measure, then, was to throw upon the market a vast amount of land, and that land went down in price to a very few cents an acre. It passed from the possession of the actual cultivator of the soil into the hands of large speculators in public lands, who purchased it up at a few cents an acre; and to such an extent did this system go, that a neighbor of mine owns nearly two hundred leagues of land. Every one will see what will be the natural result of all this. The owner thus monopolizing the land, withdraws it from sale at the Government price, and puts it beyond the reach of the poor cultivator, who wishes to procure for himself a farm and a home. That will be the result here. When you give away your lands, you destroy, to a great extent, the relative value of all your public domain. It is not good policy for the actual settler thus to reduce the price of land, so as to tempt the cupidity of the speculator. And such would be the result of this measure. The settler to whom the land was given, anticipating another donation, would transfer his property for a small consideration. That which is easily acquired, is soon dissipated. The true interest of the people is to hold the public lands so near their intrinsic value as to prevent speculation and monopoly. Keep the land at a fair price—always within the reach of the actual cultivator. That is his highest interest. You then give him the means of owning his own home. The direct result of very cheap lands is to accumulate them in the hands of the wealthy few, cause them to be held at such high prices as to place them beyond the means of the actual settler, and thus withdraw them from cultivation for a long period of time, and delay and impede settlement.

The gentleman from Tennessee seems to think that I oppose this bill because it would retard emigration to Texas, if the Government gives away its own lands. The articles of annexation require Texas to devote her lands to a particular purpose; and it would therefore be unjust to her for this Government to destroy that property by Federal legislation. It would be more unjust in the Government which sold lands at $1.25 per acre last year, to give away its own land around the purchaser, and thus destroy the value of the property purchased upon the faith of existing laws, which he had a right to suppose would be continued.

There is a difference between the power of the Federal Government of its public domain, and that of a State over its property. Under the Republic of Texas, her lands were donated to settlers by a provision in her constitution, and therefore no argument of analogy can be drawn from that source, and as little from her late sale to the United States.

The Constitution of the United States treats the public domain as property from which revenue is to be derived. That is the whole history of the subject, and the original motive of acquisition. The Constitution speaks of it as a question of value, and not as a subject of donation. I have heard no argument which sustains the position that Congress has the power to collect revenue to divide out among the people, rich or poor, and quite as little to prove that we may lay taxes for the purpose of purchasing land to give away to the landless.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon Mr. SACKETT's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I rise to move an amendment in the tenth line, to strike out the words "free of cost," and insert the words "fifty cents per acre."

I very much regret the restrictions under which I am placed, in attempting to express a few thoughts on this subject. I must say, however, that I have serious constitutional difficulties in reference to this measure. It has been said that the object in procuring and holding lands by the Government was their settlement and cultivation. I admit this was the chief object, but it was not the whole; there were other objects besides this, as could be shown, did time permit. But even if this were all, is it not necessary that the public lands should be disposed of according to the requirements of the Constitution, whatever they may be? It is true that Congress may make all needful rules and regulations for the disposal of the public territory; but does this imply that they may dispose of it in a partial manner, and to the benefit of the few, to the exclusion of vast numbers, who are not in condition to secure the benefits of a particular measure? It seems to me that it is an undeniable proposition, that the public lands are a common fund for the benefit of all the people of all the States. If this proposition can be denied, I should like to hear it denied and maintained. If this be true, then, whatever legislation is for the benefit of a class, is narrow and exclusive—it shuts out a portion of the people from its benefits, and is not in accordance with the spirit and requirements of the Constitution.

It has been said, that there is no special power in the Constitution by which this Government can acquire lands—that it is acquired in virtue of the sovereignty of the Government, and that it may be disposed of in the same way, that is to say, as it may be the sovereign pleasure of the Government to dispose of it. But, in my opinion, there can be no greater error. In the absence of any express provision upon the subject, is it not the clear reason, and therefore the clear law of the case, that the public property must be dispensed with an even hand for the benefit of all? But is that for the benefit of all, of which thousands can by no possibility desire the least advantage? The case of necessity, the sternest and most inexorable of all law, shuts out multitudes from all participation in the benefits of this measure. I contend that all whose avocations are not agricultural are virtually cut off, and that therefore your legislation will be class legislation. It would be but mockery to say, that the immense number of mechanics and artisans of the country might turn agriculturists, and thus take the benefit of the law; the thing is impossible, which no sensible and honest mind will deny. And yet these mechanics and artisans are as much entitled to the benefit of the great land fund of the Government, as those who cultivate the soil.

I agree that the views presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] are in accordance with my own, they seem to me just and forcible.

But independent of any constitutional objections upon the subject, a question arises—and a serious one to my mind—as to the expediency of this measure. I know that I have but a moment of time, and that I must hasten on. What will be the result, for instance, as to the State which I in part represent? Those who have gone upon the frontiers and settled themselves there, have purchased lands at great labor, trouble, and privation; and perhaps there is near to them a tract of forty or eighty acres, which they desire to purchase for the extension and improvement of their farms, so soon as they shall be able, but they cannot take the benefit of this bill, because they are already in the occupancy of land, which they have no inducement to abandon; neither can they secure the adjoining lands, because they are immediately seized by virtue of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. CLARK,] if it is constitutional to grant lands to corporations by the million, and unconstitutional to grant it in limited quantities to actual settlers?

Mr. CLARK. At the proper time I will answer the question, and explain the difference.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, is my time out?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. CLARK—

"How true it is, we take no note of time
But from its lapse."

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise, not to correct the gentleman's quotation, but his argument. Upon this very question I have been listening for this whole session to the course of argument from that gentleman, and the gentlemen connected with him, upon what I consider the constitutional propriety or right of disposing of the public lands. He asserts, in the first place, that the Government holds these lands for the benefit of all, and he asks of what service to the people in his State can be the disposition of these lands to those individuals who will, as we contemplate, commence the occupancy of them? I cannot say what particular advantage will result to his State. According to his own assertion, we are not compelled to consult them upon that advantage. We hold these lands for the benefit of all. Permit me to ask that honorable gentleman, and those who hold the argument with him, what benefit will it be to the State of Maine if we take it upon ourselves to violate the Constitution of the country, as he would assert, and grant alternate sections of public land to create a railroad in the State of Iowa. I advocate this measure upon the very grounds upon which I would advocate the granting of these alternate sections to railroads, because the Government of the United States owns these lands in fee simple, and is willing to grant them to promote the benefit of all those who can be benefited by this legislation. We are not to inquire whether Iowa or its Representatives are to be benefited by it, but whether, in the distribution of our legislative benefits, we shall extend advantages to classes of people or individuals, wherever settled. They will, perhaps, create a State for themselves; and they will, perhaps, in promotion of the objects contemplated here, establish communities that will in their turn inquire, why have we given these public lands for railroads and corporations when individuals desire them, and when they might promote the great objects for which it is said the Government holds these lands, namely, the extension of the population of the country over the territories we hold? I see, therefore, nothing in the argument of the gentleman but that which must upset what I consider his favorite scheme, and what, in my opinion, is a good scheme, which uses the public lands to promote the intercourse of the country and the healthful population of the Territories. I therefore trust that the gentleman is not in earnest in the course of his argument, unless he means to throw up his own grants in the object which he contemplates here.

Mr. CLARK. Do you speak of railroad grants?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

Mr. CLARK. When I come to that subject I will endeavor to satisfy the gentleman that there is a vast difference between these grants.

Mr. CHANDLER. The gentleman has an argument which suits this question, and another which suits another.

Mr. HENN. I wish to ask the gentleman one question. I wish to ask him whether he includes me in the remarks which he has just made?

Mr. CHANDLER. By no means—because I do not understand that you take the ground of your colleague.

Mr. HENN. I am a friend of the bill, and opposed to my colleague in this matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am sure my friend [Mr. CLARK] will be one of its advocates, when he contemplates its effect upon him.

Mr. HENN. I wish it to be understood by the gentleman that I have never failed to advocate this measure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I know that very well.

Mr. MOLONY moved to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty cents," and inserting in lieu thereof "one cent."

Mr. MOLONY said: Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I was not a little surprised to hear the arguments brought forward by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. CLARK.] I was not only surprised at the nature of those arguments, but at the source from which they emanated. I did not expect to hear a gentleman representing Western interests give utterance to such sentiments upon this bill. I regret to find that any gentleman from the West entertains them. I view them, however honestly conceived, as undoubtedly they are by the gentleman from Iowa—prejudicial, yes, suicidal to Western interests. I consider the gentleman wrong in all his positions in regard to this measure—wrong, most emphatically, in regarding it hostile to the interests of the pioneers now in the West—wrong in viewing it as a bill for class legislation, as opposed to national legislation—wrong in his constitutional views upon the subject.

Sir, I find most all of the delegation from the new States supporting this bill, not only because it is calculated to benefit the West, which undoubtedly it will do to a degree far greater than any act that has passed Congress since its existence; but because of their clear, enlarged, national, and correct views of its benefits to the whole country. Sir, is the gentleman from Iowa right in supposing that this bill is adverse to the interests of the actual settler and freeholder now in the West?

What, sir, is it that keeps down the price of lands, now owned and improved by the Western pioneers? Is it not the fact that a great body of public land closely surround them, competing with their improved lands at $1 25 per acre? Is not this bill eminently calculated to remove that competition, by giving a great impulse to the settlement of those public lands, by transferring them from the Government to the hands of the actual settlers, who will hold them, with his improvements, not at $1 25 per acre—thereby keeping down the price of improved farms, at or near that standard—but at their real value, of five or ten dollars per acre? Such, sir, is my view of the effects of this bill, should it become a law, upon the interests of the present landholders of the new States. With regard to the objection, that not the nation, but the poor men only, are to be benefited by the passage of this bill—I must say that the discussion with which the committee and the country have been entertained, during the last few weeks, have, to my mind, and as I hope and believe, to the mind of a majority of the House, demonstrated most conclusively, its nationality, expediency, as well as its constitutionality. The bill most clearly and strongly commends itself to the zealous support of members, whether representing the agricultural, commercial, manufacturing, or railroad interests, thus vindicating its claim to nationality. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to understand how any constitutional scruples can be entertained by a member, who has no such scruples in voting away to the States millions of acres of the public domain, for the construction of railroads and canals. Are there any constitutional or expedient objections, which can be urged against this bill, that do not apply with equal force to donations for railroads and canals? Sir, these measures are all based upon the same considerations; they must stand or fall together, and I am pleased to feel assured that Congress, in regard to this bill, will manifest the same enlightened national policy, which has marked its legislation heretofore, in regard to the public lands. Its policy has been to facilitate the settlement of the public domain, by opening to it the markets of the East, by aiding the construction of railroads and canals, and in pursuance of a policy so wise and just, let this bill be passed, which will incalculably benefit every interest and every section of the country—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to say a word or two in opposition to the pending amendment, but I very much doubt whether my physical strength will enable me to utter that which, under other circumstances, I should like to say. A long and protracted confinement has prevented me from listening to much of the debate in relation to this bill; and I rise now simply for the purpose of replying to some of the arguments of gentlemen here in relation to the constitutional power of Congress to make this disposition of the public domain. In my judgment, sir, if there be any one question connected with the administration of this Government that is clear and beyond a doubt, it is the power of Congress to make such disposition of the public domain as shall cause its population and settlement. I have not the time now to go into an elaborate examination of, and disquisition on this subject; but I fearlessly venture the assertion, that had I the opportunity, I would convince almost any gentleman who approached the subject with an unbiased mind.

Sir, it is singular that the gentlemen who have found constitutional scruples in relation to this matter, have searched for them everywhere but in the very place where questions of this sort can alone be determined—that is, in the Constitution itself. What is the language of the Constitution? I have it not before me, and quote from memory: Congress shall have power to make the necessary rules and regulations to dispose of the public lands for the purpose of causing the lands to be settled, and formed into republican States.

A MEMBER. No, no; that is not it.

Mr. DISNEY. The verb is in the infinitive mood, which is precisely equivalent to the insertion of the words, "for the purpose of," or "in order to." "To cause them to be settled," is precisely equivalent to the introduction of the words, "for the purpose of causing them to be settled, and formed into republican States." My quotation of the Constitution is disputed. Unfortunately I have not it before me, and cannot give the precise language.

Mr. FREEMAN. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he is quoting the resolutions of Congress of 1780.

Mr. DISNEY. I was just going to remark that I was probably confounding the original resolution on which the cession of territory was made to the United States with the Constitution itself. But it is equally strong in one instance as in the other. The very object for which the cessions were originally sought, was for the purpose of causing this territory to be settled, and formed into republican States. Gentlemen at all conversant with the history of that period, are doubtless familiar with the fact, that among other objections offered to the possession of these large tracts of land by Virginia and other States, was this: that they rendered those States too large and powerful for the safety and well-being of their sister States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken on Mr. MOLONY's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. PARKER, of Indiana, moved to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty cents," and inserting in lieu thereof "twenty-five cents."

Mr. P. said: Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to make a suggestion to the committee. I had the pleasure of addressing the committee some days ago on this same subject; and, according to the proposition that I then presented, twenty-five cents per acre was set down as the price at which the whole of the public lands might be entered. I think this is one of the most important features connected with this bill. I am in favor of the principle of the bill, but I want the bill put in such a shape as will command the strength of this House, and, at the same time, prove satisfactory to the country.

My colleague, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] who addressed the committee the other day, entered into a calculation, based upon correct data, and which, I have no doubt, was correct, which showed that our public lands cost the Government about twenty-two cents per acre when put into the market. My proposition now is, to draw from those lands a revenue of twenty-five cents per acre, which, I think, will cover all expenses. If we do not do this, in what attitude do we place ourselves? Why, it is the same, substantially, as if you sent round and received, from every property-holder in this land who pays taxes, a contribution for the benefit of those who are to take these lands. Now, that is wrong. You must still keep up your land offices, and make your Government surveys, keep land offices open and make patents, in order that you may have clear titles. So long as that is done, you must go to the Treasury to pay your officers, and thus you take the money of all for the purpose of putting it into the hands of those who settle on these lands.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will turn to the last section of the bill, he will see that all the fees are to be paid by the parties entering the lands.

Mr. PARKER. I do not so understand it. At any rate, it is better to put it in here. The principle is correct, and it should be adopted.

Whilst I have the floor, permit me to suggest another amendment, which I design to offer at another time, and that is: that all of our public lands shall be open to everybody that wishes to make actual settlement at this price. Sir, I am against confining the settlement of these lands to the heads of families only. I have lived in the Western country a great many years, and I know how the lands are settled. An old farmer has sons growing up to mature years; he gets a piece of land for them, and sends the boys out to make an opening, and subsequently the boys take to themselves wives and settle. Sir, by this bill, you prevent all these proceedings for the purpose of opening the land and compel the settler at once to settle down and be the head of a family at the time. That is wrong. It will not conduce to the strength of the measure. My proposition is to leave the lands open to every one who will settle upon them at this price. If we do not do this, as I said before, we, to some extent, require the other portion of the community to contribute for the benefit of those who settle upon these lands. My people do not ask this. The idea is unpopular with every individual, I know, who does not himself wish to go upon the public lands; and I have never yet seen the man who would get up and say he was desirous the community should contribute for his benefit, to enable him to go and settle upon the public lands. All those who desire to settle are willing to pay what the lands cost the Government; and others, I find, are unwilling to pay contributions to enable them to get there. I think that the principle of the amendment is correct, but that the amount ought to be twenty-five cents, instead of fifty cents.

Mr. FREEMAN said: Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PARKER.] I wish, however, to say a word or two upon the constitutional power of Congress which is asserted by this homestead bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HOWARD] has denied that Congress possesses any such power. As to this general power under the Constitution, gentlemen have argued as if the sole power which Congress has over the public domain is to be found in the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution. Now, it is a well-settled rule of legal interpretation—applicable alike to contracts, statutes, and constitutions—that all acts and parts of acts in pari materia shall be construed together.

Our title to the public lands is not derived from the Constitution, but from the resolutions of the Congress of the Confederation and the grants of the several States based thereon. Looking at the history of the public lands anterior to and in connection with the formation of the Constitution, I undertake to say that there is no point more clearly settled than that Congress has the power to encourage the settlement of the public lands; that power is expressly granted by the resolutions of 1780, and subsequent resolutions passed by the Congress of the Confederation. The object of the States in ceding the lands was, first, to pay the debt incurred by the war of the Revolution, and, second, to settle the public lands and construct them into separate republican States. Now, the debt of the war of Independence has been paid, and the Treasury reimbursed for the purchase of the lands; and I maintain that the Constitution, in connection with the articles of cession, authorizes Congress to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations in regard to this land, for the purpose of building up the new States of the Confederacy. The first act of Congress after the lands were ceded was the ordinance of 1787, where in three distinct States were laid off in the Northwest Territory. But, in order to make this provision doubly sure, the Constitution, subsequently adopted, provides that "all debts, contracts, and engagements, entered into before its adoption, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation." Thus the resolutions of Congress, adopted anterior to the Constitution, and the deeds of cession based thereon, are ratified by the Constitution itself. And what are the provisions of these deeds of cession and acts of Congress? They are, that the ceded lands shall be divided into distinct republican States, with all the rights of sovereignty and freedom and independence as the old States. Thus the Government has the power to settle these lands. And in order to encourage their settlement, we have the right to grant one hundred and sixty acres to each actual settler. And why? I do not sustain the bill upon the ground that we have the right to convert the Federal Government into a great almshouse for the support of the poor and indigent. We have no power to bestow charities, nor to donate lands for purposes inconsistent with our well-established public policy of increasing and building up new republican States within our limits. I sustain the principle of the bill on the ground that we have the right to pay for public services rendered. Do we not pay our registers, receivers, and surveyors, our Land Office Commissioner and all his clerks? Are they not engaged in furthering the public land policy by preparing it for settlement, and is not the public service of the settler equal in dignity and public profit? What greater public service can be rendered than that of the pioneer, who shoulders his axe and his gun, leaves the abodes of luxury, ease, and the refined pleasures of life, makes the forest his home and the wild beast his companion, and, braving all the perils of a forester's life, finally subdues the wilderness to the support and comfort of man? Is not such a labor for the common benefit? Is it not for the common benefit of all the States, to encourage the opening of roads in the wild lands, the erection of dwellings, school-houses, churches, towns, and cities? Sir, if there be any public policy marked upon the history of this country, such is the public land policy of the United States in principle and practice.

But my time will not permit me to go into this matter.

I wish to say one word more; was there ever a Government upon the face of the earth whose public policy in relation to its public lands was not to extend its jurisdiction, to increase its population, to increase its productions, to produce all the staples necessary for the country, and to extend its numbers and its power over the face of the earth? If there is one principle plainer than another in the history of our public lands, it is this principle; and have we not the power to aid in the accomplishment of this great work? I think we have.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 78, noes 16.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. HIBBARD) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 7, being a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, &c.

Mr. MOLONY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, presented, as correctly enrolled, the joint resolution authorizing the purchase of the ninth volume of the Laws of the United States. It received the signature of the Speaker.

Mr. STANLY. I wish to make a motion that the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] be printed for the use of the House. They are all taken from the files of the House because the good old plan which prevailed in the Twenty-ninth Congress is not kept up.

Mr. HALL. I ask that the amendments and substitutes which have been offered may also be printed.

Mr. STANLY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

THE PRINTING.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to allow me to make one remark. The House have given us directions in relation to the public printing, and I now give notice that we intend to execute strictly those directions, and if the House wants any of its printing done promptly, it must give some other directions.

Mr. MASON. I apprehend that the Clerk can order what printing it is necessary to have done until the committee come to some conclusion.

Mr. CARTTER. I rise to a question of order. I desire to inquire if there is any motion before the House?

Mr. GORMAN. I only wish to repeat what I have said, that the House have directed that we shall let out this printing which the public printer cannot execute after ten days' advertisement. Now, the public printer has not done any thing according to the contract, and I give notice that the committee will execute strictly the directions of the House, whatever may be the delay in procuring the printing necessary to be done from time to time.

Mr. CARTTER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion for a moment, to enable me to introduce a resolution in which we are all interested. It should be introduced now, if at all. It will not, I apprehend, require any discussion.

Mr. CARTTER. I will withdraw the motion if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. MEADE. I will renew it. In a few days this House will have to be cleaned up, under the summer arrangement. Now, I propose to introduce a resolution which I have sent to the Clerk, and which I desire should be adopted now, in order that the Clerk may be prepared to do at the proper time what the resolution requires. It is, that the Clerk shall cause to be removed and sold, the chairs now in the Hall, and that he shall cause to be supplied in their places, suitable cane-bottom chairs without arms. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the resolution.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Object?"]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. We ought to adopt some resolution to provide for a recess now, unless we want the Clerk of the House and the Treasury to be left at the mercy of those who will enforce their own prices for refitting and furnishing the Hall. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to have the Hall refitted and cleaned for the summer session, and that the House adjourn on Thursday, May 13th, until Monday May 17th, in order to afford him time for that purpose.

Mr. STANLY. I object to the time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not very particular in regard to the time. I offer the resolution in this form, but will not call the previous question until one or two amendments have been offered, if gentlemen desire to offer any, and then I pledge myself to call for the previous question.

Mr. STANLY. I only object to the time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the gentleman can offer an amendment, fixing his own time.

Mr. STANLY. My amendment would be voted down, and then I should be obliged to take your time. Why not take the week of the Democratic Convention?

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman can offer an amendment fixing it at that time. I am satisfied he does not want the whole House to yield to his convenience and wishes. Let him move that the House adjourn on Tuesday, the 1st of June, until Friday, the 4th of June. That amendment will be voted on first, and if it is not adopted, he certainly cannot wish the House to come up to his will in all things.

Mr. STANLY. I object to the gentleman from Arkansas having his way in all things. I want that resolution to be adopted in the form that suits the majority of this House. If the gentleman will put the adjournment at the time of the Democratic Convention, or of the Whig Convention, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I will alter the resolution to suit the gentleman, and fix the time for adjourning on Tuesday, June 1st, until Friday, June 4th.

Mr. MEADE. Is the resolution before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is; and it will be read for information.

The resolution, as modified, was then read by the Clerk.

Mr. GAYLORD. I move to amend the resolution, by inserting "from the 13th to the 17th of May," in the place of the words, "from the 1st to the 4th of June."

Mr. HAMILTON. I move the previous question.

Mr. FOWLER. I would inquire of the Chair, if the previous question is sustained, it will prevent any other amendment?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is sustained, no other amendments will be in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will merely suggest, that I do not think that this is the ordinary way in which this object is accomplished.

Mr. JOHNSON. The previous question has been called, and I call the gentleman to order, with all respect to him. No argument is in order after the call for the previous question.

Mr. JONES. Then I put this question to the Chair. Suppose that upon the day on which this resolution says the House shall adjourn over a majority of the members in their seats here refuse to do it? I think the usual way is to suggest a day upon which such an adjournment will take place, and that will be a notification to the door-keeper, and upon that day the resolution can be introduced and passed.

Mr. FOWLER. I would request the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] to withdraw his motion for one moment, that I may move another amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON declined to withdraw the motion.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to suggest an amendment which will strike the House favorably. My amendment is, that the Clerk be authorized to erect desks upon the inside of those now standing, in the place of these chairs. We are all aware that these chairs are very much in the way. Desks may be erected that will be less cumbersome to the area of the Hall than these chairs.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON. What becomes of this resolution, if the House adjourn?

Mr. STEPHENS. We can bring it up to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide such questions as they arise, but it will be between that and the unfinished business of yesterday.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. STEPHENS, and there were, on a division—ayes 65, noes 48.

So the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. FREEMAN gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill to encourage the settlement of the public lands in the States and Territories of California, Utah, New Mexico, Louisiana, and Mississippi, and also to aid those States and Territories and the State of Texas in the construction of a railway post road from San Diego, on the Pacific, to Vicksburg, on the Mississippi river.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of the administrator and administratrix of the estate of Amos Proctor, late of the city and county of New York, deceased, praying Congress to pass an act to enable them to settle and adjust the claim of said Amos Proctor, to one half of one moiety of the appraised value of goods seized and libeled upon his information, and released from forfeiture by virtue of the act of April 27, 1819.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petition of J. B. Tobey & Co., and Lewis Kinney & Co., of Wareham, Massachusetts, for a return of duties paid on certain merchandise.

Also, a resolution in favor of a buoy being placed on the "Long Rock," near Hyannis Harbor, in the State of Massachusetts.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of Joseph Hopkinson, asking to be allowed the difference between the pay of a passed assistant surgeon and that of a fleet surgeon and surgeon, for the period he performed the duties of the latter grades in the East India squadron.

By Mr. KING, of New York: The memorial of sundry inhabitants of the county of Lewis, New York, asking for an appropriation in money or in lands, to aid in the completion of a railroad from Sackett's Harbor on Lake Ontario, to connect with the lines of railroad to New York and Boston.

By Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts: Remonstrance of Daniel Hontecron and others, legal voters of Springfield, Massachusetts, against any change in the mode of superintendence of the Springfield Armory.

Also, the memorial of David Le Gro and others, citizens employed in the United States Armory, at Springfield, denying certain statements made in certain memorials, asking for a change in the superintendence of said armory.

By Mr. PARKER, of Indiana: The petition of J. P. Siddal, C. H. Burchenal, and 46 others, citizens of Union, Wayne, and Randolph counties, Indiana, praying for a certain mail route.

By Mr. CABLE, of Ohio: A petition from O. S. Drake, D. C. Stockwell, and 40 other citizens of Portage county, Ohio, in favor of the freedom of the public lands.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 7, 1852.

Prayer by the chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I move to postpone the order of business for this day, for the purpose of taking up the deficiency bill.

Mr. BADGER. I would suggest to my friend from Virginia to vary his motion, so as to suspend for to-day the order setting apart each Friday for private business, that we may go on with the regular business. Let us make reports from committees, and afterwards proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Let us go on with private business to one o'clock, and then take up the deficiency bill.

Mr. HUNTER. We can do but little up to one o'clock. My motion is to suspend the order of the Senate for to-day.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would again suggest to the honorable Senator from Virginia that it will be better to go on with the morning business until one o'clock, and then the bill about which he is so anxious may be considered.

The PRESIDENT. The Senate cannot proceed with any other business than that which is prescribed by its standing order until that order shall be suspended.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to suspend the order. When it is suspended, we can go on with the morning business until one o'clock, when we can take up the deficiency bill.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope this motion will not prevail. Some time ago we adopted a rule devoting Friday of each week to the consideration of private bills. We have a very heavy Private Calendar; but the rights and interests of these claimants have been postponed week after week, and I do think that the very consideration that induced us to adopt the rule grows stronger and stronger every day. If it was right, because they had just claims against this Government, that we should set apart a certain day of every week in the early part of the session for the consideration of private claims, certainly that consideration is stronger now than months of the session have passed away. There are still here many persons waiting to have their claims passed upon, and their necessities relieved. To provide for the consideration of the claims of such persons this rule was adopted. There are many of them who are unable to come here to urge the consideration of their claims upon Congress. They are unable to bring influences to bear here, that they may have their claims put before all other business; and this rule was intended for their protection. I do hope, then, that its propriety will again be recognized, and that the rule will be enforced. The question which the Senator from Virginia proposes to take up now, to the postponement of these private claims, is one that needs no protection of rules. It has strength enough in itself, and it will pass this body, in spite of all opposition that can be made to it, at any time when the vote shall be taken upon it.

It is not one of those claims for which there is any necessity of pressing the action of Congress. I see no reason to give it precedence. It can afford to wait a little while, so as to allow us to afford relief to those individuals who are suffering privations because their rights are withheld or postponed. It can afford to wait a little while to allow justice to be done, and I hope justice will be done to this extent at any rate.

The motion to suspend the order of business was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. CLEMENS presented the petition of Whitemarsh B. Seabrook, Joseph Whaley, and others, praying payment for military service during the last war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a petition of Charles Wilkes, William P. Elliot, and others, praying to be allowed for damages sustained in consequence of the alterations made in the grade of North Capitol street, in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

Mr. BRADBURY presented a petition of citizens of Gotham, Maine, praying an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented a memorial of the Board of Trustees of the Memphis Hospital, praying that the lot of ground in that city known as the arsenal, may be granted to the Memphis Hospital; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of James C. Doane, praying to be allowed fishing bounty for the schooner "Ursula," abandoned at sea, in consequence of injuries received in a gale; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MALLORY presented the petition of the administrator of Isaac L. Battle, deceased, praying that the estate of said Battle may be released from liability as security of Matthews and King; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GWIN presented a memorial of citizens of the town and county of Santa Cruz, California, praying the erection of a light-house at or near that town; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. MILLER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Mary Brognard, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Ambrose W. Thompson, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORT FROM STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Seneca G. Simmons, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS BY MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

The engrossed bill to amend and extend the provisions of an act approved July 29, 1846, entitled "An act in relation to the payment of claims," came up on its third reading.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, my attention was called to this bill when we were acting upon it yesterday, and I took some little exception to its provisions. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate by stating objections which I have to the bill. Since that time, I have looked into it, and it occurs to me, that if the friends of the bill wish to accomplish the objects designed, and which I think are highly laudable, this bill is altogether insufficient to do it. I think that some of its provisions are exceedingly objectionable, and that some other of its provisions do not meet the case which it is designed to meet. I would, therefore, be glad if the bill should lie over until Monday, and then I shall suggest an amendment, which I hope the Senate will adopt. If, however, it is the pleasure of the Senate to consider it now, I wish to make some remarks upon the subject, assigning my reasons for the course which I intend to take; but I ask for this indulgence, as I believe no evil can possibly grow out of it, and I will, in the mean time, confer with the members of the Committee on Claims, and tell them why it is that I object to the bill in its present shape, and why I think it is insufficient to accomplish the objects in view. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Monday next.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have no objections to accommodate the honorable Senator from Kentucky, but I am well convinced that the bill is right as it stands.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

COURTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BRADBURY. I ask the Senate to take up and put upon its passage, a bill which was under consideration on Friday last, providing for the holding of the district court in this district in case of the sickness or other disability of the district judge. An amendment has been prepared which meets all the objections to the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRADBURY moved to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "court," and inserting the following:

To the assistant judges of the circuit court of said District, it shall be the duty of the senior assistant judge to hold the district court aforesaid, and discharge all the judicial duties of the district judge who shall be sick, or otherwise disabled, as aforesaid, so long as such sickness or disability shall continue; and in case of the sickness or other disability of said senior judge, the same duty shall devolve on the junior assistant judge of said circuit court. And the said judges, and each of them, are hereby authorized to exercise original jurisdiction in admiralty cases for the purposes of this act; and all the acts and proceedings in said district court, by or before either of said assistant judges so required to hold the said district court, shall have the same force, effect, and validity, as if done and transacted by or before the district judge of said district court.

The bill, in its original form, provides, that in case of the sickness or disability of the district judge of the District of Columbia, and upon that fact being certified by the clerk of the district court to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Chief Justice shall designate and appoint the district judge of one of the adjoining districts to hold the district court in this District. The amendment proposes to strike out the provision which follows the word court, which is italicized above, and insert the words of Mr. BRADBURY's amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was subsequently read a third time and passed.

MOBILE AND GIRARD RAILROAD.

On the motion of Mr. CLEMENS, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill granting the right of way and making a donation of land to the State of Alabama, in aid of the construction of the Mobile and Girard Railroad; and having been amended so as to make it conform to similar bills heretofore passed, it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

FLORIDA, ATLANTIC, AND GULF RAILROAD.

On the motion of Mr. MALLORY, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill granting the right of way to the Florida, Atlantic, and Gulf Central Railroad Company through the public lands of the United States, and to appropriate lands to the State of Florida in aid of the construction of said railroad and branches; and having been amended so as to conform to the preceding bill, it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

SECURITY OF PASSENGERS.

Mr. GEYER laid upon the table, informally, sundry amendments, which were ordered to be printed, which he intends to offer to the bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam."

RULES OF THE SENATE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolutions submitted by Mr. BADGER, on the 29th of April, to amend the rules of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the thirtieth rule for conducting the business of the Senate be amended by inserting after the word "session" the following:

"Or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate."

Resolved further, That the following be added to the rules of the Senate:

"A motion to suspend, or to concur in a resolution of the House to suspend the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules, or either of them, shall always be in order, and shall be decided without debate."

The proposition is to make the rule read thus:

30. No amendment, proposing additional appropriations, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate, during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate.

The sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules, referred to in the second proposed amendment, are as follows:

16. No bill that shall have passed one House shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the three last days of the session.

17. No bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall be presented to the President of the United States, for his approbation, on the last day of the session.

Mr. BADGER. I will modify the second resolution. I find that there is a rule of the Senate to which it will come in properly as an addition. I propose to modify it so as to read "Resolved, That the following be added to the 26th rule of the Senate."

I will also modify the proposed amendment by adding after the words "shall always be in order," the words "be immediately considered and."

Mr. WALKER. What is the 30th rule?

Mr. BADGER. I will explain the effect of my resolutions. The 30th rule is the rule which was adopted during the last Congress, which provides that no amendment making an appropriation shall be moved to any general appropriation bill, unless it is to carry out some existing law or is founded upon an estimate from the head of a Department. I propose now to add "or moved by direction of a standing committee in the Senate." The object of it is to allow the standing committees of this body, who are charged with various subjects, military affairs, naval affairs, &c., when they deem an amendment proper to an appropriation bill, to direct it to be moved: that is all.

The other amendment of the rules I presume Senators will understand at once. The sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules prevent the sending from the one House to the other, on the last three days of the session, any bill, and also the sending to the President of the United States, for approval, on the three last days of the session, any bill.

The consequence of this is well known to all gentlemen who have been here for two or three years.

We have got, now, in the habit of passing all the important business of the Senate and the House during the last three days of the session. The consequence of the present state of the rule is, that if a bill has been ever so well considered and matured in the Senate, and has been passed upon either of the last three days of the session, we cannot get it to the House of Representatives in order to have their sense upon it. So, if a bill, however well considered, has passed both Houses, we cannot get it to the President of the United States for his approval, because a motion to suspend the rules, if objected to, being in the nature of a resolution, has to lie over a day, and because it is a motion that is subject to debate, and any gentleman, if he thinks proper to do so, can prevent a bill going to the President on the last three days of the session, by simply consuming time in debate. That is the effect of the rule, as it is at present.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina if, practically, the rule ever led to any such result? and if, in practice, it ever occasioned any difficulty in getting a bill through?

Mr. BADGER. Undoubtedly. We had a practical illustration of it at the close of the last Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can give the gentleman from New Hampshire a practical illustration. At the last session, we passed a bill for the relief of the American Colonization Society. I believe that bill passed on the last day of the session. A motion was made to suspend the rule, in order to send that bill to the President. It was objected to by a gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. DAVIS,] no longer a member of this body; but, by some means or other, the bill got to the President, and he signed it, it having been passed by both Houses. The question has since come up whether it is a law, in consequence of its having got there and being approved irregularly. I suppose that it is a law, having been approved by both Houses and by the President. But that bill reached the President against the rule; and the question still exists whether that bill is, or is not, the law of the land. These are facts, which answer the case suggested by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

I recollect another thing. We had the river and harbor bill up at the last session. If that bill had been passed during the latter days of the session, the rule would never have been suspended, although the bill had been debated night after night. It was ultimately surrendered by its friends in this body, because if it had been passed it would have been impossible to get it before the President. I therefore hope there will be no difficulty whatever in modifying the rules according to the suggestions of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HUNTER. Would it be in order to offer another amendment to the 30th rule of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT. It would be in order to offer an amendment to add to it.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I should like to have this addition made; and if it be made, I shall have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina:

But no estimate shall be considered as coming within this rule unless it is accompanied by a recommendation for a corresponding appropriation by the head of the Department who makes the estimate.

I wish to require a recommendation as well as an estimate before amendments, making additional appropriations, can be offered to appropriation bills.

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection to that amendment. It is all right; but I would suggest to the Senator from Virginia, that it would be better to modify his proposition by adding after the word "estimate" the words "accompanied by a recommendation for an appropriation."

Mr. HUNTER. I am willing to modify it in that way.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition cannot be received as an amendment in that shape.

Mr. BADGER. I would suggest to the Senator from Virginia that he can propose his amendment after my proposition shall have been disposed of.

Mr. HUNTER. Very well, sir.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am very unwilling to see the least innovation made upon the rules of this body, without understanding wherein they are to be altered. It occurs to me that the harmony of our rules is very much dependent one upon another. I have no doubt there are important changes that might be made. The question I think was before the Senate at the last session, and was referred to a committee, of which I believe the honorable Senator from North Carolina was a member. I think the committee never acted.

Mr. BADGER. The gentleman is mistaken. There was no committee raised for the general revision of the rules; but there was a select committee raised on a particular amendment to the rules which I offered, of which the Senator from Indiana, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS,] and myself were members.

Mr. BRIGHT. That committee was appointed; but I think the committee never performed the duty assigned to it.

Mr. BADGER. O, yes we did.

Mr. BRIGHT. There was a change made in our rules a year or two ago, whereby it was declared out of order for amendments, proposing additional appropriations, to be offered to the civil and diplomatic, and other general appropriation bills, unless they were made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and absolutely prohibiting amendments whose object was to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate. The object of that amendment to the rules was to prevent private claims, one after another, at the close of the session, being put upon the civil and diplomatic bill at a time when members could have no opportunity of judging of the merits of the measures presented. I approved that change then, as I do now.

Mr. BADGER. I do not propose to alter that portion of the rule.

Mr. BRIGHT. I think the rule as it stands is a very wholesome one, and one well calculated to prevent the passage of claims without mature deliberation. It may be that the change proposed by the honorable Senator from North Carolina is correct. If he says it is so, I should feel very much inclined to think that it was so; but I see no necessity for acting upon it immediately, and therefore I would be glad if it should be passed over until I could have an opportunity of looking somewhat into it.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the matter will not be passed over. The proposed amendment to the rules is a very simple one, and there is not a member of this body who cannot understand the effect of it in two seconds. The amendment is to authorize additional appropriations to be moved in relation to public matters, by the direction of any one of the standing committees of this body. If the standing committees of this body are not to be intrusted with the consideration of the propriety of moving such amendments, and cannot offer them, I pray you, where is the Senate in regard to these appropriation bills? They originate in the House of Representatives. The committees of that House put what amendments they please upon them. They come here to the Senate, and, though every standing committee of ours may concur in the propriety of making an amendment, and though every member of this body may concur in its propriety, you cannot move an amendment making an additional appropriation. Now, if the Senator from Indiana is willing to sit here as a mere register of the decrees of the House of Representatives, I am not. Before the committee of which I have the honor to be a member, we have large and important subjects connected with the public interests committed to us. It is our duty to examine into them. It is our duty to see what we think proper to be done with respect to them. While I make no objection to a rule which precludes any individual Senator proposing these amendments, I think it is hard, unjust, and injurious to the public service, and invades the just prerogatives of this body when the standing committees cannot propose, for the consideration of the Senate, an appropriation which they think the public interests of the country require.

This resolution has not been sprung upon the Senate. It has been lying upon the table for more than a week. I have waited patiently. I have put it off from day to day, and it seems to me that the sense of the Senate should be ascertained by this time. If they are disposed to adopt the amendment to the rules, I hope it will not be postponed. But if they are not, I shall submit to their authority, as I always do. I bow to the will of the majority. That is my doctrine.

Mr. BRIGHT. I asked for the postponement of this subject for the reason that I before had not had my attention called to it, having been absent. As I said before, it may be all very correct, but I should be glad to have an opportunity of looking at the change proposed, and comparing it with the other rules; but if the Senator wishes to press his motion now, of course I shall not object.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator from Indiana wishes to examine the matter, I would ask the Senate to take up the deficiency bill, as it is now one o'clock. We can then take up the resolution on Monday during the morning hour.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to say that I have no personal interest in the matter, and that individually, I care not whether the alteration is made or not. I proposed it as a member of this body. I believed, and I had no doubt that it would, meet the unanimous concurrence of the Senate. I did not believe that our rules were like Scripture, as the Senator from Indiana seems to suppose, absolutely perfect and incapable of amendment. I did not suppose that they had that beautiful harmony and symmetry which he seems to think they possess.

Mr. HUNTER. It is now one o'clock. I think we had better take up the deficiency bill. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of the resolution till Monday.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I wish it was in such a condition that I could vote for the repeal of the entire thirtieth rule, for I look upon it as a perfectly ridiculous one. In the first place, no gentleman here representing a sovereign State can get up and offer a single amendment to an appropriation bill that appropriates a single dollar for any object, however important, urgent, and necessary, unless he first goes, bowing and scraping, and asks the sanction of the head of a Department. That is the condition in which the thirtieth rule leaves us. I will never make such an application—I will never ask the head of a Department for leave to propose anything here which I may deem necessary and proper for the public service, or for the advantages of my own State. Now, according to this amendment, in place of going to the head of a Department for his sanction to do anything here, we would only require the leave of a committee. Sir, is not a committee of this Senate to be as much trusted as the head of a Department? The fact is, the whole rule goes upon a reasoning entirely degrading to the Senate. It supposes that members of the Senate will propose here measures that are injurious to the public interests, and it is supposing besides, that here, from a want of capacity, or from inattention, a majority of the Senate would be found to sanction such abuses; and in order to put ourselves under guardianship, we are required to go, cap in hand, and ask some head of a Department whether we shall offer an amendment to an appropriation bill. Now, when we ask to be relieved from this degrading position, and to make our respects to a committee of five of our own body, it seems we are to be refused even that.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas does not understand this rule which he is criticising so severely. I do not understand that no member can offer an amendment unless he shows an estimate from the head of a Department, or that it was designed to give the Department that sort of supervision over the conduct of our business. The design of the rule was to place the business here as it stands in the other House. It was supposed that the Committee on Finance, like the Committee on Ways and Means in the House, ought only to report appropriations for the purpose of carrying out existing laws, or for the purpose of sustaining estimates founded upon law; and the provision in the rule in relation to estimates, was intended to give to an administration which was in the minority a chance of presenting its measures. I acknowledge that by construction the rule has been somewhat abused; but I propose to offer an amendment which will remedy it, to require that every estimate shall be accompanied by a positive recommendation before it can be the foundation of an amendment. I have not opposed the amendment to the rule proposed by the Senator from North Carolina. On the contrary, I signified my disposition to acquiesce in it, provided we could also obtain this other amendment which I have suggested. I believe that the rule is a most salutary and wholesome one, and that so far from having the tendency which the Senator from Texas intimates, it is rather respectful to the other committees, for it throws all the origination of new business into the hands of the appropriate committees, and takes it from the Finance Committee.

Mr. ATCHISON. Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from Texas. If I understand the matter aright, the thirtieth rule is an interpolation into the rules as they formerly stood. If I can obtain my object by moving to strike out all of this resolution after the word "resolved," and inserting a proposition to rescind the thirtieth rule, I shall do so. The old rules, as they stood, left it discretionary with the Senate. Any member of the Senate might offer an amendment to an appropriation bill. It was then a matter of discretion with the Senate whether they would sustain the proposition or reject it, the same as if it were an amendment offered to any other bill. I wish to get back to the old rules. I do not want the intervention of a committee. I do not desire to be shackled, even by a committee. If it would be in order, I would move to strike out all of the first resolution of the Senator from North Carolina, after the word "Resolved," and insert, "that the thirtieth rule be, and it is hereby rescinded."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope that proposition will prevail. I think my friend from Indiana is the last gentleman in this body who ought to object to it. If I recollect rightly, it was upon his motion, without the sanction of a committee—without any report from a committee—without any recommendation from a Department—that he obtained, under the old order of things, an appropriation to purchase a site for a marine hospital at Evansville. I joined with him most heartily, and the proposition was carried, proceeding entirely from his own motion. Now, I think that the rest of us who represent States, ought to have the privilege, if anything interesting to our States occur, and we shall have the ability and power to convince the Senate of the propriety of its adoption, to bring forward any proposition, and submit it to the calm consideration of the Senate. I want that privilege for myself, and I hope, therefore, that the proposition of the Senator from Missouri will prevail.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, when I objected to the consideration of this proposition this morning, I stated that I did it without understanding really the merits of the question presented by the Senator from North Carolina, and that I only objected for the reason that I desired time lest the harmony of our rules might be marred by this interpolation. I recollect very well that when the present thirtieth rule of the Senate was offered by the honorable Senator from Virginia as an amendment, it was hailed all over the Senate Chamber as a rule calculated to prevent improper legislation. At the close of every session, previously, each member who had had a claim here that had failed upon its merits, sought at the last hours of the session to fasten it upon some general appropriation bill. In that way were carried through private claims that had not merit within themselves to be carried through by themselves. I say that, when the honorable Senator from Virginia introduced this rule, it was hailed all over the Chamber as a valuable and healthy amendment, and so I think it yet.

One word now in reply to the honorable Senator from Kentucky. It appears that he will never lose sight of the small appropriation which I got for his neighboring town of Evansville.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I united with you in getting it. I am glad of it.

Mr. BRIGHT. That appropriation was not affected by this rule. It was an appropriation that had been estimated for and recommended by a Department, and therefore did not come within the provisions of the rule. The object of the rule, as I before remarked, is to exclude private claims. If this rule be repealed, it throws us back where we were before, and puts us in a position that private claims may become laws by being attached to the civil and diplomatic bill. To that I am opposed, and I shall oppose any change that gives the privilege of fastening private bills upon bills for public appropriations. It was for the purpose of looking into the proposed amendment, and seeing how far the other rules would be affected by it, that I asked for delay. It is, however, a matter in which I feel no particular interest.

Mr. BADGER. I have already said to the honorable Senator from Indiana, that if he would have the rule read as proposed to be amended, he would see that it leaves totally untouched that provision of the thirtieth rule, which excludes any private claim from being offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill. I wish the Secretary would read the thirtieth rule as proposed to be amended.

It was accordingly read.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the proposition of the Senator from Missouri will prevail. I imagine that it is perfectly safe to trust to the discretion of the Senate against putting private claims upon public bills. If it is not, we can very easily provide a rule which shall provide for that mischief, if mischief it be. But, sir, the illustration furnished by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, shows the ridiculousness of this rule. I believe he said that a marine hospital was necessary at Evansville, Indiana. It was necessary. I voted for it myself. Suppose now that a necessity existed also for marine hospitals at various other points. Suppose it became necessary for me to have an appropriation for a marine hospital at Galveston, and suppose the honorable Senator wanted another in Indiana—suppose he is in the good graces of the heads of the Departments, and gets a recommendation for the passage of his, and I cannot procure it for mine: there are two cases of equal merit, and one Senator, because he does not happen to be in the good graces of the head of a Department, is precluded from offering his amendment, and from asking the Senate to pass upon it.

Mr. BERRIEN. Mr. President, we all recollect the embarrassments which attended the practice of moving amendments to appropriation bills at the very close of the session. The situation of the chairman of the Committee on Finance was an extremely embarrassing one. Under the ancient practice, amendments were moved in rapid succession, and were acted upon necessarily without due consideration. It was for the purpose of avoiding that embarrassment that the 30th rule, which has just been read, and which it is now proposed to modify, was adopted. But it seems to me that that rule may very well be susceptible of the modification which is proposed by the Senator from North Carolina without subjecting us to the embarrassments which resulted from the ancient practice; and that such a modification of the rule will provide for the difficulty which is suggested by the Senator from Texas. The object which we have in view is to prevent the presentation to the Senate in the last hours of a session of amendments to appropriation bills. The desire which is expressed by the Senator from Missouri and by the Senator from Texas is, that the Senate should reserve to itself the right of exercising its discretion without being dependent upon the head of a Department. Both these objects, it seems to me, may be accomplished by the proposed modification. The Senator from Texas will not be under the necessity of going to the head of a Department for the purpose of getting an estimate, but, at the same time, he will protect the Senate from being called upon, unadvisedly, to act upon an amendment in the very closing hours of a session, by going to the appropriate committee of this body, there making a representation of his desires, and obtaining an investigation before that committee, and then report in favor of the amendment. Thus the Senator will be relieved from the embarrassments which he suggests, the Senate will be relieved from the difficulty of having amendments presented at the very closing scenes of a session, and we shall be enabled to act advisedly and prudently.

At present there is a difficulty. We have, in our anxious desire to avoid the evils which resulted from the ancient practice, carried the restriction, as I think, too far. As it appears to me, we ought to have provided that, when a subject has undergone the deliberate investigation of a committee of this body, their report should be equivalent to an estimate by the head of a Department. That is the effect of the modification proposed by the Senator from North Carolina. I trust, therefore, that the substitute, which proposes the total repeal of the rule, will not receive the acquiescence of the Senate, but that the modification proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be adopted.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall vote for the proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri without reference to the merits of the rule which it proposes to strike out, but for the reason that I think that the rule, as it stands, is wholly inoperative, and I am unwilling to see standing, as one of the rules of the Senate, a provision which is not regarded by the action of the Senate. I think I have seen the rule disregarded in every one of its provisions, over and over again, and recently in a very striking case. If it could be executed, so as to answer the purpose for which it was originally intended, I should be for retaining it where it is. But, as I am unwilling to see laws upon the statute-book, as provisions, set down as rules of the Senate, which are not operative, staring us in the face, and which are, in my opinion, daily violated and disregarded, I shall vote for rescinding them.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senate, that, on looking at the rule, he finds that the proposition of the honorable Senator from North Carolina being one to amend the rules, the question must first be taken upon it. If the proposition to amend the rule is rejected, it will then be in the power of the honorable Senator from Missouri to move to repeal the rule altogether. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution proposing to amend the thirtieth rule, which has been offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to ascertain whether the amendment of the honorable Senator from North Carolina would enable a committee to recommend a private claim?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir; it does not relate to that portion of the rule.

The first resolution, relative to the amendment of the thirtieth rule, was adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose this would be the proper time for me to submit my proposition to amend the thirtieth rule.

The PRESIDENT. That amendment cannot be received but by unanimous consent. The Senator from Virginia wishes to offer an amendment to the rules. Not having given notice of it, and not having laid it upon the table, it will require general consent to receive the amendment; and, if it is received, it will then be for the Senate to adopt it or reject it.

Mr. CLEMENS. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT. Then the Senator from Virginia can lay upon the table his resolution to amend the rule.

Mr. HALE. I want to vote upon the proposition of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri make a proposition to repeal the thirtieth rule?

Mr. ATCHISON. I do, if it is in order.

Mr. BRADBURY. That will lie over.

The PRESIDENT. If the Senator will send to the Chair a proposition of that kind it will lie over for one day under the rules.

Mr. ATCHISON. Then I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT. It will be better for the Senator from Virginia to introduce a resolution to amend the rule which he suggested, so that it can be taken up at a subsequent day, if it is desired.

Mr. HUNTER. I will offer it at another time, as I wish to proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. BADGER. I ask for the question on my second resolution.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair overlooked the fact that another resolution was offered by the Senator from North Carolina, proposing to amend the twenty-sixth rule of the Senate.

The amendment to the twenty-sixth rule was agreed to.

The twenty-sixth and thirtieth rules, therefore, now stand as follows:

26. Every bill shall receive three readings previous to its being passed, and the President shall give notice at each, whether it be the first, second, or third; such readings shall be on three different days, unless the Senate unanimously direct otherwise. And all resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution, or to which the approbation and signature of the President may be requisite, or which may grant money out of the contingent or any other fund, shall be treated, in all respects, in the introduction and forms of proceedings on them in the Senate, in a similar manner with bills; and all other resolutions shall lie on the table one day for consideration, and also reports of committees. And a motion to suspend, or to concur in a resolution of the House to suspend, the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules, or either of them, shall always be in order, be immediately considered, and decided without debate.

30. No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852." The Committee on Finance propose to insert the following:

For additional compensation for increasing the transportation of the United States mail between New York and Liverpool, in the Collins line of steamers, to twenty-six trips per annum, at such times as shall be directed by the Postmaster General, and in conformity to his last annual report to Congress, and his letter of the 15th of November last to the Secretary of the Navy, commencing said increased service on the first of January, 1852, at the rate of $33,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance, the sum of $236,500.

The pending question was the motion of Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, to amend the amendment by striking out $33,000 and inserting $25,000.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, I desire to address to the Senate some observations upon the pending question, and I may as well do it at this state of the progress of the bill as at any other time. I have been a good deal embarrassed by this proposition—more so than I usually am by the subjects presented for the consideration of the Senate.

In the first place, I have a great objection to the insertion of this provision in the deficiency bill, which is a bill providing for existing deficiencies; that is to say, for deficiencies arising out of the existing laws, where appropriations have not been made, or have failed. That bill was asked for by the proper departments; they submitted the necessary estimates, corresponding with the nature of the bill. They did not submit an estimate for this application. It was not an existing deficiency. It was not the deficiency of an appropriation for an object warranted by law. It was a new contract, or, rather, an addition to an old one—a conditional arrangement, entered into between the Post Office Department and the owners of these vessels. It was to become obligatory only when approved by Congress; and, therefore, no appropriation could be considered, as a deficiency, till such approval took place. Besides, I thought the attempt to ingraft this appropriation upon this bill would delay the action of Congress—would delay measures that seemed to be essential to the public service, some of them, indeed, to the public faith, and, perhaps, ultimately hazard the bill in the House of Representatives. I am not yet satisfied that it will not thus be put to hazard; but the Senate have overruled me in this opinion. We have taken a vote, and have decided that this is a proper place for the appropriation. I shall submit. We have spent three weeks upon the subject. Three weeks have been devoted to the consideration of this question alone. I am, therefore, unwilling to see all that time thrown away, and the subject again commenced, to go through the same discussion, in another bill, and in another part of the session.

Under these circumstances, I shall make no further objection to the insertion of this provision in this appropriation bill.

But, sir, I had other difficulties, besides the difficulty of position. I did not fully understand the subject. It involves, in some measure, a great experiment. I did not foresee, nor do I now foresee, accurately, all its operations. It embraces a great many very important considerations, requiring the deliberate action of Congress, and the deliberate opinion of the country, before it is adopted as one of the settled measures of our policy.

I listened with much attention and interest, as I always do, to what fell from the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] chairman of the Finance Committee, upon this subject. I congratulate the Senate and the country, that we have at the head of that important committee a gentleman, as willing as he is able to look into the expenditures of the country, to try them by the test of public utility, to restrain, as far as he can, that disposition, which seems inherent in every Government, to increase its expenses, and to substitute profusion, where it exists, for a wise economy. I coincide with him in much that he said upon this occasion; and particularly do I agree with him in the general views he presented in relation to this branch of the subject; and I was happy to hear the patriotic sentiments that fell from him.

Sir, I have been apprehensive, that this system of steamboat legislation would be carried too far. I have been apprehensive that, however valuable it might be in some respects, it might, from a natural predisposition, be pushed further than the public interests required. Our statute-book furnishes instances of legislation for particular individuals in relation to subjects of this nature, as well as to others. It is a vicious practice—a system to be deprecated. I was myself, therefore, anxious to apply an efficient remedy, because it takes from the Executive Departments the responsibility that properly belong to them. When you assume such a responsibility in Congress, it is divided among three hundred men; so that the share which falls to each of them is but a feeble check to inconsiderate legislation. The object of a Legislature should be to prescribe measures required by the policy of the country, and to leave to the proper Departments to carry them into effect, holding them responsible for the execution of their duties, and taking care to watch with jealous caution that the objects are faithfully carried out. It is the proper duty of a Legislature to legislate, and not to administer the Government. Sir, you know, and we all know, that there is a great external pressure in favor of all subjects of this kind; and it should be guarded against and resisted with ceaseless vigilance, or it will in time acquire an ascendancy, injurious to the best interests of the country.

The very subject of controversy now before us shows, in a marked degree, the danger of legislative interference with such matters in detail. The question, with respect to the amount that should be paid for this mail service, is a question more of administration than of legislation. We are scarcely in possession of the necessary facts to enable us to come to a decision free from doubt. No man can say that there is no doubt upon the subject. We decide as we best can under the circumstances, in which we are placed. Such matters should be thoroughly investigated by the proper Department, where all the facts should be carefully examined and ascertained, and the result should be reported to Congress under the responsibility of the proper officers, and that report may then safely be taken as the ground-work of our proceedings. But, in the present case, that course is precluded by our own action.

I do not intend to enter into the financial view of the question. It would require a greater knowledge of the details than I possess, and more time than I choose to employ in taxing the patience of the Senate. The subject has been before two of our most important standing committees, and their opinions they have made known to us, and the subject has been debated and discussed in this body for many days. Every member, I suppose, at this time is prepared to express his opinion in relation to it. One fact, however, seems to be certain, if we can depend upon the opinions of gentlemen of our body, every way competent to form a judgment, and entitled, by their character and position, to our full confidence, and that is, that this has proved an unprofitable investment. We are told by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. JAMES,] who, I perceive from his judicious remarks, understands the subject fully, that the stock of this company may be bought in the market for fifty per cent., or one half of its par value. Every man knows, that there is no better barometer of the financial atmosphere, than the prices of stocks. There are few things more sensitive than the operation of the stock exchange. A permanent fall in the price of property in market, then, is an unerring indication, that such fall has been preceded by a proportionate decline in such property. You may take it for granted, that if this stock has gone down to fifty per cent. in the public estimation, it has fallen to that low price because the adventure has been a losing one. I suppose there is no doubt but that this line will be discontinued, unless this conditional arrangement, made by the Post Office Department, be confirmed by Congress. Such is the information communicated to us by the committees, and not contradicted, so far as I know, by any one. So that the question before us involves the fate of the enterprise, and if the application is rejected, the American line will be withdrawn, and all competition on our part abandoned.

There are peculiar considerations connected with this line, to which I shall presently advert, and which do not attach to any other steamboat line, in which the Government is interested. Therefore, what I have to say will relate to this one alone. I leave the others out of view. I pledge myself to aid none of them; and I must say here, in my place, that before I vote to extend additional aid to any other line, there must be very strong considerations presented for my action, such as I do not perceive nor foresee. I would not extend the system any further, till the result is ascertained by actual experiment, and it is ascertained that the interests of the country require that this provision for naval armaments should be continued and enlarged.

It has been said, and I suppose the fact is so, that the receipts for postage will, to a considerable degree, diminish the outlay of the Government for this line. These receipts have already reached a heavy amount; and we all know, from the nature of business in our country, that the intercommunication between us and Europe will go on increasing in a very rapid ratio. It has been so, and it will be so in this, as in all other enterprises. I suppose the time may be fairly anticipated, and soon, too, when the whole expenditure called for by this measure may be met from the postages; or if not the whole, a very large portion of it.

I observed yesterday, in looking over an extract from one of the French papers, that a proposition for a similar object has been submitted to the French Government by a company at Havre. That proposition is to establish a line of steamships from Havre to New York, consisting of three boats. The offer made to the French Government is, to perform the mail service for a million of francs, each boat, annually. This would give, as near as may be, $200,000 for each boat. Applying this sum to the Collins boats, it would give them about $1,000,000, as there are to be five hereafter employed.

Mr. BADGER. There are but four steam-ships on this line.

Mr. CASS. I understand, from the chairman of the Naval Committee, that if this arrangement is made, the owners will be compelled to add another vessel. Therefore, if we have five boats, it will require $1,000,000 a year, calculating at the rate offered to the French Government, and which I suppose, will be accepted.

Mr. BADGER. Those ships are only half the tonnage of this line.

Mr. CASS. I do not know how that is, as I think the tonnage was not stated in the article I read. There was one objection to the proposition before us, urged both by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] and the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] who, although at antipodes upon the principle of the objection, agreed fully as to its practical effect; one gentleman, however, contending that it went too far, and the other that it did not go far enough; and most extraordinary, indeed, to my mind, were the views thus urged. Both these gentlemen said this was a measure of protection, as though it involved the principles of the tariff. Well, sir, it is a question of protection—of high, and important, and holy protection, in the best sense of the term—the protection of our country, of our expatriated seamen, of our commerce, of our interests, of our honor, of our soil, of all that gives dignity and character to nations, protection against defeat, disgrace, and dishonor. That is the protection, which this measure will give, should the experiment be successful. And I am unwilling to abandon it upon mere conjectural objections, till its failure is ascertained by a sufficient trial. If established it will enable us to make such an addition to the Navy as might be necessary at the least possible cost—a Navy, whose great objects we all know, and whose great feats are felt with pride by every American heart. Why, the honorable gentleman may as well tell us that because in time of war you send out armed ships to act as convoys to protect your commercial marine against belligerent cruisers, that is protection; and that if you were to leave your merchant ships a prey to the enemy, neutral powers would do the carrying trade and thus save you from these expensive armaments; that if protection cost anything it should be abandoned, and our commerce swept from the face of the ocean; that other nations may do their business and our own. There is no place in an American heart for such a sentiment, any more than there is in the true view of national interest and honor. This question has no connection with a protective tariff. It rests on other and higher considerations. It is a question of defense. It is an experiment we are making, and which other nations are making, to ascertain how the most efficient military marine can be maintained at the least expense to the public revenue. It may prove a failure; I do not say it will not. But I do say I am not prepared to reject a plan, recommended by so much practical intelligence, a trial of which we have already commenced, without carrying that trial to some reasonable result. It seeks the solution of a question of national defense, vitally interesting to us now, and still more in the times that are coming. It has no more connection with a protective tariff than has the building of your ships of the line. I repeat, if the experiment is a successful one it will provide, to a considerable extent, for the establishment of a self-supporting Navy. In my opinion, if it turns out as many anticipate, it will be one of the most important advances ever made in the policy of a country. Instead of the enormous expense of a Navy, everywhere proverbial, it would enable us to provide an active and adequate military marine of certain useful classes, I do not mean of all, which would be at the service of the country whenever its exigencies required, and which in the mean time could be supported and kept in proper order at a comparative small cost to the public. Thus would be solved one of the most important questions, that belong to the practical operations of governments in our day.

The honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] seemed to consider the establishment of this line as a partial and exclusive benefit to New York, and that equal justice would require similar favors should be extended to other points; I do not know whether to all or to which of them, upon the principle that we should act with the same impartiality towards every portion of the Union. That principle is a just one in all matters of general legislation, and no Government should depart from it. But where particular objects are required for the public service, and the selection of particular places, where those objects can be best attained, in such cases it is impossible, that all places can share alike in the accidental benefits that may result from the measure. You cannot put a dock-yard everywhere. You cannot put a mint everywhere, a naval hospital, a fort, an arsenal, or a capitol. But are you therefore to put them nowhere? I repeat, that so far as a Government can, it is bound to confer equal benefits on all; but in the administration of every Government, there are necessary positions to which certain objects must be confined. Everybody cannot have a county seat at his door; nor a bridge, nor an important road; but are we therefore to abandon all these objects, because they incidentally confer greater advantages upon some points than on others? The question is not whether the establishment of this line is peculiarly advantageous to New York, but whether New York is the proper terminus, having relation to the public service and interest. Whether it is the place whence these vessels should go, and to which they should return. Well, I suppose, looking at the communication between this country and Europe, if we are to have this line—and this is the only one that now engages my attention—no gentleman will deny that New York is the proper place for its establishment.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the Senator whether I understood him correctly. Did he say that he would vote against aid to all other lines? I so understood him.

Mr. CASS. I did not say that. But I will say that, according to my present impressions, I should vote against any additional compensation to any other line, under any circumstances, unless there are much stronger considerations presented, than I am now aware of. So far as respects the pledge of Congress to other lines, I shall vote to carry it out. But so far as there is no pledge, I hold myself perfectly uncommitted, with a strong leaning against the extension of the system. I maintain and repeat, that there are no other lines in operation which, to my mind, can compare with this in their claims to public support. I am not now speaking of steam-vessels, employed to carry the mail upon public notices from the Department, where competition is insured in the usual manner. That is a mode of proceeding, which removes all fears of partiality or extravagance.

If the line we have established between this country and England should be now abandoned, I take it for granted, that the business would be done by the British line. In that event the postal treaty would probably be terminated by notice, which each Government has the right to give, and the postage would be raised at least as high as it was before the reduction occasioned by the results of competition. The same freights of valuable goods would be carried as now, but at enhanced rates of transportation. Therefore, in a financial point of view, it seems to me, that there are many considerations that weigh against the abandonment of this line.

But, sir, one of the most important questions that belong to modern times must be solved before long; and that is, the change that will be introduced into warlike naval operations by the application of steam. No man knows what is to be its effect. We can foresee that a great change must come. There are signs enough of that. But how and to what extent this mighty power is to operate in the maritime contests of the world, is matter of conjecture, rather than of experience. The most careless observer can see that an impending revolution is at hand, but the wisest is baffled in the practical solution of the problem; we cannot foretell what will be its effect upon the operation of fleets, upon the blockading of ports, upon the attack of places, or upon the various objects to be attained by hostile squadrons, by detached cruisers, or by roving privateers. Under these circumstances it becomes to us a matter of vast importance to be prepared for the results, whatever these may be. I consider it by far the most momentous question, that has arisen in the science of war, since the invention of gunpowder. The experiment has been tried on a small scale on the coasts of Syria and China, but the operations there were not of fleets and ships against fleets and ships, nor one civilized power against another, but ships against batteries unskillfully defended, ships penetrating into the Chinese ports and others attacking the Syrian coast. But enough has transpired to show, that a new and most formidable element of destruction is about to mingle itself in the contests of nations, and which will operate with destructive energy upon their future belligerent communications.

No man can have any difficulty in foretelling that the next general maritime war, which breaks out in Europe, will present features in its operations, more important, perhaps, than the world has yet seen. No one knows when war will come. All, indeed, know the unsettled condition of the old hemisphere; know that it is a volcano, and that an eruption may break out at any moment. During the interval between the departure and the arrival of one of these very steam-ships, a general war upon sea and land may be kindled in Europe; the general conflagration may ultimately extend to our continent, and involve us in its fearful calamities. It becomes us, then, to be ready. The practical question arises: what kind of preparation should we make? The experience of our own country has shown, and the genius of our people would have taught us without the experiment, that we are unwilling to make extensive preparations, involving large expenditures, unless the crisis requiring them is almost upon us.

We are not in the condition of the Governments of the Old World, placed in contact with one another, with numerous points of collision, and prone to hostilities, and where great military and naval arrangements have become almost a part of the political system. We are a young, an ardent, and an enterprising people, looking around with pride, and forward with confidence. Danger must be almost upon us, before we can realize its approach, and the necessity for the employment of great military means immediate, before we are willing to prepare them.

We rely upon ourselves for proper exertions when the trial comes, and our history shows, that that reliance is not a false one. Still, to a certain degree, every dictate of prudence requires, that some preparation should be made. It is very important to know how that can be effected with the least expense, and that is the very problem now before us.

I repeat what I said before: there are difficulties—doubts in relation to this matter. The experiment is in full operation. I am willing it should go on for a reasonable time, till we can form a more decided opinion, as to its results. A naval war, if we are engaged in one, will present peculiar features in its operations, applicable to the condition of few other maritime nations. I doubt very much whether this country will ever send heavy fleets to sea. I doubt whether we shall ever send out large vessels, operating in masses, except under some very peculiar circumstances, having relation to this hemisphere. It has been well said that fleets and colonies render each other necessary; but what should we do with a heavy fleet at sea? We ought to have the best prepared and the speediest cruisers in the world both heavy and light, some for our own coast and the neighboring seas, and others for more remote cruising stations, where the nature of the enemy's trade may enable us most easily to annoy their commerce.

But we can have no motive to equip powerful fleets to meet those of France or England, and to fight battles, whose results, even when successful, would leave us as we were; for there are no distant acquisitions for us to seek, no colonial dependencies to defend; and I do not believe that the most confident statesman in Europe dreams of sending fleets and armies to operate upon this country.

The proposition before us has been discussed as though but one single object in naval architecture were to be attained; as though we were to ascertain what was the heaviest ship, to which we could apply steam power with a useful result. That is not the object at all. Some of us seem to think that a certain model is to be sought; a model which is to unite in itself all the various properties, that are required for maritime operations. Why, sir, no such standard is possible: and for a very obvious reason. Purposes are sought in naval warfare, which require properties in vessels utterly incompatible with one another. You want a heavy ship to fight in line. You want frigates to detach on cruising service, and as dispatch vessels to carry orders. You want bomb-ships. You want ships for transport service, and for various other objects.

It is not easy—in fact it is utterly impossible—that any one model can be found, which shall unite all these advantages in one ship. You must consider the power of fighting, the speed of the vessels, their capacity for carrying coal, the security of their machinery. All these are elements of the calculation for each of the different classes.

In the event of a naval war between this country and a great maritime power in Europe, what are the assailable points, that we can attack? What are the objects, that we should seek to accomplish? In the first place, let me say, that we talk a great deal about banishing war from the earth. We have got peace societies, and very philanthropic men in our country, who confidently look forward to the near approach of universal and perpetual peace, when national hostilities will no longer come to add their woes to the other calamities incident to human nature.

I regret to say, that I have no faith in these anticipations. I desire universal peace, as fervently as any one; but my judgment overrules my wishes. I do not believe such a thing is possible. There must be an utter change in human nature, before these fond expectations can be realized. He, who made us as we are, must give us new passions, or new powers to control those we possess, before we achieve such a conquest over them. This period of universal peace may indeed come; but it will only come with that time foretold by prophecy, and foreseen by faith, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour; and when the reign of the Prince of Peace shall be established, to which time will bring no end. Till then, however the improving spirit of the age may diminish the contests of nations, it will not entirely prevent them.

Under these circumstances, what are we to do? Knowing that war must come; knowing that it will come; knowing that some day or other, sooner or later, it will overtake us, what are we to do? Like wise men, it becomes us to look our difficulties in the face. Modern commerce, the interchange of commodities between the nations of the earth, is important to their improvement and civilization. For some it is essential to their existence, or at any rate to the position, they occupy in the world. It is the very life-blood of English greatness and prosperity. Without it she would fall from that proud preëminence she has attained by many high qualities, which I know how to appreciate as well as any one, and which I have never denied to her. If she has not always employed them to a just and useful purpose, while we condemn her course, we shall find no nation in the world entirely free from a similar reproach. If her commerce should be broken up, she would be precipitated into an abyss of disaster and dishonor. Our object on the ocean, in the event of a war with England, would be to sweep her commerce from existence, and that is the only practical object we should seek to attain by our maritime operations. No man can expect to send a fleet and an army to London. Some men have proposed to send an army upon the Danube; but I was never one of them, though I have many times been charged with that extravagance; and the oftener it has been contradicted, like our old friend "noise and confusion," the oftener and more confidently it has been charged again. [Laughter.] Why Don Quixote was a wise man compared with him, who should propose to send a great belligerent armament to Europe, with a view to produce any serious impression upon the people and nations of the Old World. It cannot be done, sir. And the sooner such an idea is banished from every American head, whether in or out of an insane hospital—if, indeed, any one out of its walls can be found entertaining such a notion—the better it will be. What we want are ships, fitted for the purpose of annihilating the commercial marine of an enemy. And are the vessels composing the Collins line of that character? I understand they are, and better fitted for the purpose than any ships-of-the-line in the world. They have great speed; great power; great capacity for carrying coal, and could range the ocean almost unharmed in pursuit of foreign commerce. In the event of war we must not calculate much upon privateers. Before, in our other wars, they committed immense destruction upon the trade of the enemy. But now the building and equipping of privateers would be too expensive, and the returns would be neither sufficient, nor would their access to our ports be safe for themselves or their prizes. Sailing vessels would be sent home at great hazard, being liable to be recaptured by hostile steam-cruisers. The policy of the war of 1812 was to take the crews from all merchant ships, captured by the public armed vessels, and then to sink them, thus retaining for our cruisers their full strength, and doing the greatest possible injury to the enemy.

I am aware, sir, that the capture or destruction of private property, upon the high seas, during war has been condemned by the Christian and the moralist; and that, however the code of public law may sanction the practice, it finds little favor in the code of ethics. Efforts have been made to abolish it, and to extend to the ocean the same immunity, which, in principle, though often violated in fact, protects the property of individuals upon the land, in the midst of belligerent operations. But these efforts have signally failed, nor is there the slightest reason to believe they will be hereafter more successful. For one nation, resisting the proposed change and holding on to its existing rights, would thereby possess an immense advantage over all others, which might accept it. And it is obvious, that in the condition of the maritime Powers of the world, this is a means of annoying an enemy, which some of them will never relinquish. And in our own defense, we must take part in this mode of warfare, unless we are prepared to see our own commerce annihilated, and that of our enemy, for the time being, pass as unharmed over the ocean, as in the midst of universal peace.

Our object in a maritime war would be to send these steam-cruisers, wherever their operations would be most felt. They have power enough to take any merchant vessel, and great powers also of self-defense. Their means of operation would only be limited by the supply of coal they could carry. In that point of view, England has a great advantage over us, for she has coal depôts throughout the world; whereas we have no foreign possessions, to which we could look for a supply. But then, as I understand it, one of these ships can carry sufficient coal to last for more than twenty days, and by being fitted also as a sailing ship, she might be able to reach her cruising ground with her supply of fuel untouched, and there be in readiness, to avoid or to follow and overtake any vessels that might heave in sight. In that way, she could intercept all the enemy's trade within a given region, and be herself beyond the reach of any hostile efforts, occasionally recapturing or affording protection to our own vessels.

I believe it is now an ascertained fact, that the vessels of this line have outstripped anything else on the ocean. Hereafter it will be found, whatever we do with the Collins line, or any other line, that, in the event of a war, the first object of the Government would be to obtain ships of this description, whose speed would place them at the head of their class, and which would carry such a supply of coal as would enable them to be sent to any reasonable distance. In case of war we ought to shut up the Gulf of Mexico from any belligerent Power. We ought to prevent a single hostile ship ranging along the American coast, even as far south as the equator; and if involved in a war with England, we should close all communication between her and her American colonies, so long as we allowed her to retain possession of them. By sending such ships into various parts of the world; by alternately using wind or steam, as circumstances might require, we should have a most formidable cruising marine, which could not fail almost to annihilate the commerce of the enemy. I repeat, without reference to this proposition at all—without reference to these vessels—that this is the description of force, to which the Government will finally have recourse.

Any man, who recalls the history of the revolutionary war, either traditionally or historically, can appreciate the immense injury, which John Paul Jones did to the British commerce; and, in like manner, the efficient operations of some of our frigates in the destruction of merchant vessels in the war of 1812, are well remembered. Even the commerce, in the neighborhood of the coasts of England was seriously injured.

But apart from these considerations, there is another one very important to my mind, and which has weighed upon me with great force. The contest, between the Collins and Cunard lines, is connected very much with our national character. It has become a trial for speed across the ocean, of which the people of Christendom are the witnesses, and which they regard with an interest, rarely felt in questions of national competition. It is obvious, that the feeling of the British Government and people is deeply interested in this subject. We know, that the old claim so often urged in prose and poetry, that "Britannia rules the waves," is deeply rooted in the heart of every Englishman. He would make any sacrifice, rather than suffer a young, active, and adventurous rival to drive his country from her proud preëminence. Now, like the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. JAMES,] to whose patriotic allusions I listened with great pleasure yesterday, I have an invincible repugnance against striking the flag of my country—against acknowledging our inferiority, and withdrawing from this conflict of skill and enterprise, involving, as it does, some of those elements of national character, that constitute national strength and security, and which depend in a great degree for their value upon the opinion of the world.

